The first "meeting-house" in Shelby and Sharon Townships was the old log Methodist, located on Jay Smiley's land within the present limits of Shelby; and the first preacher was the well-known Harry O. Sheldon. Russell Bigelow was also one of the earliest preachers here. These two men went about all over this section of the State establishing churches and preaching to the pioneers whenever and wherever they could get two, three or more together.

A few of the original members of this class were A. V. Courtright, James Courtright, Mr.

Tabor, Tobias DuBoyce, Treat Orton, Charles Post, Jay Smiley, Isaac Hanley, M. Chapin, Joseph Curran and some others.

Mr. Smiley donated ground and was influential in erecting the church. This building was erected about 1820, and answered the purpose until 1842, when the present frame building was erected, on the corner of Gamble and North streets. The present Pastor is Dr. A. Nelson, and the membership about two hundred.

A Sunday school was organized about 1834, by Charles Post, who was the first Superintendent. This school has been continued ever since, and at present the attendance is about one hundred and fifty. Dr. J. M. Ballard is Superintendent.

Up to 1854, this class belonged to what was known as the "Plymouth Circuit;" after that, it became part of "Shelby Circuit," consisting of Shelby, Pleasant Grove and Mount Pleasant. In 1863, it became a station.

The Presbyterian Church of Shelby is located on South Broadway. It had its origin at Taylor's Corners in Jackson Township, and was among the first organizations in that part of the county. The first meetings of this society were held about the year 1822 or 1823, at the cabin of Mr. Smith. Five persons beside Mr. Smith attended this meeting; these were Mr. Camp, John Kerr, John M. McClintock, Mr. Cummins and Aaron Rambo. These petitioned the Presbytery for an organization, which was granted. This little society heard preaching occasionally at the cabins of its members, but was not regularly organized until 1831. At that date, they met in the Methodist log church at Shelby, and were organized by Rev. G. Wolff. About this time, or a little later, they erected a log church on John Kerr's farm, but for some reason did not occupy it, and in 1834 erected a frame church near the site of the present building. They were unable to finish this church immediately, and held their meetings and organized their Sunday school some time before the building was inclosed. In 1835, Moses Louthan, Calvin Clark (yet living), and Jesse Kerr (who died about a year ago), were added to the church.

Their ministers, after Wolff, were Rev. William Mathews, in 1834; Nathaniel Cobb, 1836; Robert Lee, 1837. From 1838 to 1841, they were only occasionally supplied. Luther Dodd came to them in 1841, dividing his time for six years between this and the church at Rome, and giving his entire time to this church for three years more. Mr. Dodd went away in 1851, after which the pulpit was supplied occasionally by John M. Ferris, Luke Dorland and William McMillen, a licentiate, until 1856, when the Rev. J. A. Marquis was regularly called, remaining two years. Following Mr. Marquis, came R. R. Moore, in 1858, remaining until 1864. In 1865, Rev. J. K. Kost took charge, and was followed in 1859 by W. W. Anderson. Mr. Anderson was followed in 1877 by the present minister, Rev. J. W. Thompson.

The Sunday school was organized in 1834. Calvin Clark was the first Superintendent. This school has been continued until the present time, and now has a membership of one hundred and twenty, while the church membership is about one hundred and ten.

The third religious society in Sharon Township, and the first outside of the town of Shelby, was the Evangelical Lutheran, at present located on Section 11, two and a half miles west of Shelby.

The earliest meetings of this society were held in the cabin of Mr. Hocksmith, about the year 1830. In May, 1832, the church was organized by Rev. F. J. Ruth, who is yet living and preaching. During the same year, the society erected a log church, which stood until 1856, when the present frame building was erected at a cost of $2,000.

Mr. Ruth continued to preach for this congregation nineteen years, and was followed by Revs. D. Sprecher, D. Summers, A. R. Brown, J. F. Shearer, D. I. Foust, and D. Summers, the present Pastor, in the order named.

The principal original members were Mr. Hocksmith, John Snyder, Jonas Rex, John Dull, Daniel Garnhart and Daniel Bloom.

The present membership is about one hundred and twenty-five.

A Sunday school was organized about 1845, which is still continued, and is healthy and active. S. F. Eckes is the present Superintendent.

The first Evangelical Lutheran Church of Shelby was established nearly thirty years after the Myer's church, and both are, at present, under the pastoral care of Rev. D. Summers.

This church is located on the east side of North Broadway, and was organized January 31, 1860, by Rev. A. R. Brown. The first members of this organization were S. S. Bloom, John Hershiser, Sr., Abraham Bushey, Cornelius Fox, John Souder. Jacob Fletcher, Samuel Hershiser, Henry Bistline, John Hershiser, Jr., Elizabeth Bistline, Sarah Hershiser, Susan B. Martin, and Christina Bombaugh.

These members were mostly withdrawn from the society at Loudon. They organized and held services in the German Reformed Church, at Shelby, until 1867, when they erected the present building at a cost of $6,000.

The Pastors have been A. R. Brown, D. Summers, J. F. Shearer, D. I. Foust, and D. Summers for a second time. The present membership of this church is 112.

The Sunday school was organized about 1863, and now has an average attendance of seventy-five or eighty members. S. S. Bloom has generally been Superintendent.

A Universalist Church was erected in Shelby in 1847. The principal members were Lemuel M. Raymond, Edwin Raymond, H. B. Gailord, Stephen Marvin, Levi Bargaheiser and A. B. Minnerly. The ministers were Rev. George R. Brown and Rev. Smead. This organization was kept up about twenty years.

The present United Brethren Church of Shelby, located on Washington street, was erected about 1857, and organized some years before by the Revs. Berry and Barlow.

The first members were Chas. Longe, Samuel Light, Geo. Longnecker, Amos Crall, David Crall and wife, Isaac Urich, Elijah Jones and others.

The ministers who followed those above mentioned were Gideon Hoover, D. W. Downey, William Mathews, Rev. Long, Rev. Bender, O. H. Ramsey, Thomas Downey and Rev. O. H. Brake, the present minister.

The membership of this church is, at present, about one hundred.

The organization of the Sunday school was coeval with that of the church, and now contains about ninety members.

The Church of Christ (Disciple) of Shelby, is located on Broadway, and was organized in September, 1858, by Elder Benjamin Lockhart. Before this, however, meetings had been held in the house of "Father Alleman."

The present church building was erected about the time the organization was effected, at a cost of about $1,600.

The first members of this society were Dr. C. McMillen and wife, and Jacob Cline and wife. These four individuals soon succeeded in getting thirty-one names, with which the organization was effected.

The ministers after Lockhart were Elder Stannard, Israel Belton, Henry Reeves, J. S. Hughes, C. W. Loose, E. A. Bosworth, John W. Lowe, J. S. Lowe, S. E. Spencer, L. R. Gault and the present minister, A. Burns. The present membership is 105.

The year following the erection of the church, a Sunday school was organized. Dr. C. McMillen was the first Superintendent. It yet continues in a prosperous and healthy condition, with a membership of about seventy-five. William Paul is present Superintendent.

The Sacred Heart of Jesus, Catholic Church, located on Section 20, about two miles west of Vernon Station, is one of the oldest in the county. It was organized as early as 1823 by Father Henni, at present Archbishop of Milwaukee, Wis.

The first members of this organization were Matthias Ulmcheider, Joseph Kurtzman, Joseph Wensinger, Heinrich Dollinger, John Ritshlin, Theobald Singer, Carl Sutter, Mr. Heitsman, Mr. Richerd, Sebastian Scheibley, Gottleib Schuble, John Brodmann, Joseph Miller, Morris Keller, Mr. Ebner, Mr. Hinsky, Frederick Christen, Nicholas Bieglin and John Bomgardner.

Forty acres of land, where the church stands, was entered, and the three first above named selected as Trustees, to whom this land was deeded.

A log church was erected in 1836; before its erection, meetings were occasionally held at the log cabins of the members.

In 1852, the present substantial and commodious brick church was erected, costing about $2,600. This building would have cost much more than this, had not much of the material and labor been gratiutously furnished. It is about 45x75 feet in size.

A beautiful cemetery is attached, and also a fine brick parsonage, costing about $2,000. The inside of the church is nicely finished; the four altars costing about $1,200, and the organ $1,200. The church was erected during the ministry of the Rev. Peter Creusch. The ministers have been too numerous to receive mention here. Father Henni was followed by Father Tchenhens, C. S. R., a celebrated missionary. The present Pastor is Rev. D. Zinsmayer, who entered upon his duties in 1877. The church is very strong numerically and financially, being located in what is known as the "German Settlement," a settlement of thrifty, well-to-do farmers, living many of them in substantial brick houses, with well-cultivated and very rich farms. The land is generally level and soil deep.

About one hundred families are at present connected with the church, seven of whom are Irish, three French and the remainder Germans.

In 1838, a school was established by Father Tchenhens, the first teacher being Jacob Alex. At present the school is conducted by three Sisters as teachers, from the Franciscan Convent of Tiffin, Ohio, with an attendance of eighty pupils.

The Sacred Heart of Mary Catholic Church, of Shelby, was organized in 1864, by Rev. H. D. Best. The preliminary meetings of this society were held in the dwelling of W. E. Klees. The church was erected by Father Kuhn, and cost about $800. Father Kuhn was succeeded by Fathers Abel, Pitts, Gerardin, Euler, Zinzmayer, Schmitz and Murphy. The present Pastor is F. J. Oberly. Fifty-six families constitute the present membership. The school was organized in 1877 by the present Pastor. There is now an average attendance of forty-three children.

The Reformed Church of Shelby is located on Church street. In 1851, Rev. Joseph B. Thompson was Pastor of the Reformed congregations in the vicinity of Shelby. He held evening services once in four weeks in the M. E. Church. January 19, 1852, the first meeting to take measures for the erection of a church was held in the Exchange Hotel, William Hawk being chosen President, and Jacob Kuhn Secretary. William Hawk and John Strock were chosen Trustees, and they, with J. H. Hershiser and John Bauchman, were constituted the Building Committee.

The organization was effected with thirty-seven members; Moses Crum and Samuel Nazor being elected Elders, and Jacob Kuhn Deacon. The day after the corner-stone was laid, Rev. J. B. Thompson resigned, and Rev. J. C. Klar supplied the congregation from June to the end of the year 1852. Rev. Adam Stump occasionally preached during the vacancy.

The church was dedicated in 1853, Rev. E. V. Gerhart and M. Stern officiating.

The following were subsequent Pastors of the church: Rev. H. Willard, from April 1, 1854, to April 1, 1857; Rev. H. Hess, until 1859; Rev. F. C. Edmonds, nine months. A vacancy of one year aud three months occurred. Rev. D. W. Kelly became Pastor April 1, 1861, continuing two years. During this time the bell was procured. A vacancy of four months followed. Rev. N. H. Loose took charge August 1, 1863, and continued fourteen years, ending August 1, 1877. During his ministry, about $1,500 were expended in improving the building. The interior was frescoed and painted, a new pulpit erected, organ procured, etc., and 151 members added to the church. Mr. Loose also served at the same time the Reformed congregations at London and Ganges, to which there were added, respectively, fifty and forty-three members. He also officiated at 174 funerals, solemnized 188 marriages, and preached 2,000 sermons.

Rev. C.W. Good followed Mr. Loose, beginning August 19, 1877, and continuing two years and one month. Mr. George Bowman has been chorister of the choir for sixteen years. At present, April, 1880, the congregation numbers about one hundred and twenty-five, and has a hopeful future. Rev. O. E. Lake is Pastor.

The Sunday school numbers about ninety members, with F. Dennis as Superintendent.

A history of the press of Shelby is, so far as success is concerned, but a repetition of that of Mansfield and other places in the county, and fully establishes the fact that establishing a newspaper is a most precarious business. Success comes only through numerous failures, and those who finally succeed must fully earn and deserve their success.

The successful editor must certainly be qualified to appreciate the following sentiment of John Marston:

"Through danger, safety comes—through trouble, rest."

So far as can be ascertained, the first paper in Shelby was issued by C. R. Brown, in 1858, and was called the Pioneer. It circulated freely and successfully at first, but soon adjourned sine die. The next paper was the Enterprise, issued in 1862 by Mr. Kenton, who was, in 1875, connected with the Marysville Democrat. This paper had a circulation of 300, and was in existence about a year. The Enterprise was purchased, in 1863, by Mr. S. S. Bloom, who in connection with Mr. Baltzley, of the Plymouth Advertiser, contemplated publishing the Express, but political differences arising, owing to the excitement engendered by the war, a dissolution of partnership occurred before the first number was issued. The Express was continued about one year.

During the next three years, Mr. Glover and Mr. Bloom issued "occasionally" a paper called the Gazette, which was continued until 1867, when the Shelby Chronicle made its appearance, published by Messrs. Young & Hill. This paper continued until October 12, 1868, when it was purchased by S. S. Bloom, and merged into the Shelby Independent News. The first year, the circulation of this paper reached nearly six hundred, and it seemed fairly on the road to permanent success. It was edited by Mr. Bloom and published by J. G. Hill for a period of six years.

In the meantime, in 1868, Mr. T. H. Barkdull began the publication of the Gazette, and continued it about four years, Shelby having the benefit of two papers during these years.

The Independent News was continued until 1876, when the Shelby Times, a Republican paper, made its appearance, under the editorial management of Mr. J. G. Hill. Mr. Bloom thereupon hauled down the "Independent" part of his paper and issued the present Democratic sheet, called the News.

The News still continues in a prosperous and healthy condition, under the editorial management of Mr. Bloom, with his son, W. P. Bloom, as publisher.

The Times came into existence December 2, 1876, and yet continues under the editorial and business management of Mr. J. G. Hill. Its subscription list has continued to increase, and it is hoped and believed that it is on the road to permanent success.

The Mutual Fire Underwriters' Association, of Shelby, was incorporated February 2, 1880, and is therefore at the threshold of its career.

The Board of Trustees are Dr. W. R. Bricker, President; Erastus S. Close, Vice President; Henry Wentz, Jr., Secretary; W. A. Shaw, Treasurer; D. I. Foust, General Agent; T. H. Wiggins, Abraham Bushey, F. A. Du Bois and D. L. Cockley.

The Executive Committee is D. I. Foust, Henry Wentz, Jr., and D. S. Close.

From the well-known ability, as business men, of the above-named gentlemen, and their financial and social standing, it is fair to presume that success will attend this enterprise. Dr. Bricker is an old resident and President of the First National Bank of Shelby. He was for some years connected with the Buckeye Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Shelby, as Director and Treasurer. Mr. Close has been, for several years, connected with the railroads passing through Shelby, as agent; and Mr. Wentz has hitherto been engaged in the insurance business.

W. A. Shaw and D. L. Cockley are successful business men and merchants, engaged respectively in the jewelry and hardware trade.

Mr. Foust is a minister of the Lutheran Church, but for a few years previous to the establishment of this Company, was in the employ of the Buckeye Mutual.

Mr. Wiggins is an old resident and successful attorney, and Dr. Du Bois a Director in the First National Bank, and a lumber dealer.

The distinctive features of this Association are:

1. A guarantee fund of $10,000 is secured, any or all of which is payable in thirty days from date of notice to pay losses.

2. The National Board rate, as adopted after the Chicago fire, is the basis of rates for this Company.

3. Premium notes, amounting to three-fifths of such rate, are taken from members. Seventy per cent of said notes is collected in five annual installments, each five years in advance. If a member has paid more than the actual cost of insurance, in any five years, the excess is placed to his credit as part of the surplus of the Association. The interest, at 6 per cent per annum, on such surplus will, in a few years, pay the losses and expenses of the Association, when the members will cease to pay any assessment.

4. Each member pays cash in advance, for himself and not for another.

5. The law under which the Association is incorporated authorizes it to insure its members against loss by fire and other casualties. Hence they include losses by fire, lightning, and accident to plate-glass windows and doors.

6. Every member knows how much and when to pay each year; hence dissatisfaction on account of unexpected, heavy assessments, is entirely avoided.

7. No policies are issued on risks, nor to persons not personally known to the management.

8. All policies are issued, and indorsements made thereon, at the home office in Shelby.

The Buckeye Mutual Fire Insurance Company was organized September 23, 1873. The Board of Directors consists of S. S. Bloom, President; H. E. McMillen, Vice President;

S. Wheeler, Treasurer; F. Stambaugh, Secretary; M. M. Barber, R. D. Stober, J. L. Bargaheiser, D. W. Stover, F. Brucker, A. J. Mack, Leroy Parsons, W. H. Gilmore. The Company issued its first policy January 17, 1874. It had considerable difficulty in obtaining the requisite number of notes, as the law required that they should have $50,000 of premium notes, and $10,000 in cash before the Insurance Department would issue a certificate. S. F. Stambaugh and R. J. Butter were authorized to canvass for notes and applications for insurance. At a meeting of the Company, December 25, 1873, they reported that sufficient means were received to comply with the laws, and the Company commenced business. It has had a steady, healthy growth until it has over $400,000 capital in notes, and a growing business. It would not be doing the Company justice to omit mentioning its management. Hon. S. S. Bloom, President, and author to a great extent of the Ohio Insurance Laws, is a man of large experience in the insurance business. He is a careful, conservative man, and is well known in insurance circles. H. E. McMillen, Vice President, is a business man, and is well qualified for the position he holds. I. S. Wheeler, Treasurer, is a farmer. He has been a member of the Company since its organization. He is a man of means, and keeps a vigilant eye over the financial affairs of the Company. S. F. Stambaugh, Secretary, is one of the original organizers of the Company. He solicited a large share of the notes. He has an extensive knowledge of insurance, and is an active business man. The other members of the Board are all well and favorably known as business men. The Company is well officered, and is a credit to the enterprise of Shelby.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK, SHELBY.

Shelby did not amount to much until the Mansfield & Sandusky Railroad came through in 1846, when it became an excellent grain and produce market. Robt. Mickey erected the first warehouse in 1846, which is yet standing and is used in part for a depot. The next warehouse was erected by Henry Leyman in 1847, opposite Mr. Mickey's warehouse. Mr. Mickey afterward, in 1850, erected a warehouse on the west side of town, on the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis Railroad, at present occupied by Messrs. H. Davis & Co., who yearly ship from this warehouse alone about one hundred thousand bushels of wheat, fifty thousand bushels of oats, and large quantities of other produce.

From three to four hundred thousand bushels of grain are marketed at Shelby yearly. The market for many years was much larger than at the present time, the building of new railroads serving to create other markets in various places around Shelby, thus drawing away the business of that place.

The town was incorporated about 1853, and its growth has been steady, the population being now about two thousand. Regarding the business, there are at present three drug stores, four dry-goods, seven grocery, two hardware, four clothing, three boot and shoe, two jewelry, two furniture and three stove and tin stores; one bank, (The First National), two newspapers, one woolen-mill, one sash and blind factory, two hotels, two carriage factories, one wholesale liquor store, nine milliners and dressmakers, one furniture factory, one foundry and one tannery, beside a host of lesser industries.

Shelby has the reputation of being a good business town, and much wealth has been accumulated there. The society is excellent, and it is generally enjoying the advantages of a high state of what is called "civilization."

The only town in the township besides Shelby is Vernon, a small station at the junction of the Mansfield, Coldwater & Lake Michigan, and the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis Railways. It can hardly be called a town, as no plat of it appears on record. It was started soon after the Mansfield, Coldwater & Lake Michigan road was completed, Mr. Sager, of Shelby, erecting a very good hotel there. In addition to this, there are two small stores, four or five dwellings and the depot building. A post office is established and is kept in the hotel.

CHAPTER LVIII.

SPRINGFIELD TOWNSHIP.

LOCATION—ORGANIZATION—NAME—SPRINGS—LIMITS—PHYSICAL FEATURES—AGRICULTURE AND TIMBER—SETTLERS AND SETTLEMENTS—THE FINNEY AND ROE FAMILIES AND THE UNDERGROUND RAILWAY—CHURCHES AND SABBATH SCHOOLS—SCHOOLS—SAW-MILLS AND GRIST-MILLS—VILLAGES—POPULATION.

THIS was originally part of Madison Township, and now lies directly west of and joins it. It was organized in 1816, at which time it was twelve miles long from east to west, and six miles wide, and included what is now Sandusky Township, and part of Polk and Jackson Townships in Crawford County. In February, 1818, it was cut in two in the center, leaving it in its present shape—six miles square. Its name was suggested by Mrs. Coffinberry, one of earliest settlers, on account of the numerous the springs within its limits, some of which are very beautiful and valuable. Perhaps the most noted of these is the Palmer Spring, one and a half miles north of the village of Ontario. It produces a large volume of pure water, and supplies the little city of Crestline, being conveyed to that place in pipes. The spring is about one hundred and twenty-three feet higher than Crestline. The Sandusky River has its source here. One mile east of the Palmer Spring is the Preston Spring, near which one of the first grist-mills in the township was built. It was known as the Purdy Mill, and was built by the father of Mr. James Purdy, of Mansfield. This spring furnished the water for this mill many years. Further east is the Condon Spring, which, in connection with another at Spring Mills, has for more than sixty years furnished water for a mill at that place.

Originally the entire township was covered with a dense growth of timber, and the hardy pioneers who first came to it followed up the Indian traces, located their farms, and literally hewed their homes out of the woods. No prominent landmarks exist in the township

It is generally level, or rolling, with a ridge of sufficient elevation, running northeast and southwest, a little north of the center of the township, to divide its waters; those south of the ridge finding their way through the Clear Fork, Mohican, Walhonding and Muskingum to the Ohio, and those north, through the Sandusky River to Sandusky Bay.

Agriculturally considered, the land is generally excellent, the timber presenting the usual variety in Ohio—beach, hard (sugar) and soft maple, many varieties of ash and oak, and nearly all varieties of hard wood. Such timber speaks well for the quality of the land. The black walnut is already rapidly disappearing here, as well as all over the State, under the pressure of continual demand. The land produces the usual variety of cereals produced in the Northern States.

The people of the township are made up largely of New Englanders and Pennsylvanians—perhaps the latter predominate. There are very few foreigners, and no colored person seems to have obtained a permanent residence here until after the war of the rebellion. The first settlers struck the northeast corner of the township, for the reason, most likely, that in those days Indian trails were the only highways, and settlements grew up along these first. One of these trails passed Mill Springs on its way from the headwaters of Rocky Fork to those of the Sandusky River. It was much used by the Wyandots, Delawares and Shawanees in their trading and scalping expeditions to the Ohio. This trace was followed by Col. William Crawford and his command in 1782, and, so far as is certainly known, these were the first white men that set foot on the soil of Springfield Township, though there is little doubt that white hunters, or prisoners among the Indians, or white renagades, like Simon Girty, had passed through before this period.

Among those who followed up this Indian trace, and became the first settlers of the township, was George Coffinberry, who, in 1814, settled on the southeast quarter of Section 1. He was a soldier of the Revolutionary war, and came from Virginia. He had five sons—George, Jacob, Wright L., Salathiel and Abram B., all of them men of more than ordinary ability. The next year, 1815, Richard Condon, from New Jersey, built his cabin on the northeast quarter of Section 2. He came to Mansfield in 1814, from Warren County, Ohio. He had six children—Richard, Elizabeth, John, Nancy, Margaret and Elisha. About this time, the Welches also settled on Section 1. Joseph Welch came from Lancaster County, Penn. He had a family of five children—John, James, Jane, A. C. and Joseph. He built the third cabin in the township on the northwest quarter of Section 1. He also, in 1818, built the first brick house in the township. Jesse Edgerton (Section 17) and Uriah Matson came in this year. In 1816, came Alexander Welch, John and Nathan Casebar (Section 12), Thomas Williams, Edward Barren and Charles Stewart. The township was now organized, and an election held the 15th of April, 1816, at which about twenty-five votes were polled. Richard Condon, the first Justice of the Peace, was chosen at this election. For several years, township officers were not in demand; there was little for them to do. From this time forward settlers came in rapidly, settling first in the neighborhood of the springs, and along the valley of the Clear Fork. On the 10th of April, 1820, Robert Finney came from Harrison County, Ohio, and built his cabin on the southeast quarter of Section 11. He was originally from Fayette County, Penn., and his descendants are now numerous and influential. He had six children—John, James, William, Martha, Mary and Jane, of which only John and James are now living; the former on the old homestead, and well known to all the country as "Uncle John Finney." He is now in his eightieth year, and, having been always active and strong mentally and physically, his mind is well stored with interesting reminiscences. A man of strong convictions, he has always been, as was his father before him, a strong advocate of the Christian religion, and especially energetic in carrying out his ideas of Christian duty. He early espoused the cause of temperance, and made speeches upon that subject at the public meetings then held in the log houses and barns of his neighbors, and was one of that small band of heroes who early proclaimed their hatred of slavery, and were branded "Abolitionists," a term by no means popular in those days; but, having lived to see his ideas triumphant, considers himself well paid for his sufferings and persecutions. He considered it a religious duty to assist in the escape of fugitive slaves, and was for many years, with his neighbor Joseph Roe, prominently connected with the "underground railway," his house being always open, and his services freely given to this cause. During the twenty-five years he was engaged in this, hundreds, perhaps thousands, of fugitive slaves were assisted on their way to Canada. They came from different points of the compass to his house, which seemed to be a crossing-place and 'rendezvous. Many came from the Gass settlement and McCluer's in Troy Township, others from the Quaker settlement in Morrow County, and many from Iberia, and were often carried in wagons from one point to another; at first, generally at night, but later, in daylight, unless danger of recapture was apprehended. When the noted Randolph, of Virginia, freed his slaves, which he did from conscientious motives, he established them in Mercer County, Ohio, and this soon became a famous resort for the fugitives, and from this settlement large numbers were brought to Mr. Finney. It is asserted by Mr. Finney, that thousands of slaves escaped the bloodhounds by rubbing the juice of an onion on the soles of their shoes; that the hounds would never follow a slave after getting a scent of the onion; and he relates an instance in which the negro himself watched the hounds upon his track, and saw them turn back when they came to the spot where he had applied the onion juice.

Mr. Finney usually kept the fugitives at his house over night, and often for several days, then taking them in his wagon to Savannah, Ashland County, or to Oberlin, Ohio. He usually left his home early in the morning, passing Mansfield (which did not look with favor upon his business) before daylight, arriving in Oberlin by sundown. Oberlin was then, as it has ever remained, a great friend to the colored man. Having reached this point, they were generally safe, as public opinion was such that the odious fugitive-slave law could not be enforced. He relates the case of a Mr. Greene who stopped at his house several days. Greene's father, who lived in Tennessee, made a will releasing all his slaves. After his death, the two boys could not agree in carrying out the terms of the will, one wishing to detain the blacks as slaves. The other, however, determined they should be free, and, although compelled to hide for his life, he remained in the neighborhood until he saw his father's former slaves all safely off to Canada, and then came to Ohio with his wife and six children in destitute circumstances. In Ohio, Greene and his family were hunted and driven from place to place, living sometimes in deserted cabins and swamps, and finally sought safety in Canada, assisted on their way by Mr. Finney. As an instance of the honesty of the colored people, and the hardships they endured for freedom, Mr. Finney relates that two men with their wives once came to him in midwinter, nearly frozen. They had taken their master's horses, crossed the Ohio on the ice, after which they returned the horses to their owner and came on afoot. They were kept several days, clothed, fed and taken on their way to a colder region. Mr. Robbins and Mr. Joseph Roe, his neighbors, living five and seven miles away, were Mr. Finney's right-hand men in this business. Mr. Roe is still living a short distance west of Ontario, an aged and respected citizen. The penalty for assisting in the escape of fugitive slaves was very severe, and these men were, therefore, continually on the "ragged edge," and several times came very near having serious trouble. At one time, Benjamin Gass brought to Mr. Finney five colored men with five or six women and children. He lodged the females in the upper part of his dwelling-house and the men in his granary in the barn. Six men, armed with revolvers, who had been in pursuit, came up with them here. Learning they were secreted about the premises, they made a demand of Mr. Finney for their restitution. He was clearly caught, but determined not to give up the fugitives without a struggle. He demanded their warrant. They could not produce this, but sent three of their number to Mansfield to procure the warrant, while the other three remained to watch. Mr. Finney had dispatched word to some of his particular friends in Mansfield, and his object now was to gain time; meanwhile he armed the darkies in the barn with pitchforks. Representing to the three men that the fugitives were locked in his granary (which was true) and would not probably escape, he invited them into his house, gave them breakfast, and consumed as much time as possible in various ways. While this was passing, the fugitives found an opening in the barn and escaped to the woods. When the warrant arrived, no darkies were to be found—the presence of those up-stairs in his house not being suspected by the pursuers. It is hardly possible, however, that these slaves could have been recaptured without a fight, as Mr. Finney's friends began to arrive from Mansfield, all armed and expecting trouble. Among those who first came to his assistance were Dr. Miller, Thomas Thaker and Mathias Day. The pursuers, finding the fugitives had escaped, began a search of the neighborhood, and, as soon as he could with safety, Mr. Finney transferred the females to the house of his friend Joseph Roe. Mr. Roe, being notorious in this cause, and well knowing his house would soon be searched, contrived to get them away to his neighbor, James Wood, which he had no sooner done, than the pursuers appeared to search his premises. Mr. Roe pleaded ignorance, and, fearing they would go on to Mr. Wood's house, contrived to throw them off the scent by offering to assist in the recapture of the fugitives, and leading them off in the opposite direction, back to Mr. Finney's, and then to Mansfield; meanwhile, Mrs. Roe sent word to Mr. Wood, and the fugitives were conveyed to the Smith settlement, in what is now Washington Township, and from there to other points, and escaped. The men were gathered up here and there in the woods, and all got safely away.

Mr. Joseph Roe, before mentioned, gives an excellent historical and political review of matters in Springfield, from which the following notes are taken:

When he came to the township in 1835, it was largely Democratic and controlled by prejudice and superstition. It was supposed that a negro had no soul, and no rights a white man was bound to respect. An Abolitionist was considered much beneath a horse-thief and counterfeiter. The Democratic idea was, that Abolitionists carried negroes to Canada, and received a compensation from the Canadian Government, and that, should a war arise between the two countries, these negroes would improve the occasion to murder the people of Ohio and other States; and further, if slavery should be abolished, our country would be completely ruined and society much demoralized, if not destroyed. Hence the intense feeling against the Abolitionists. The matter was carried into the pulpit, and many churches divided. Mr. Roe resolved not to support any minister who sanctioned slavery. He was thoroughly Anti-slavery, and entered heartily into the underground railway business. In the spring of 1841, three colored persons came to his house on their way to freedom—a woman and her two daughters. His brother-in-law, William Woods, and himself took them to Mansfield, and left them with Mr. Emminger a few hours, while they attempted to get other friends of the cause to help them along. In this they were not successful, and not willing to leave them where their enemies might discover them, they resorted to the device of buying a load of flour of a Mr. Basore, who lived near Lucas, stipulating that the flour was to be delivered in Oberlin. They paid Mr. Basore $3 to carry their "chattels" to Oberlin on his load. He would not take them from the Wiler House, being Democratic in his views, but received them at the covered bridge outside of town, and delivered both flour and negroes at Oberlin in due time. The flour was sold at a net profit of $5, and after paying Mr. Basore, the Abolitionists pocketed $2 clear profit.

E. J. Poller

As the Antislavery movement continued, men began to read, think and hear lectures on the subject. In 1842, Leicester King was candidate for Governor of Ohio. He received four votes in Springfield Township. These were cast by Andrew Wood, Sr., Mathew Mitchell, Henry Crabbs and Joseph Roe.

In 1844, James G. Burney received several votes in the township for President. In the spring of 1845, a minister came into the neighborhood and preached in a schoolhouse, taking for his text the remark made by Joseph when in prison to the butler and baker, requesting them to remember him when they should be restored: "For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews, and here also have I done nothing that they should put me into a dungeon." As was the custom of those days, church members were anxious to put down heresies, and this sermon being considered of that character, certain persons were inclined to mob the preacher and his audience. They made a great noise about the church, and used their knives freely on the saddles and bridles of the worshipers. A young man by the name of Basset—a tinner in Ontario—went to Mansfield and procured a warrant of Squire Wise, for the arrest of one of the deacons of the Presbyterian Church of Pleasant Hill; also a member and his son, belonging to the same church. Before the case was called, Mr. Roe visited, and stated the facts to, Squire Wise, and soon after, the deacon also called on the Squire and asked if he was an Abolitionist.

"No," says the Squire.

"Well, then," said the deacon, "all I am sorry for is, that we did not egg them well."

The trial lasted two days; I. J. Allen being counsel for the State, and Hon. Columbus Delano, of Mount Vernon, for the defense, It was hotly contested. Delano said he hoped God would permit such preachers to preach on until all the North became convinced of the great evil, and put it out of existence—that it was a low, mean act of his clients, but not a violation of the statute, and they could not be fined.

A minister was present at the trial, and such was the feeling, that whenever any slur was cast on the Abolitionists, he cheered with the majority. After two days' hard fighting, the three were fined. Mr. Allen charged nothing for his services in this case, but a purse was raised for him. Mr. Delano's course elevated him very much in the estimation of Mr. Roe and others holding the same views.

Many slaves availed themselves of the very low fare on the underground railway. They were furnished transportation free, and clothing also, if needed. Uncle John Finney is a large man; and when he was thoroughly aroused and left the Whig party, it lost a host in himself. His account of the enemy's attempt to storm his battery in July, 1848, and of the assistance he received from friends of the cause, is truly graphic.

In January, 1858, a colored man came from New Orleans. The weather was extremely cold, especially for one coming from a warm climate. Mr. Roe urged him to remain until warmer weather. He did so, and told his story. He was raised in Kentucky; had been sold eleven times—several times because he could read. It was thought, for this reason, he would not make a safe and reliable servant. Mr. Roe became interested in him, and determined to have him make a public statement of his connection with slavery. The meeting was held at the United Presbyterian Church in Ontario, and before a good audience, the darkey was introduced and told his story. It made a good impression, a purse was raised for him, and he went on toward the north star rejoicing. Thus rapidly were the people being educated to the great work that began in earnest in 1861.

In 1860, three colored boys came to Iberia for the purpose of getting an education. They had been there a year or two, and had progressed very well, but the bloodhounds were upon their track. As the train neared Iberia one evening, the bell-rope was pulled, the train slackened, and a party of slave-hunters with a Deputy Marshal at their head, sprang off. The boys were at different places, and one or two of them were captured. This caused intense excitement, as a great many more people than formerly were opposed to the execution of the fugitive-slave law. They collected rapidly, caught the Marshal and his slave-hunters, and after a consultation, allowed the darkies to "cut their hair and use beech sprouts on them," to such an extent as was deemed necessary. The citizens engaged in this affair expected trouble, and sent two of their number after Mr. Roe to go to Cleveland for an eminent lawyer to engage in their defense. He secured the services of Mr. Parsons, a man who had the year before been elected to Congress. When told that he would be expected to manage the case for a small compensation, he promised to do all in his power, and, if necessary, would employ an attorney in Northern Ohio to assist him. He not only agreed to do the work gratuitously, but said if they were fined, he would help pay it. Rev. George Gordon, President of the college at Iberia, was the man the slave-power determined to humble. He was indicted, tried, convicted and sentenced to pay a fine of $300, and to suffer imprisonment for six months. His name will go down as one of the martyrs in the cause of human freedom. Mr. Roe mentions as a coincidence, that while Mr. Gordon was in jail, a man of the same name was hung in Boston, Mass. for being engaged in the slave trade.

As to Mr. Roe's politics, he says he threw up his hat, when a boy of fourteen, at the election of Andrew Jackson as President. In 1836, when Van Buren and Harrison ran, he was entitled to vote, but, owing to the former casting a vote to prevent the circulation of antislavery documents, he could not support him, and believing Harrison to be incompetent, he did not vote at all. In 1840, being better posted, as he thought, he concluded to support Tyler, but afterward discovered that he was a slaveholder. Slavery, in his mind, became of more importance than all other matters of legislation; 200,000 slaveholders in the South ruled the nation, and he, for one, would not participate in such wickedness. In 1852, he voted for John P. Hale, the candidate of the "Liberty party;" in 1856, for John C. Fremont; in 1860 and 1864, for A. Lincoln; in 1868 and 1872, for U S. Grant; after which he became dissatisfied with the Republican party, for the reasons, among others, that Jeff Davis and the other arch traitors were not hung, that treason might be "made odious," and as a warning to other evil-doers; and because the right of suffrage was extended to rebel colonels and other higher officers, by which they have gained control of Congress, and are making laws for the nation they tried to destroy. He, therefore, withdrew from the party, and joined the new Reform party headed by James P. Walker for President in 1876. It is opposed to all secret societies.

Mr. Roe is a farmer and stock-raiser; has been a member of the United Presbyterian Church ever since its organization in 1858, and before that was a member of the Associate Presbyterian. It will be seen from the foregoing, that he is a man of strong convictions of duty, and is presented as a type of the men who formed the substratum of the population of Springfield Township.

The first Sabbath school was started in 1820, by Robert Finney. It was held for several years in the private dwelling of John Chambers. Some of its first members were John and Susan Chambers, John and James Finney, Mathew Curran and James Larimer. Of these, John and James Finney and Susan Chambers are still living. They were Presbyterians and Associates. Their first meetings and public gatherings of all kinds were held at private houses, but, in 1822, a log church was built, one mile north of Ontario, at what is called the Five Corners, by the Presbyterians. Jesse Edgerton was the active spirit in founding this church. He came from Harrison County, Ohio, and had five sons—John, Jessie, Levi, Thomas and Isaac. The first man who preached in this church was Rev. Mr. Lee, father of an honored citizen of Mansfield, John A. Lee. About the same time, the Methodists built a log church, three-fourths of a mile south of Millsborough, which was called Taylor's Meeting House.

In 1837, the Bigelow Chapel was built, two and a quarter miles north of Ontario, on the farm of Mr. David Jaques. This gentleman is now living, at the age of seventy-eight. He furnished the land and money for the Bigelow Chapel. It was a frame building, and was established mainly through the influence of Bigelow, who was a missionary among the Wyandot Indians. It was Methodist. Across the road from the Bigelow Chapel was built, in 1844, a Baptist church. It was established principally through the influence of John Palmer and Elyfiet Flint. These early churches were used for many years, but they have long since rotted down, or been removed, their congregations dead and scattered, and many of the members now worship at the church in Ontario. Some of the early preachers in these churches were: Revs. Ruark, John Quigley, and Adam Poe, a nephew of the famous Adam Poe of history; not to mention Johnny Appleseed, who visited the township frequently, scattering his seeds and peculiar religious opinions at the same time. Outside of the village of Ontario, but two churches remain, within the limits of the township, having at present an organized existence. Of these, the first was organized in 1848. The church was erected the year before, on the southwest quarter of Section 1. It is used by the Lutheran and German Reformed people.

The Lutherans were first organized by Rev. J. W. Huffman, D. D.; the German Reformed by Rev. J. W. Thompson. The principal original members were John Wise, Joseph Welch, Samuel Starchman, Louis Hill and Joseph Kennel of the Lutheran; and John Leppo and family, James Leppo and George Shafer and family, of the German Reformed. Before the erection of the church, meetings were held at the private residences of Christopher Flory and John Leppo, Sr. The cost of building the church was small, as the members furnished most of the material and did a large portion of the work. The membership is light at present, not exceeding twelve or fifteen. The Pastors who have occupied the pulpit at different times were Revs. S. Fenner, — Brown, Isaac Culler, — Sincebaugh, — Hersheiser, Francis Ruth, — Westervelt and J. H. Williard. The Sunday school is in a flourishing condition at present. It was organized when the church was erected, and called the "Spring Mills Union Sunday School." A. Barr was the first Superintendent; Joseph Cairns is now Superintendent, with a membership of sixty-five.

The second church mentioned is called the Springfield Methodist Church, erected in 1858, at a cost of about $500, on the southeast quarter of Section 26. The organization dates back to 1851–52, and was established through the influence of Rev. A. R. Brown, in a schoolhouse, a few rods south of the present location of the church. The principal original members were John Scott and wife, Thomas Scott, Sr., William Plancy and family, Robert Patterson and wife, and J. Bartholomew and wife. Following the Rev. A. R. Brown were N. T. Brown, George Hiskey, William Simpson and others. A union Sunday school is now in working condition, with a membership of about sixty.

The first school in the township was taught by John C. Gilkison, on the southeast quarter of Section 1. His pupils were Jacob Coffinberry, George Coffinberry, A. B. Coffinberry, John Bartley, Susan Bartley, Nancy Condon, Joseph Curren, Elizabeth Curren, John, James and Jane C. Welch. For several years, there were no schoolhouses, schools being kept in private houses and barns. It is believed, the first schoolhouse was on the Rallston farm, two miles north of Ontario. It was a primitive affair, made of logs, with a puncheon floor, a fireplace of ample proportions, and logs hewn flat on one side for seats. Hundreds of such buildings dotted the country in those days.

The first saw-mill was built in 1817, by Condon & Welch, on the northwest quarter of Section 1, and the first grist-mill by Ex-Governor Mordecai Bartley, on the same section, where Spring Mill now is. This mill has been burned down, and destroyed or removed, and rebuilt several times. About the same time, the Purdy mill, before mentioned, was built, and also one on the head-waters of Clear Fork. Near this last was also built a saw-mill and several stills for the manufacture of spirits. These mills gave to the place the name of Millsborough. It is picturesquely situated among the hills, and started with fair promise for a future town. It has the honor attached to age, being the first town in the township. It was laid out on part of the northeast and northwest quarters of Section 28, by John S. Marshall, Deputy County Surveyor, October 29, 1831. The mills were built in 1818, by John Garretson, who came from New York. Before the establishment of these mills, settlers went as far as Mount Vernon, in Knox County, to do their milling. Uncle Jesse Edgerton, as he was called, occasionally hitched four horses to his large Pennsylvania wagon—"schooner"—and taking his own and his neighbors' grists, hauled them to Mount Vernon. In addition to his mills, Garretson also built a house in which he kept hotel for some time. This stand was afterward kept by John Martin. The place at one time—about 1830–35—boasted of two dry-goods stores, kept by John Evans and John Williams. The early settlers in this part of the township were James Woods, John Garretson, Samuel and David Mitchell, Joseph and Lewis Day, John Milligan and Samuel Estel. Estel was a veteran of the war of 1812, and established a tanyard in 1818 on Section 23. John Stewart did most of the surveying in this township. The railroads assisted in the death of Millsborough. It has been dead many years; even the sound of the mills has ceased.

The next attempt to build a town in the township was in the woods, on the trail leading from Mansfield to Bucyrus, about eight miles from the former. It was called Newcastle; however, Ontario and Newcastle were both laid out in the same month, December, 1834, and on the same section, 21. Newcastle was laid out by Frederick Cassell and Adam Webber, the name of the former suggesting the name of the place. It was surveyed by John Stewart. Adam Webber kept tavern there for some time, but the place never grew up to their expectations. No business is done, and the place has fallen into decay. Its present population is about forty. Even the Atlantic & Great Western Railroad, which ran its first passenger cars through it in 1864, failed to bring it renewed life. A church was built there in 1838, by the Lutherans. Its founders and first members were Frederick Cassell, John Stough, John Sheffler, Adam Webber and William T. Daniels. This church, partaking of the general character of the place, has fallen into decay. It has not been occupied for many years. The whole village seems to have gone to sleep, its people living quietly, dreaming away their lives, apparently unconscious of the great moving world around them.

Hiram Cook came to this township in 1820, from a place called Ontario, in Orange County, N. Y. He bought a farm a few miles south of the present village of Ontario, where he lived several years, and having purchased the land on which Ontario now stands, laid out that place in a dense woods. It was on the trail leading from Mansfield to Bucyrus, by way of Galion. This trail was then only wide enough for the passage of horses and footmen. It is on the southwest quarter of Section 21. He had it surveyed by John Stewart, and induced George Hoover to build the first cabin beside the trail. Hoover started a blacksmith-shop, and also kept a few groceries for sale in his cabin. When the timber was cleared away a little, Cook built two frame houses—one south of the Atlantic & Great Western Railroad, to be used as a dwelling, the other on the north side of the railroad, on the trail, for a hotel. He kept this hotel some years himself, until it burned down, when it was rebuilt and occupied by other parties at different times, for the same purpose. As the town grew, the church organizations in the country began to abandon their decayed churches and build others in town. The first erected was the Methodist Episcopal, in 1839. This organization originated at the Bigelow Chapel, and afterward worshiped at the Taylor meeting-house, both before mentioned in this chapter. The present minister is James H. Johnson, and the membership about eighty. The Sunday school is in a flourishing condition, with a membership of about one hundred. Christopher Au is Superintendent.

In 1850, the United Presbyterians erected a frame church, which has cost, with repairs, about $3,000. This organization was originally the Associate, of which the Finneys, and other old residents in the township, were the founders. They were too few in numbers to build a church, and for thirty years worshiped in private houses, barns, and wherever they could find shelter. The original members of the first organization at Ontario were Samuel G. Craig, wife and daughter, John Finney, Dr. Samuel G. Miller and wife, James C. Robinson and wife, and Mrs. Joseph Roe. The first minister was J. L. McLain, who occupied the pulpit three or four years, after which came Revs. D. W. Collins, J. M. Hutchison and William Wishart. The present membership is 118.

The Sunday school was organized in 1858, with David Barrett as Superintendent. It has been maintained in a healthy condition, and now has a membership of about one hundred and thirty. Erskine Chambers is Superintendent.

In the following year, 1851, the Presbyterians erected a church at Ontario. This organization originated at the Five Corners, before mentioned, and afterward removed to Pleasant Hill, removing thence to Ontario. It was organized there about 1853; some of the early members being Hugh McConnell, William Kerr, John S. Marshall, David Hackedorn, William Wiley and J. W. Horner. The first minister here was Rev. Luke Dorland, who served about two years. Following him were Revs. Marquis, — Atkinson and J. M. Blaney. At present, they have no Sunday school and no regular Pastor. The church has been somewhat neglected of late, the members having died and moved away. The present membership is only about twenty-five.

Ontario has grown to be a place of about two hundred inhabitants. John Evans and A.

Atwood kept the first store, in 1838. The two stores there at present carry a general stock, and are kept by Christopher Au and Eli Ringer. In 1859, a large brick building was erected for high-school purposes, and was kept up until 1874, receiving students from a distance. It is now occupied by the Masonic Fraternity. A new brick schoolhouse on the east side of the town is now used to educate the future sovereigns. There is an undertaking establishment kept by Cline & Wolf, and a blacksmith and wagon shop. The township does not lack railroad facilities, all those (four) centering in Mansfield passing through it. Like all other parts of Ohio, it has increased greatly in wealth and population. In 1850, the population was 2,100. From some cause it decreased, and, in 1860, was only 1,756, but between 1860 and 1870, it recovered again, showing at the latter date a population of 2,046, of which eighty-four were foreign and twenty-six colored. The census of 1880 will very soon determine whether any progress has been made in this direction during the last decade.

Good substantial houses, brick and frame, and well-cleared farms have taken the place of the cabins and the woods; and the early settlers, like their cabins, are rapidly sinking into mother earth, and will soon have passed away, as their former acquaintances, the wolf, bear, deer and Indian, have long since done.

CHAPTER LIX.

TROY TOWNSHIP.

ORIGINAL BOUNDARIES — EARLY ENTRIES — EARLY SETTLERS — INDIANS — POLITICAL RECORDS — LEXINGTON — CHURCHES — SCHOOLS — LEXINGTON SEMINARY — CEMETERY — DIVISION OF THE TOWNSHIP — VILLAGE OF STEAM CORNERS.

PREVIOUS to 1814, this territory was included in Jefferson Township, but, September 5, was erected into a separate township, and named Troy. Its area at this time was six miles wide (north and south) by eighteen in length (east and west). It then also included all of Washington and North Bloomfield Townships. In March, 1816, it was divided, Washington being erected, leaving the dimensions six by twelve miles in extent. March 4, 1823, the township was further reduced by striking off North Bloomfield on the west, leaving Troy six miles square. In 1848, Morrow was created, taking thirteen sections from the southwestern portion of this township, leaving it irregular in form, the northwest corner being known by the citizens as "Pan Handle."

The first whites who remained permanently came to Troy in the winter of 1811–12. William Gass entered the first piece of land in Troy in the fall of 1811, being the west half of Section 12. He also entered the southwest quarter of Section 11 in the name of Francis Mitchell. The Government lands then sold at $2 per acre. Mr. Watson went to the land office at Canton and paid $160, which secured the land for a term of five years. During the following winter, Amariah Watson, of Knox County, entered the north half of Section 24, with several other pieces in that vicinity.

In the spring of 1812, Amariah Watson and Elisha Robins brought their families to their new home and occupied their rude log cabins. Soon thereafter, William Gass, with his two eldest sons and a hired man, arrived on the scene, driving a three-horse team and bringing tools, provisions and other necessaries. In a week, a humble cabin was erected and ready for the family. He then returned to Knox County for his family, and located them in their new home on the 23d of April. During the succeeding summer, Calvin Culver, Wesley Spratt and Francis Mitchell each erected a small cabin, and brought his family. These were probably the only families in Troy previous to the spring of 1814. A brief sketch of these hardy pioneers may be of interest to the survivors. Amariah Watson was formerly of Luzerne County, Penn.; he had owned and sold a farm near Fredericktown, Knox County, before coming to Troy. The family consisted of two sons and one daughter at the time of their arrival, and subsequently one daughter and three sons were added to the circle. Mr. Watson was a millwright by vocation, energetic, industrious and possessed of considerable ingenuity. He was the original proprietor of the town site of Lexington; was active and prominent in building up the material interests of the village. Having lost his wife, he removed some years afterward to Illinois, where he died. His brothers, Noah and Samuel, were partners with him in his building enterprises, and also removed to the West.

Elisha Robins was from the same county, and had married Mr. Watson's sister. Mr. Robins and wife were already elderly people; both had been previously married and reared families, and the fruit of this union was two sons and two daughters. The children removed to Illinois, and the parents, after surviving some years, died in Troy.

William Gass was a native of Franklin County, Penn.; he emigrated from Western Virginia to the Northwest Territory in 1800; settled in Fairfield County, and thence removed to Knox County in 1806, and finally to Richland County in 1812. His family consisted of his wife and four sons—Benjamin, James R., John and William—and a bound girl named Charlotte Hedrick. In the spring of 1817, Mrs. Gass died, and the following year Mr. Gass was married to Mrs. Rebecca Merideth.

In the spring of 1814, quite a tide of immigration set in to the shores of Troy. Among these was a sturdy, pious man, who became prominent in the community, Noah Cook, afterward known as "Uncle Noah," on account of his numerous progeny. He settled in the woods, on the farm now occupied by his only surviving son. Mr. Cook was a member of the Presbyterian Church, and was zealous for the success of morality and godliness in the new settlement. He organized the first prayer-meeting in the township, and secured its success under peculiar circumstances: At the appointed hour and place, "Uncle Noah" was present, but no other soul of the settlement. He hesitated only a few minutes, then worshiped alone, by singing, prayer, and reading a sermon. Some curious passers-by peeped in the window, and went their way. The following appointment, a few days after, witnessed a large company gathered for worship. From this humble beginning, the religious interests of the settlement advanced, until it has become noted for morality and good order.

Mr. Cook reared a family of thirteen children, of whom Jabez Cook, of Mansfield, was the third son, and Thomas Cook, of Lexington, is now the only surviving member.

Calvin Culver was from Luzerne County, Penn. His family consisted of three children—Sterling, Caleb and Julia. They removed to Washington Township in early times.

Wesley Spratt was from Knox County. His wife was a sister of Mr. Watson. They were young people, and the location proving sickly for them, after a sojourn of four years, they returned to Knox County.

William and Daniel Cook came from Washington County, Penn., in 1815. William settled one mile west of Lexington, on the farm afterward owned by Mr. Chambers. Daniel settled two and a half miles west of Mansfield. They put in their crops, and in the fall returned to bring their families. A large wagon, drawn by five horses, brought their families and that of Jabez Cook. William removed to Lexington in 1817, where he was much annoyed by wild beasts, and in consequence devoted his leisure to hunting. In 1831, Mr. Cook removed to a farm three miles southwest of Mansfield, and in 1855 moved to the city.

Samuel McCluer, who died but a few months since, and was one of the earliest pioneers, was born in Rockbridge County, Va. He removed to Ohio in 1808, and located near Circleville; afterward moved to Bellville, and finally to Troy about 1815. Here he lived until his death. He was a valuable member of society, an earnest and active Christian, a member of the Congregational Church, and an active worker in the Sunday school.

Ezekial Boggs, another prominent settler of Troy, was born in Ohio County, Va., in 1795, near Wheeling. He participated in a battle with the Indians in Belmont County, known as the battle of "Captina." About one mile below the mouth of Captina Creek was a small fort, where a party of three or four scouts were sent to reconnoiter. They were, however, surprised, attacked, and two of them slain, one taken prisoner, and the other escaped. This roused the revenge of those in the fort, and in consequence a party of twelve or fourteen soldiers were sent up the creek, marching in single file, and as they neared the enemy, the savages fired at them from the hilltops. They took warning, treed, and began skirmishing; three or four whites, and eight or ten of the enemy, were slain. Mr. Boggs joined the army in 1812, under Gen. Hull and Col. Lewis Cass. The army marched from St. Clairsville to Cincinnati, and were joined by a body of soldiers bound for Detroit. He went with the army to the vicinity of Detroit, and was in the disgraceful surrender which occurred there. After the parole, Mr. Boggs returned home, and soon thereafter was married to Miss Jane Neal. They moved to Troy about 1833, and located in Lexington, where they remained until their deaths occurred. In their early pioneer life, Mrs. Boggs supplied the family with the necessaries of life by digging gentian root.

Among the later settlers are various names more or less familiar. Alexander Abernathy, an aged and retired physician, was born in 1810, in Pennsylvania; graduated in 1831; practiced in Perry County, Penn.; removed to Ohio in 1836, and finally located at Lexington in 1837. He married Miss Catherine Fulton in 1843, who bore him four children. Mr. A. was a member of the Legislature in 1845 and also a subsequent term; he was a stanch Democrat.

A. J. and Henry Winterstien came to Ohio in 1821, and located near Lexington. They are prominent members of the Presbyterian Church and active, successful farmers. Thomas Cook, youngest son of "Uncle Noah," has been identified with the interests of Troy from his early childhood, first in the capacity of pupil in the public school, afterward, for many years, as the village schoolmaster, then as a farmer, and in various other pursuits. James McCluer, Moses Sowers, Mr. Beverstock and others, are among the later but active and enterprising settlers in this vicinity.

When the first settlers came to Troy, the Indians had undisputed possession of this region. A number of lodges or camps were located along the Clear Fork. They were of the Wyandot and Mohawk tribes. Six or eight camps were in sight of Noah Cook's residence; while on the southeast quarter of Section 13 were about the same number. On the banks of Isaac's Run there was an Indian village. They were quite peaceable and friendly; they seldom or never offered the settlers any violence; they did not cultivate the soil here—it was merely a hunting-ground headquarters; they at times vacated here and repaired to Greentown, their permanent home. This encampment was on their trail from Sandusky, southward. Their chief articles of commerce were venison, cranberries and wooden wares. They were finally removed from here about 1826.

The early political history of Troy is derived from its public documents, several of which are preserved. The first meeting of the citizens of Troy Township, after its organization, took place on the 4th day of October, 1814, when the following officers were elected: Amariah Watson, Clerk; C. Culver, Constable; John Young, Jacob Mitchell and Solomon Culver, Township Trustees. The second election was held April 3, 1815, when the following officers were elected: Daniel Mitchell, Clerk; Solomon Culver, John Young and Jacob Mitchell, Trustees; John Vandorn, Constable; Ichabod Clark and Andrew Perkins, Fence Viewers; Samuel Watson, Appraiser; Jacob Cook, Lister; Amariah Watson and Samuel McCluer, Overseers of the Poor; Aaron Young, William Gass, Alexander Mann and Amariah Watson, Supervisors. The following bond, on account of its brevity, is worthy of notice:

We, or either of us, do hold ourselves bound, in the sum of $400, for the good and faithful performance of the office of Township Trustees of Troy. Given under our hand at New Lexington, this third day of April, 1815.

WESLEY SPRATT, Treasurer.
AMARIAH WATSON, Security.

Attest, DANIEL MCMICHAEL.

From this humble beginning, Troy has secured a very respectable place in the body politic. Her citizens numbered in 1820 a mere handful, but a tide of emigration soon set in from the older communities, and in 1850, the population of Troy was 1,543. Of this number, 777 were males, and 766 were females. Then ensued a period of comparative rest, for at the next census in 1860, the population was 1,547 persons. From that period to the present, there has been considerable decrease, amounting to several hundred. A marked feature of the population was, that only two colored persons and but forty foreign born were enrolled in the the township.

Lexington is beautifully situated upon the northern slope of a gentle hill. The Clear Fork flows along its eastern border. It is a neat and ordinary village of some five or six hundred souls. The town site is located on the northwest quarter of Section 24, owned originally by Amariah Watson. The town was laid out in 1812, and named in honor of the Revolutionary Lexington of Massachusetts. Mr. Watson built the first house, a log cabin, a few rods above the site of the mill on the creek bank, in the spring of 1812. He soon vacated this humble dwelling for a more commodious frame house, which he built in the immediate vicinity of the Inglehart property, near the railroad. This house was provided with port-holes for defense in case of Indian invasion. The second house was a frame tavern, built by Mr. Jacob Cook, and is still standing and occupied as a hotel. A tannery was soon after erected by Mr. Coleman, near the spot now occupied by the depot. A shoe store was kept in connection with the tannery, where boots and shoes were made to order and exchanged for hides. The building has long since been demolished; but the vats may still be seen. About this time, a very important event took place; the log schoolhouse was built. It was built of unhewed logs, and covered with boards or shakes; the seats were of the ancient make—a slab with pegs for legs constituted the seats—counters ranged along the walls were the desks whereon to write and cipher. In those days, the schoolmaster was king; when his ire was stirred, he grasped his ten-foot rod and planting himself in the arena, swayed his trusty weapon with such skill that the boys began to climb—science hill.

The grist and saw mills were erected in 1812, and contributed largely to the prosperity of the new settlement. The grist-mill run one buhr for wheat, and one for corn, and began running to its full capacity in 1814. A dry-goods store was established the same year by William Darnell and J. F. Adams, which gave a new impetus to trade and settlement. In a few years, Lexington had attracted a population of several hundred souls. While the newly born city was growing in material wealth, her religious welfare was also sought after. Rev. Henry George, a Baptist minister of Scotch blood, was the first itinerant who traveled in this region. He was a stonemason by trade, and possessed of considerable talent. There was no stated preaching until 1816, when Rev. George Van Eman, a Presbyterian minister, labored at Lexington a portion of his time. In 1817–18, Rev. George and Rev. Summerville occupied the field, alternating every two weeks. Services were held at dwellings, the schoolhouse, in barns and other such structures for several years. From these humble beginnings, the religious and educational interests of Lexington have developed to a degree that would do honor to a city of greater magnitude. Five different denominations have houses of worship, and maintain services at stated times. It is difficult to ascertain which denomination was the first to occupy the field. The Old School Presbyterians held services in the schoolhouse and elsewhere very early, yet the United Presbyterians, Methodists and Universalists held services in an early day. The first meeting-house, however, was doubtless built by the Presbyterians as early as 1831 or 1832. It was a small frame, and built upon the lot now used and owned by the United Brethren. The lot was donated by Amariah Watson; the neighbors united to clear it off, and "Uncle Noah" Cook contracted with a Mr. Bell, who furnished the materials, built the house, and received as compensation from Mr. Cook seventy acres of new land. The Presbyterian society was organized by a committee of Presbytery March 29, 1832. The first Pastor was Rev. Adam Torrence, and some of the original members were Noah Cook, Ezekiel Boggs, William Kelso, John Herron, Mary Mitchell, William McMillan and Hester Cleland. By order of the session, the house was sold in May, 1836, to the United Brethren for $422. It was replaced by a brick building the following year. Revs. Brown, Rowland, Robinson, Shearer and Smith succeeded as supplies or Pastors till 1844, when Rev. Evan Evans became the Pastor. During this year, slavery and other causes rent the church, and Rev. Evans with a number of his flock seceded and organized as a new-school congregation. In 1848, Rev. Luke Doreland became Pastor. The brick house having proven defective, it was replaced by a substantial frame which is still in use and in good repair. Some of the later Pastors were Revs. James Anderson, Mr. Hillman, J. O. Proctor, T. B. Atkins, Mr. McMillan and A. Duncan. The present incumbent, Rev. G. G. Copland, was installed in the summer of 1879. This denomination is at present much the strongest, both numerically and financially, of any in the village.

The Congregational Church was formerly a New School Presbyterian, organized as such in 1844, by Rev. J. B. Walker. The records during the interval from the secession to the final organization are very meager. The Pastors of the church during this period were Rev. E. Evans, Rev. Shedd, Rev. Bushnell and others. Some of the original members were Mr. Chapman, L. Barnum, William Kelso, John Rusk, William Lyon and Mr. Brown. In March, 1862, Rev. Kelso organized this body into a Congregational society. Thomas Brown, Carter Cook, Samuel Douglas, Samuel McCluer, William Kelso, John Barnum and Phineas Barnum were some of the original members. The first meeting-house was built in 1846, at a cost of $835, not including painting. In 1873, the church was repaired and remodeled at a cost of $1,600, making a very comfortable and attractive edifice. The first Pastor under the new organization was Rev. Samuel Kelso. From 1864 to 1872, Rev. George Fry, who died quite recently, served the society as Pastor. He was succeeded by Rev. J. M. Bowers and Rev. J. G. Aikman. In January, 1876, Rev. L. R. Royce became Pastor, and still serves in that capacity. The membership of the church in 1879, was eighty-two, and the contributions for the current year $812.22.

The United Presbyterians were among the earliest in this field. Soon after the organization of the township, they held services in dwellings, schoolhouses and other rude buildings. The first sermon was preached in the shed of a still-house, by Rev. John Graham, at Troy, a mile and a half northwest of Lexington. The first house of worship—a log cabin—was erected at Troy, which served them for many years. In 1851, preparations were made to build a frame house; the lumber was secured and stored in the log house, but, before the foundation was complete, the log house caught fire and was consumed with all its contents. The frame was subsequently erected and long used as a sanctuary; part of it is still in use as a barn. This house was frequently used by other denominations also for divine services. The church vacated this point and bought the seminary building in Lexington, in 1867, of Rev. Gailey, who continued his school in the lower story, while the upper story was finished and furnished for a church, and is still used as a place of worship. Rev. James Johnson was the first Pastor and served until 1844, when Rev. Samuel Finley succeeded to the office. Some of the members at the time of organization were Isaac Miller, John McClung, James Larimer, N. Cook, John Gass and William Nelson. In 1849, Rev. R. Gailey began his ministrations as Pastor, and continued in this relation until his death, which occurred in April, 1875. Until lately, Rev. T. P. Dysart has been Pastor of the church. The present membership is forty-five, and the annual contributions about $500.

The United Brethren organized quite early, and bought the house sold by the Presbyterians in 1836. It was torn down, enlarged, remodeled and furnished, affording a neat and pleasant house. Their early ministers were Rev. Jacob George, John Dorcas, George Hiskey, John Fry and others. The later ones were Samuel Long, Rev. Creighton, Rev. Kesey and Rev. Barlow. The numerical strength of this church varied much at different periods, now advancing, then receding. It has exceeded one hundred in the past, but is now quite small.

The Universalists were also pioneers in this vicinity. They built a church in an early day on the lot now occupied by Mrs. Spaulding's residence, and it has been only a few years since it disappeared. This denomination was at one time quite strong, and threatened the extinction of the other denominations, but a long, protracted debate or controversy took place between one of their prominent ministers, Rev. Biddlecome, and a Methodist minister, Rev. Powers, lasting more than a week, which seemed to check their progress, and they soon began to abate their ardor, so that in a few years no services were maintained. At the present, they have neither house, society, nor name.

The Methodist Episcopal Church is not the least, although last, to receive attention. It was organized in the early history of the village and well sustained for many years. It was at one period the leading church, having a large and influential membership, and some very able and talented ministers; some of whom have risen to the highest position in the church. The names of Russell Bigelow, Adam Poe, Harris, Leonard Gurley, John Powers and many younger men are familiar among Methodists and many others in this section. The house of worship is a plain, modest frame, about thirty-six feet wide by fifty feet long. It has been built some forty years and, excepting some repairs, remains in its original form. This society has been gradually declining in numbers and influence for several years, so that a mere handful compose its membership at present. An appointment was long maintained at Fairview, a point about two and a half miles northwest of the village, where there was a neat frame chapel. This house was destroyed by fire a few years since, and the place abandoned. A neat, frame schoolhouse now stands upon the same foundation.

After the log schoolhouse, previously mentioned, had served its purpose, it was replaced with a substantial brick building, about the year 1831. It was an octagon in form, and one story high. Several of the teachers who served in the old log house have since become eminent in the nation. Mr. Delano, who has since been a member of the national cabinet, taught in this primitive seat of learning; also Mr. Kennon, who has since been honored with the offices of Judge and Congressman from Belmont County, Ohio. The first term of school in the new brick house was taught by Thomas Cook, who continued in the same position for a number of terms. Mr. Colby, subsequently a prominent citizen of Mansfield and of bank notoriety, served also in the brick house, as teacher one or more terms. In 1851, the brick house was abandoned, as it was no longer considered safe, and a commodious frame, two stories high, and containing four schoolrooms, was erected. These were all filled with pupils at different periods, but for a few years past there has been a great decrease in the enrollment. The schools now contain about one hundred and twenty-five pupils in the several departments. Mr. Wilson, Mr. Andrews, and others, have held the position of Principal in later years. Mr. Bechtel is the present teacher. The school has never attained any higher grade than a village or district school.

The Lexington Seminary was a continuation of Monroe Seminary, situated in Monroe Township, and was opened in 1851 by Rev. R. Gailey. The recitations were, for a time, conducted in a church, yet the school drew to itself a large share of patronage. Mansfield and Wooster sent many pupils to the school. In 1860, the school was removed to Lexington. A substantial brick building was erected by a stock company, and devoted to school purposes. Some trouble arose in 1866, between the seminary and the public. The Trustees offered the house for sale at 50 per cent of the nominal value. Rev. Gailey purchased the house and furnished it, also making some improvements. Rev. Gailey sold the house the following year to the United Presbyterian Church. They paid off all claims against the property and furnished it comfortably. They occupy the upper room for a house of worship, and gave the lower room to Miss Gailey, the last Principal, for a schoolroom. The school was a private enterprise in no sense denominational. The enrollment in the fall of 1865, was 80: in 1866, 109; in 1867, 126. The school declined in members for several years, so that only 94 were enrolled in 1878. Rev. Gailey, after spending twenty-four years in the interests of the school, died in 1875, and was succeeded by his daughter, Miss Jane Gailey, who continued the school until the close of the spring term of 1880, when she was married to the Rev. Mr. Dysart. This event closed the Lexington Seminary.

There are several other features of the town which add much to its success and completeness. A fine new bridge spans the river at the approach on the east of the village. It is of iron, built by a Toledo company, costing in the aggregate about $2,000. The town has one first-class dry-goods store, two groceries, one hotel, butcher-shop, hardware store, one drug store, etc.

The cemetery lies northeast of the village, on the opposite side of the river on a gentle elevation. It is laid out properly, fenced with a good board fence, well cared for and affords a desirable resting-place. It originally embraced one acre; now nine. As early as 1816, Mrs. Searles and Mrs. Gass were laid to rest here, and previously a few red men had chosen a bed in this quiet retreat. Many white marble slabs and monuments now dot it over, ever reminding the survivors that "man born of woman is of few days." The cemetery is bounded on two sides by a swamp, on the third by the river, but on the south is approached by a gently sloping ridge from the town. The surrounding country is undulating, and affords a beautiful scene as viewed from this "city of the dead."

Steam Corners is a small village, situated in the southwestern part of Troy Township, and consists of sixteen dwellings, besides a saw-mill, store, schoolhouse and several shops. It has never been incorporated, but is merely a four corners—the crossing of two section lines. It occupies the adjacent corners of Sections 17, 18, 19 and 20, which are owned respectively by Mrs. Bender, Frederick Stull, Lewis Miller and David Stull. The most prominent feature of the Corners is the steam saw-mill, located a few rods south of the cross-roads. It was erected about 1849, by Hall, Allen & Devise, who ran a sash saw for a number of years, but the mill is now supplied with a modern circular saw. There is connected with it a planing-mill on a small scale. This mill is the chief enterprise in the community, and is now owned by Frederick Stull. The town has derived its name from it.

A dry-goods store was established at the Corners in 1864, by William Baughman, who operated it about a year. From 1866 to 1874, the store was owned by C. W. Rowalt, who carried on an extensive trade. It subsequently passed into various hands. The firm of Staater & Halderman carried on the business for a term of four years. Shanck & Maxwell are the present owners and are doing a good business.

The post office is an important element of the Corners. It was established about fifteen years ago, and, until 1878, the post route was from Galion to the Corners, but since has been extended to Fredericktown. They have a tri-weekly mail from Galion to Fredericktown and vice versa. Two blacksmith-shops are located here, the one owned by Jack Corwin, the other by William Treisch.

The village also affords a shoe-shop and several wood or carpenter shops.

The schoolhouse is a neat, substantial brick edifice on the west side of the town. There is but one room, hence but one department, although there are some sixty-five or seventy pupils in attendance.

Most of the early settlers, who cleared up the land and rescued it from the wilderness, are gone to their long rest. Among the survivors is William Moore, living about a mile south of the Corners. He is about seventy-five years old, and, perhaps, the oldest surviving pioneer of that vicinity. He is a native of Ireland, emigrated in his youth, and, after sojourning a time in Pennsylvania, he removed to Ohio, and located at Steam Corners previous to 1830. His family consisted of five sons and two daughters.

George Norwood, an early pioneer, aged eighty, lives near by. His family consisted of three sons and three daughters. He was a native of Germany, whence he removed in early life.

David Thompson who has been dead some six years, was a prominent man of those early times. He was a native American, and reared a family of eight children, four sons and four daughters.

The country about the Corners is less hilly than other portions of the township, yet it is gently undulating. The soil is rich and productive, and the farm buildings generally indicate a goodly degree of prosperity.

CHAPTER LX.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZATION—SPRINGS AND WATER COURSES—FIRST ELECTION—EARLY SETTLERS AND THEIR ADVENTURES—FIRST ROAD—FIRST PUBLIC HOUSE—EARLY SCHOOLHOUSES AND TEACHERS—THE "BLACK CANE COMPANY"—THE FIRST TEMPERANCE ORGANIZATION—FIRST BRICK HOUSE—THE CHURCHES—MILLS—WASHINGTON VILLAGE.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP was organized March 4, 1816, out of the east third of Troy, being the eleventh township organized in the county. It lies directly south of and joins Madison, and contains thirty-six square miles. The surface is somewhat broken, but the ascents and descents are gentle, and the soil generally very fertile. It abounds in many valuable springs of pure cold water, and is otherwise well watered by small running brooks, supplied from these springs. The Clear Fork of the Mohican crosses the southwest corner, along the valley through which the Baltimore & Ohio Railway passes. Possum Run rises in the center of the township, and passes out of it at the southeast corner. A tributary of the Rocky Fork passes out near the northeast corner of the township, running north into Rocky Fork. Near this stream, and near the residence of Mr. Bentley, is one of the finest springs in the township, a large volume of the clearest water bursting from the bank and falling into a reservoir in Mr. Bentley's yard. This spring, with the assistance of the brook, some years ago furnished the power for Bentley's mill. The township was named after George Washington. Its organization was consummated at the house of Solomon Lee, at the center of the township. Immediately after the organization had been completed, the election was held at the same place. Forty votes were cast. The election resulted in the choice of John Stewart for Justice of the Peace, and Solomon Culver, Sr., William Riddle and Daniel Dimmick for Trustees.

The names of the early settlers, as far as can be ascertained, are as follows: William Stewart, Section 10; John Stewart, Section 10, April, 1815; Solomon Culver, Section 3; James Sirpliss, Section 11, April, 1815; William Ayers, Section 4; Solomon Lee, Section 10, settled here before 1816; Mrs. Cunningham, Section 1; Daniel McMitchell, Section 30; William Riddle, Section 30; Daniel Cook, Section 6; Gavin and Joseph Mitchell, Section 6; —— Vandorn, Section 31; Andrew Thompson, Section 27; John Lindsley, Section 28; John J. and Wesley Barnes, Section 14; Isaac Slater, Section 36; Alexander McClain, Section 25; Robert Crosky, Section 3; Thomas Shanks, Section 2; Noah Watson, Section 7, February, 1812; Jedediah Smith, Section 1, 1816; Calvin Culver settled here before 1816; Andrew Pollock, Section 13, 1817; Martin Ridenour, 1818; Jacob Ridenour, Section 25, 1818; Thos. Smith, April, 1816, and Melzer Coulter, 1826.

Among the pioneers living in January, 1880, were John S. Smith, Solomon Culver, Mrs. Margaret Stewart (at the age of ninety-three), William Stewart, Thomas Pollock, Mrs. Eleanor Smith and Stephen Shaw.

These were the persons who penetrated the heavily wooded hills and valleys of Washington, and laid the foundation of its present prosperity and wealth.

It will be seen that one of the earliest, if not the earliest, family in the township, was the Watson family. Noah Watson was one of the claimants at the ax presentation in Mansfield, February 10, 1858. The following letter was written by Mr. Watson on that occasion:

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP, RICHLAND CO., January 8, 1858.

To Jabez Cook, Umpire: I, Noah Watson, certify that I helped to build the first two cabins in the vicinity of Lexington, and also did a job of clearing on Amariah Watson's first field, commencing about the 8th of March, 1812. I also entered the southeast quarter of Section 7, Range 18, Township 20, in which I now live, and commenced clearing in 1813.

Mr. Watson was elected one of the first Constables in the township. At the close of his term, he concluded to make an estimate of the amount of business transacted and the pecuniary emoluments arising therefrom. After a careful examination of the docket and other records, he found he had served two summons and two warrants, for which he had received no fees. He was not, therefore, under the necessity of employing an accountant to get his business in shape for final settlement.

He volunteered, in 1813, in Capt. Ichabod Nye's company, and started for the relief of Harrison at Fort Meigs. The siege was raised before their arrival, and their services were not needed.

John Stewart also became prominent in the township and county, being the first Justice of the Peace, and continuing in that office six consecutive years. In 1820 or 1821, he was appointed Auditor of the county by the Legislature, and, in the fall of 1822, was elected to the same office by the people, serving eight consecutive years. In the fall of 1816, after the organization of the township, he was appointed County Surveyor by the Court, and held this office about eighteen years. In all, he served as a Justice of the Peace twenty-two years.

Although Jedediah Smith did not settle permanently in the township until 1816, he was here as early as 1812, when he came to enter land. He was a great hunter, and many deer, wild turkeys, bears and other animals fell before his unerring rifle. He remembers, on his first visit, talking to Chief Armstrong of the Greentown Indians. The chief told him he believed Wayne was a spirit, "For," said he, "I had three shots at him with a dead rest, and could not bring him down; I could have killed a buck at twice the distance." He directed Mr. Smith to the Zimmer cabin for a night's lodging. This family then consisted of father, mother and a son and daughter, and the romance of this visit is that Mr. Smith fell in love with the beautiful daughter, Kate, and they were engaged to be married, when the Zimmer family was murdered—all except the son, Phillip, who happened to be absent. Mr. Smith had entered the land he afterward occupied, and returned to his home in Washington County, Penn., where he was when the tragedy occurred. He remained single until the family came out here four or five years later.

Calvin Culver was also a great hunter, as was nearly all the early pioneers. On one occasion, he was pursued by wolves in the evening, and ran for the two cabins, then standing on the site of Lexington. He was unable to reach them, however, and was compelled to climb a tree, where he remained until morning.

Some weeks after Mr. James Sirpliss settled in the township, he, in company with one of his brothers, happening in the woods one day, half a mile from their cabin, came suddenly upon a black bear. Jowler, the dog, immediately gave chase, and the bear, being pushed, ascended a large poplar-tree. Being unarmed, the brother returned to the cabin for his rifle, while James and Jowler remained to watch. Before the brother returned with the gun, bruin, as if comprehending the situation, commenced descending. James and the dog immediately prepared to give him battle. Upon alighting, the bear elevated himself upon his hind legs, and received the dog with a blow that injured, for the time being, his fighting qualities. Mr. Sirpliss, having an ax, was about making an attack, when the bear bounded away and escaped, just before the arrival of the brother with his gun.

The first road through the township was the "State road" from Mount Vernon to Bellville and Mansfield. This was for a long time but a mere trail, and the only stopping-place on this trail, between Mansfield and Mount Vernon, was at McCluer's, near the site of Bellville. This was one of the first settlements in the county; and this trail was established some time before the township was settled. Soon after the first settlement, a second road was cut from the vicinity of Lexington toward Bellville.

The first public-house in the township was opened at a very early day, by Thomas Laughlin, on the State road, about six miles south of Mansfield, near the center of the township, and near the present Oberlin place. The majority of the earliest settlers entered the township by this road, and settled in the vicinity of and to the east of it, near where Washington Village was afterward laid out.

The township does not appear to have contained any permanent Indian encampment, but was not excelled as a hunting-ground.

The first schoolhouse was built on the State road, near the "tavern," about the center of the township, on Section 16. It was one of those well-remembered, primitive schoolhouses, described in another chapter, which have disappeared from this country with the Indian and deer, and will yet be occasionally found with the Indian and deer, in the Far West. The first teacher was John Barnett, who came from Guernsey County. He taught six months, and received as wages $2 per scholar, for a term of three months. Sally Braden also taught school about 1818. She probably taught the summer school in the same building, following Barnett. One evening, while the school was engaged in prayer, just before the time for dismissal, a large yellow rattlesnake raised its head through a crack in the puncheon floor, and took a survey of the scene. No one dared to move, however, until the prayer ended, when the boys dispatched his snakeship.

As early as 1820–21, this township was troubled with a company of horse-thieves, counterfeiters, etc. Their operations extended into the adjoining townships and counties. Several of the gang were well-known residents of this township, others lived in the direction of Perrysville, and others near Fredericktown and Mount Vernon. Two men, named Gardner and Black, and two sons of the former were suspected. This band was quite numerous, and, for a time, had things their own way. It seemed impossible to convict them, although generally known. After losing several horses and much other property, and the insecurity continually increasing, the settlers finally organized, for the purpose of self-defense, what they called the "Black Cane Company." The company was composed of the most prominent settlers of the different neighborhoods molested by these ruffians. Each member carried a black cane, made out of the wood of a crab-apple or black-haw; the bark being peeled off, and the canes burned black, after which they were oiled to give them a glossy appearance. A few of the names composing this company were Capt. Thomas Coulter, William Irwin, A. Rice, Isaac Martin, Thomas Martin, David Coulter, C. H. Rice, David Ayres, Charles Tannehill, Lewis Oliver, T. W. Coulter, John Capel, Solomon Gladden, Melzer Tannehill, Jonathan Coulter, James Irwin, Nathan Stearns, Harry Hill, David Hill, Reuben Hill, John Latty, Levi Taylor, John Coulter, and some others, whose names are not recollected.

By vigorous exertions, this company succeeded in clearing the neighborhood of the villains; and peace and security reigned until about 1833, when their services were again called into requisition, as the country was once more alarmed by the cry of horse-thieves and counterfeiters. This gang was also composed of some of the actual settlers (whose descendants are living there to-day), and others at a distance. They began by stealing a horse of Mr. Taylor, on Honey Creek; next a Rockingham colt, a valuable animal, from Alexander Rice; and then robbing Mr. Hart's store on Honey Creek, three miles south of Hayesville. This alarmed the country, and the Black Cane Company were soon marshaling their forces. It seemed to be the only way of ridding the country of this band, who could easily elude, or successfully resist, the officers of the law.

J. Fraise Richard

In retaliation for their pursuit, the villains burned the barns of Jonathan Coulter and William Irvin, and, about the same time, cut loose from its moorings a large flat-boat, loaded with three or four hundred barrels of pork, flour and whisky, and allowed it to drift at random down the Black Fork. The boat and cargo were, however, saved. During the year the gang operated, almost every house in the neighborhood was plundered of something. By the vigilance and exertions of the Black Cane Company and the citizens generally, this gang of rascals was finally driven from the township and country. Some of them were sent to the Penitentiary.

The first temperance society in Richland County, and indeed in this part of the country, was organized in this township. It was entirely indigenous to the soil of this township, none of its members having had any previous knowledge of such an organization. They early witnessed the baleful effects of strong drink, and saw with a good deal of concern that its use among the settlers was increasing. A great number of distilleries were erected all over the township. Nearly all the corn marketed was at these distilleries, and whisky was consequently plenty and cheap. It was found by the barrel in almost every cabin, and was in daily use. A few of these early settlers saw that this must be stopped; that if they would escape the blight of intemperance, some organized effort must be made. A meeting was therefore called on the 29th of March, 1827, at the house of Samuel Smith, in Monroe Township, near the east line of Washington, and organized by calling Thomas Smith to the chair and appointing Samuel Richey Secretary. Thomas and Samuel Smith and Alexander McBride were appointed a committee to present a basis of action, and soon presented the following:

Whereas, The common use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage is injurious to the health of the consumer, and ruinous to the morals of the community,

Resolved, That we form ourselves into a society to be known by the name of the Washington and Monroe Temperance Society, and that we adopt the following pledge for our guide:

We, whose names are hereunto attached, do pledge ourselves to dispense with the common use of ardent spirits in our families, and at our gatherings and frolics and, as far as our influence extends, use all laudable means to discourage the use of it in others.

To this were attached the names of the Smiths, including Samuel, Vernon T., Thomas, Sr., and Jedediah; Henry Mosar, Lambright Larnee, Joseph Coe, Robert McDermott, Levi Tarr, David Newlon, John and Lancelot Conwell, Joseph Reed, Alexander McBride, Henry Hull, George, David and John McFarland, Andrew Schosser, James, Richard and Robert Sirpliss, Elias Hyser, and Wesley, Benjamin, John J. and John K. Barnes.

At first, the matter of getting along without whisky at log-rollings, raisings, etc., was earnestly discussed, but it was finally determined to adopt the above pledge for one year, at the end of which time they were to meet and report progress.

To counteract this, an anti-temperance society was organized, but it did not last long; they, however, outnumbered the other in names, ten to one. This temperance society had an organized existence for more than thirty years, meeting once a year, on the first night in every

January, and selecting officers and executive committees. There was nothing secret about it, as in the more fashionable temperance societies of later days, but it was kept up for this extraordinary length of time by citizens who were public-spirited enough to work for the public good. It kept up its organization as long as there was anything to fight. There is not at present, and has not been for many years, a place in the township where whisky can be purchased. Their book finally contained the names of about six hundred members. It is impossible to calculate the amount of good accomplished by this first temperance society, not only during the period of its organized existence, but since that time, as the seed then sown is still exerting a powerful influence for good. No names are more worthy to live in history than those of its projectors.

The first brick house was erected by Jedediah Smith. Amos Day was the builder, and while working with brick and mortar, he was working upon the affections of the eldest daughter, Martha Smith, whom he married.

The religious sentiment of the township is well developed, seven churches belonging to different denominations having been erected within its limits, six of which now have an organized and healthy existence. The first church orgaization, so far as known, was that of the Methodist Episcopal, about 1823 or 1824; their first meeting for organization being at the house of John Conwell. The first members of this society were Wesley Barnes and wife, David Newlon and wife, John Conwell and wife, James Sirpliss, Henry Hull, Henry Moser and wife, Richard Sirpliss, Jacob Reed, George, Robert and John McFarland and their wives, Benjamin and John J. Barnes and their wives, and Mary Pollock. Their first meetings for several years were held at the cabins of Conwell and the Messrs. Barnes, but, in 1828, they erected a log church on the site of Washington Village, about 25x35 feet. Their first ministers were Abner Gough, Shadrick Rewark, Zepheniah Bell, Joseph Reed, John Powers and Andrew Poe. The present Pastor is Rev. Mr. Lewis. The log church was used until about 1850, when the present frame was erected, costing about $1,000. The present membership is about twenty-five or thirty. They generally have a Sunday school during the summer.

During the slavery agitation, between 1830 and 1840, this church was divided, political matters being carried into the pulpit. The occasion of the division was the sermon by Elder Powers, in which he took strong ground in favor of slavery. A strong abolition sentiment had taken root among the members, and had been for some time growing and increasing. Gradually a feeling grew up among the church members which culminated in the before-mentioned sermon and a division of the church. Fourteen members withdrew and organized what that called the Wesleyan Methodist Church. The McFarlands were influential in this movement. They were strong Antislavery men, as were also the Smiths and many others of the pioneers in that vicinity. They were prominently connected with the "underground railway," and assisted hundreds of slaves in making their way to Canada. This settlement is the one referred to in the history of Springfield Township, as a safe place to which to bring fugitive slaves.

The members who thus withdrew and organized this church were George, Robert and David McFarland, Henry and Joseph Moser, William Scott, John Boden and the wives of all these gentlemen. For several years, they worshiped in the old Methodist Episcopal Church, and then erected a church of their own. It was a frame, and cost about $1,000. This church was kept up about twenty years, during which they had regular preaching, and during which time, also, the cause of their troubles had disappeared in the smoke, din and blood of a great conflict. Their church building was finally sold, and is now used in Washington Village for a town hall. The church has not had an organized existence for many years.

About 1869, the former members of the Wesleyan Methodist, or those that were left, and some other citizens organized a Congregational Church, the original members of which were John, George and Andrew McFarland, Ezra Davis, James Ritchie, William Boden, Charles Stone, Sr., and the wives of these gentlemen; Joseph Flemming, Ezra and Thomas Smith and Mary and Ida Boden. Their meetings, for a year, were held in the other churches; they then erected a frame church, yet standing, at a cost of $4,000, of which amount $2,200 were paid by George and Andrew McFarland. This church was dedicated by Rev. Dr. Fairfield, of the Congregational Church of Mansfield. Their ministers have been the Revs. Fry, Moon, Webster, Achman and Royce. The present membership is about thirty-five. The organization of the Sunday school was coeval with that of the church, the first Superintendent being R. B. Smith. Joseph Flemming is present Superintendent, with a membership of about one hundred. It is a union school, and is in a very prosperous condition, being continued during the entire year.

Two churches have been organized, and two church buildings erected in the southeast part of the township. In an early day, the few Albrights and United Brethren in that part of the township formed two separate organizations, and had preaching occasionally in the log schoolhouse. This continued for some years, when the two organizations united their financial resources and erected a brick church, which cost about $1,300, and which was to be used equally by the two organizations, and was, also, to be free to other denominations, as the citizens generally assisted in the erection of the building. Thus matters continued until about 1860, when they separated—the Albrights building another church further south, on Section 36. The old church is now occupied by the United Brethren, and is called Mount Tabler after a very enthusiastic minister of that name, who held a never-to-be-forgotten revival in the church, during which many members were added. A few of the first members in this organization were Ephraim Bull, William Norris, John Smith and Jacob Magglott. The church is not at present in a flourishing condition, having only about fifteen members. There is no Sunday school connected with it.

The Albrights, in 1860, erected a frame church, which cost about $1,800. The first members of this organization were John Coates, Henry, Samuel and George Secrist, and the Clever family. John Stull was founder and first Pastor. Their first organization was at Stull's house, now known as the Taylor place. They call their church Ebenezer; it is a live, active organization. A large union Sunday-school is connected with it.

A mile or more west of Washington Village stands the Church of Christ, better known as Campbellite or Disciple. It was organized about the year 1835, by John Reed. William Moody and William B. Hammett were the first Elders. The members of the first organization were Jacob Deems, William B. Hammett, Richard Braden and John Boyd, and their wives; Betsey Braden and Samuel Braden.

Their first meetings were held at the houses of William B. Hammett and Richard Braden, and their organization effected in the old log schoolhouse of the district. Their first church was a small frame, and was built by the joint labor of the people of the neighborhood. The present building was erected in 1874, and cost about $2,600. Mr. Hammett, yet living, but aged and infirm, has been very active in this organization and in the erection of the churches. He contributed liberally of his means, working as a farmer, and preaching, almost without compensation, sixteen or eighteen years.

John Reed was the first Pastor, and a few of those who followed him were William Gass, Wm. Moody and Wm. B. Hammett. The present ministers are Wm. Neal and M. F. Gallagher.

The Sunday-school was organized about 1864; is large and active for a country school, having about fifty pupils. James Black is present Superintendent.

In addition to the foregoing churches is the German Reformed, located on Section 22, near the center of the township, on the State road. This building was erected about 1847, of logs, and is still standing, though it has been weatherboarded over. This organization was effected about two years before the church was erected. They worshiped during these two years in an old log church, built in an early day, by the Dunkards, about a half mile south of the present German Reformed Church. This Dunkard Church has long since disappeared, and the organization disbanded.

Quite a settlement of Germans are found in this section of the township; the larger part of the original stock being from Western Pennsylvania, which, however, had the effect to bring in a number of European Germans, who are excellent and thrifty farmers. Those who organized this church were Martin Toby, Peter Strader, Peter Shire, Conrad Englehart, John Strader, Christian Mull, J. W. Strader and the Kohisers.

The early preachers were Revs. Handchy, Tressel, Weiscotten, Lenshaw and Krause; the latter continuing the ministerial relation about nine years. The present Pastor is Henry Walcer, and the present membership about sixty. A Sunday-school is maintained during the summer, with a membership of about fifty. At present, preparations are being made to erect a new church.

The numerous and beautiful springs and running streams furnished water-power for a number of mills. In an early day, when the township was heavily wooded, and lumber was taken from the vicinity for building purposes, quite a number of saw-mills were erected in different parts of the township. Latterly, stationary saw-mills do not pay; but little lumber is now made from timber grown within the limits of the township, and this little is made by portable saw-mills, using steam power. The old water saw-mills have therefore disappeared forever. The houses of to-day are generally built of brick, or else of pine lumber, purchased at the yard or lumber depots.

The first saw-mill was erected about 1816, and it is a question whether it was the one erected by Solomon Culver, three miles south of Mansfield on the State road, or the one erected by Robert Crosky. John Stewart also erected one of the early saw-mills, which was destroyed by fire. No stationary saw-mill, at present, exists in the township. The first grist-mill was erected in 1818, and it is also a question whether Mr. Phelps built the first one in the southwest corner, Section 31, or George Marshall on the southeast corner; both are claimants for this honor. The second grist-mill was built in 1823, by John Stewart, and the third by Robert Bentley. The latter was erected very near the township line, and is mentioned in the history of Madison Township. All the early mills, except the Stewart mill, have disappeared, and only their ruins mark the spot where the early pioneers waited hours, and sometimes even days, for their grinding. The Stewart mill has been rebuilt and improved, but yet occupies the spot where it was first erected, and is doing good service, being now known as the "Wickert mill." It is in the northern part of the township. About twelve or fifteen years since, a small grist-mill was erected by John Strasbach (who yet owns it), on Section 31, in the southwest corner of the township, on Clear Run. A saw-mill had been in operation here for many years before.

There is no town of consequence in this township. Washington Village was laid out where the road crosses, by John Conwell, Wesley Barnes and James Sirpliss. These gentlemen own the land divided by these roads. A round log schoolhouse was the first building erected in the place. It stood on the site of the present Congregational Church.

David Coulter was the first teacher in this house, and his pupils were the Smiths, the Barneses, Conwells, Sirplisses, Armstrongs and Pollocks. Mark Finnicum started the first store, soon after the town was laid out; and Emilus Day the first blacksmith-shop. Rev. James F. McGraw, who, in addition to his ministerial labors, obtained something of a literary reputation, kept store here after Finnicum. There is no business at present in the village, except what is transacted at the blacksmith-shop of Elias Hiser. Thirteen families yet reside in the town. It is hardly likely, judging from present appearances, that it will ever equal its namesake of the District of Columbia, either in proportions or importance.

CHAPTER LXI.

WELLER TOWNSHIP.

ORGANIZATION—TOPOGRAPHY—IMPROVEMENTS—EARLY SETTLERS—INCIDENTS AND REMINISCENCES OF PIONEER LIFE—THE ENGLISHMAN'S "CASTLE"—SOLDIERS IN THE LATE WAR—THE COUNTY INFIRMARY—SCHOOLS AND CHURCHES—THE RAILROAD—OLIVESBURG—SUPERSTITIONS.

WELLER TOWNSHIP was organized in the year 1846, from the original townships of Milton and Franklin, after Ashland County had been organized. That part of Milton Township lying east of the Black Fork remaining in Ashland County, and retained its original name as possessing the largest amount of territory. Two miles was then taken from the east side of Franklin and added to what was left of Milton, and erected into a new township and called Weller, and was subsequently divided into six school districts.

The township contains within its limits a very fine body of land, embracing every variety of soil, and well adapted for the production of grass or grain, as well as every variety of fruit and vegetables. The Black Fork is the principal stream of water and traverses the township from west to east, entering at the northwest corner, near Urick's mill, and continuing an eastward course to Linn's mill, then turns south to the bridge, on the Wells farm, in the southeast corner of the township. The Whetstone, coming in from the north, and the Brubaker Run from the south, are important branches. The land on these streams is extremely fertile, producing fine crops of corn and other cereals.

The "Big Hill," as it is called, forms a prominent feature in this department. It rises about one hundred and fifty feet high, and is four miles in circumferance, more or less abrupt on its several sides, to a uniform altitude, and then drops to a level surface on the top, forming a table-land of great beauty and value for agricultural and horticultural purposes. There are about one hundred and fifty springs emitting pure, soft water which flows from its sides; the geological formation being sandstone. A number of valuable quarries are in operation on different sides. There are also heavy deposits of potter's or fire clay. Specimens on the farm of John Ward were sent to Akron, Ohio, and to Lansing, Mich., for testing purposes, and pronounced at both factories to be first-class material for stoneware. Some indications of coal have been found cropping out at several points, but not sufficient to justify a heavy venture.

About ten years ago, Thomas Clingan, living on the north side of the hill, employed men to bore for coal. They went down about one hundred and ten feet, and then abandoned the enterprise.

The wooded portions of the hill are covered with a dense growth of chestnut, hickory and oak timber. There are men living on the hill now who can remember when the tall chestnut trees—now 100 feet high—were no thicker than a man's thumb. When the aborigines held possession, they burned the forests over annually to prevent the undergrowth from obstructing the distant view of game. Heavy timber would not be affected by the fire, but the land was no doubt impoverished by consuming the decaying vegetable matter.

In early times, there was a saline spring about half a mile west of Windsor Station, which spread out over a low, flat bottom-ground, forming an extended marsh, which the early settlers called "The Deer Lick." This was a place of great resort, both of the Indians and also of the early hunters, to kill deer. It was once owned by Jacob Gardiner, a son of Archibald Gardiner, the first settler in those parts. Gardiner was one of the best riflemen in the country. He made a small pen of poles, at a convenient angle, covered it with bark and brush, in which he would secrete himself and await the approach of the deer, which resorted here generally by moonlight, in the autumn of the year, to lick at the saline fountain. Many were the splendid specimens that were dragged out of that marsh.

On the east side of the hill there is a picturesque-looking cavern, that was called "The Snake Den," under whose massive rocks the rattlesnakes took refuge and propagated their fearfully hated race. John Dickson once improvised a party of snake-hunters and made a raid on the den, killing seventy-five and wounding others.

In the first stages of its settlement, progress was necessarily very slow. Things did not go by steam in those days. The early settler labored under immense disadvantages and crushing embarrassments. When the scanty supply of flour or meal ran out, he must drop his ax or plow, and travel perhaps ten or twenty miles to a mill, or five to a blacksmith-shop. When his salt ran out, he must go or send seventy miles, and pay $10 a barrel for it. Instead of the shapely plank to lay his cabin-floor, he must split up huge trees and hew puncheons for a floor. Then rushing waters must be bridged, swamps must be corduroyed, before travel was possible. Under such difficulties, it would be wonderful if education was not neglected—schoolhouses dispensed with for some time. Yet, considering these disadvantages, our fathers exhibited a praiseworthy energy in that direction, and schools were inaugurated in rude log cabins, and the most erudite of the settlers chosen as a teacher.

Among the first enterprises was the manufacture of whisky; corn, being very low in price, could be made into whisky and sold at 25 cents a gallon. It constituted the chief article of commerce in those days, considerable being sent to Michigan, and was considered "legal tender" in any kind of trade. A few yards from where Windsor Station now stands, a distillery was run by a Deacon Williamson, who came from Jefferson County, Ohio, in 1817. The good Deacon, who was indeed a worthy man, would, after putting his buzzing, seething enginery in operation, take his seat at the place where the precious fluid made its exit, and, rubbing his hands together, would begin to sing—

"Come, Thou fount of every blessing."

There was one or two more in the township, one of which was run by Jacob Osbun, near the infirmary, but was soon abandoned. The state of public sentiment changing on that matter, as soon as the temperance agitation commenced, yet how harmless, comparatively speaking, was the liquor manufactured then to the poisonous "rot-gut" sent out by the millions of gallons at the present day.

Among the first settlers of Weller Township may be named the following: Benjamin Montgomery, Elijah Charles, Jacob Osbun, 1814; A. A. Webster, Levi Stevenson, George Hall, James Mahon, James Haverfield, William Holson, Peter Pittenger, Francis Porter, Henry Wikoff, John Dixon, John and James Feguson, 1815; from 1816 to 1819, came Moses Modie, James Grimes, Charles Stewart, John and Charles Palmer, Joseph Ward and Simon Morgan.

The first grist-mill built in the township was on the Whetstone, at Olivesburg, by Benjamin Montgomery, in 1817. The first saw-mill was built by Elijah Charles, on the Black Fork, in 1818, and it is worthy of note here, that it is, perhaps, the only saw-mill built in that early day that is in operation at this date over sixty years, and is now owned by David Lind. In the year 1816, Benjamin Montgomery was elected Justice of the Peace, and the same year a small log schoolhouse was built on the west side of the Big Hill, and a small school improvised with James Mahon as teacher. The schoolhouse was on Levi Stevenson's land. Mr. Stevenson taught one term in the same house.

From 1814 to 1822, wild beasts made occasional depredations on the stock of citizens.

In 1820, Mr. Hall had some sheep killed by wolves, and as late as 1822, Joseph Ward, Sr., had fourteen sheep killed in one night in the woods, a mile from the house; some others were killed in other parts of the township, but the names of the parties are forgotten.

In 1819, John E. Palmer settled on the south side of the hill, where there were three or four fine springs of water bursting out of the side of the hill. In the fall of 1820, Mrs. Palmer stepped out of the house into the wood-yard for some fuel. She had placed some chips in her apron, and was turning to go into the house when she discovered a huge black bear just a few yards from her. Uttering a scream, she sprang for the door, when a very fine, large Newfoundland dog, that Mr. Palmer had brought from London with him, whom he called Lord Nelson, sprang out of his kennel and made for the bear, which immediately broke for the chapparal on the hill-side, and "Lord Nelson" very discreetly contented himself with making a very vigorous demonstration in his rear.

Some excitement was produced in the summer of 1825, by the story of a Mrs. Church, that she had been pursued by a panther. She lived on the east bank of the Black Fork. On the south was an extensive swamp, stretching toward the Webster farm. She was returning home from a neighbor's in the dusk of the evening, and heard, or thought she heard, a panther scream behind her. She started to run and scream herself, the panther answering. She soon reached the Black Fork, which she crossed on a fallen tree, and there the chase ended. The story was not generally credited; many thought the screams alluded to proceeded from a huge night-owl that was in the habit of making nocturnal visits in the neighborhood. At all events, people who had boys to send to the woods to hunt cows were anxious to have them take that view of the matter. Black and gray squirrels were the most numerous and abundant of all other wild animals, and, while they were a little annoying to the farmers, yet they furnished them with thousands of meals of the most delicious meat.

During the war of 1812, Jacob Osbun was a soldier, and with a company of men from Jefferson County was sent out to fight the Indians on the Sandusky Plains and the Maumee. On their way out, he passed over Section 35, and being impressed with the beauty of the location, timber, etc., took occasion to mark with a hatchet a number of trees, with a view to future operations. On his return, he made the entry sometime in December. His son, William, owns and lives on the same farm now.

In February, 1815, Samuel Osbun, Jacob's father, came out and built a cabin on the same land. He was born in New York, was of English descent, and lived some time in Washington County, Penn.; moved to the Pan-Handle, Va. thence to Jefferson County, Ohio, and came to Richland in 1814. He was ninety years old when he died. Religious services were frequently held in his house in early times. His son, Judge Osbun, settled in Mansfield in 1815, was elected Justice of the Peace, and was for several years Associate Judge. He moved to his farm in this township in 1824.

Elijah Charles came from Beaver County, Penn., to this township, in 1814, and built a saw-mill on the Black Fork, in 1818, which was of great service to the people. He went to Pittsburgh with a wagon, for the irons. He died shortly after the mill was set in operation, leaving a large family, who carried on the milling and farming business with great success, the oldest son, Isaac, adding a valuable grist-mill to the property in 1835. He was soon after elected Justice of the Peace, serving two terms. In 1868, he moved to Bluffton, Allen County, Ohio, where he is supposed to have been murdered by his youngest son, Isaac, who is now in the State prison for life—a truly tragic ending of a useful life. All the male members of the the original family are now dead. Elijah, the fourth son of old Elijah Charles, died at the same age, and singularly enough, of the same disease, as his father. William Taggart married the third daughter. He was Commissioner of the county two terms, and subsequently made two trips to California, in the gold-digging enterprise.

Indians were lingering around some time after the introduction of the white settlers. Sometimes they were troublesome, even after the close of the war, often intruding themselves into the cabins, with their characteristic "Ugh! me heap hungry; Indian want some bread, some hominy, some powder." The Charles family were annoyed two or three years by them, as they were a great terror to children. They seldom, however, did any serious harm, and were soon after confined to their reserve, in what is now Wyandot County.

In 1820, the Rev. Mr. Lee came from Westmoreland County, Penn., and bought a quarter-section of land east of the Charles mill. He had a large family, of which John A. Lee, late of Mansfield, was the youngest boy. In a short time, the entire family was prostrated with fever and ague, and his oldest daughter, a very amiable young lady of seventeen summers, died of bilious fever. The rest of the family all recovered, only to be stricken down again the next autumn.

Between Mr. Lee's farm and the Charles mill was an extensive marsh, over which the waters of the Black Fork flowed at every succeeding freshet. Of course the miasma arising therefrom in autumn was fearful. Mr. Lee attributed much of the trouble to the mill-dam obstructing the channel, and thus throwing the water over the banks into the marsh, and proceeded to inaugurate a suit for damages, or effect a removal of the nuisance. A long, bitter and expensive litigation followed, the courts finally deciding against Mr. Lee, but compelling the mill-owners to cut a foot off their dam, which at that time backed the water three miles. Mr. Lee, disheartened and disgusted, sold his farm at a great sacrifice, and moved to Crawford County, Ohio.

In 1821, a local preacher, Joseph Curtis, came from England, and settled on the south side of the Big Hill. He was a good carpenter and farmer, and also filled the place of an undertaker, thus making himself doubly useful, for while he attended to the duties of an undertaker, he could, at the same time and place, preach an acceptable funeral sermon.

Mr. Curtis married Mary Woodhouse near Windsor, and raised a large family, one of whom (Benny) enlisted in the army, and was killed at the battle of Chickamauga. A marble monument at Milton graveyard bears his image, taken from a photograph, but his body was never recovered—it sleeps on the blood-stained field of Chickamauga. William Curtis, the second son, was elected Captain of Company C, One Hundred and Sixty-third Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was sent to Virginia, Fort Reno, in the 100-days service. Quite a number of his company was made up of recruits from this township—Joseph H. Brown, Second Lieutenant; Peter Sterritt, First Lieutenant; Jacob Rohrer, First Orderly Sergeant; James Hughes, Orderly; David Berry, Levi Nelson, Allen Haverfield, Ben Egner, Chief Artificer; Isaac Connelly, Third Sergeant; William Houston, Winfield Houston, Benjamin Crabbs, Thomas Hughes, Joe Balderson, Amos Jump, M. Ozier, Marvin Seaton, J. W. Tucker, privates.

After his return from the service, he married the youngest daughter of John E. Palmer, and on the death of his father, which took place in 1864, he inherited the old homestead, which he sold, and moved to Illinois. He was not considered a very efficient officer, and was very unpopular with his men.

In addition to the company raised for the 100-days service above mentioned, most of which were from this township, quite a number of volunteers went into other companies. Jacob Ward went in the Fifteenth, and was killed at the battle of Chickamauga; Joseph W. Palmer, John Fickes, Bent Martin, Joseph Haverfield, Steven Clifford and J. Miller were in the cavalry service—the former three in McLaughlin's squadron. Clifford re-enlisted, and went into the Ohio Battery. H. O. Pittenger, Milton Charles, Newton Charles went into the One Hundred and Second; Martin Taggart, in the One Hundred and Twentieth; was taken prisoner, and confined nineteen months; Elmer Nelson was in the Fifteenth; was taken prisoner and confined in Libby Prison and Andersonville; Franklin Osbun, Lemuel Pittenger, I. Pittenger, Freeman Osbun, Melvin Osbun, James Weagly, James Mason were in the One Hundred and Sixty-third. Gaylord Ozier and his brother, Kemp Ozier, were taken prisoners, and kept in Andersonville ten months.

Henry Newman settled on the quarter section on which the Franklin M. E. Church stands in 1822, and donated the church one acre of ground, when that edifice was built. He was the oldest son of Jacob Newman, of Mansfield, one of the proprietors of that town; came with his father before the war, when a boy, to where Mansfield now stands, and, with others at that day, encountered many difficulties and dangers from Indians and other sources. He taught school several terms when young. In the spring of 1822, he commenced opening up his farm, and soon after married Miss Jane Ward. He had three sons and four daughters; all his boys went into the service. Capt. Jacob Newman (the oldest) was shot through the body at the battle of Shiloh; the surgeon, considering his case hopeless, refused to dress his wound for twenty-four hours after the battle. He was sent to Pittsburgh on the boat, where his mother met him, and nursed him into life, and he returned to service. Joseph, the second son, was mortally wounded at the battle of Mission Ridge, and died soon after. He was for some time attached to the staff of Gen. Williams.

Capt. Andrew Newman, the third son, went through the entire service; at the battle of Jonesboro, behind Atlanta, half his regiment fell. After the close of the war, he entered college and studied law, but his constitution was shattered, and he broke down, and slowly sank to rest.

William Houston, of Olivesburg, came from the State of Delaware in 1815, and entered a half-section of land adjoining what is now the village of Olivesburg. He had five sons—Jonathan, Richard, Joseph, William and Robert. He was chiefly instrumental in the building of the first Presbyterian Church, and also the first schoolhouse. He furnished all the siding for the church, and hauled it with his team from John Stewart's mill, south of Mansfield. He died on the same farm in 1842. Robert inherits the old homestead.

James Mahon came from Harrison County, Ohio, in 1815, and entered half a section of land on the "Big Hill." He taught the first school in the township in the log schoolhouse on Levi Stevenson's farm in 1816. He died in 1820 or 1821.

One of the most prominent and useful families of early times were the Halls. They came from Westmoreland County, Penn., in 1815. Mr. Hall had five sons and three daughters, all members of the Presbyterian Church. He entered three quarter-sections of land on the Black Fork, in the southeast corner of the township, in 1815, and, having a strong force of muscular and industrious young men, soon opened up a fine farm. The oldest son married a Miss Ralston, of Plymouth. Mr. Maxwell, late of Mansfield, married the oldest daughter, though rumor has it that it was a runaway match, but proved to be a most felicitous one. Judge Lee, of Bucyrus, married the youngest daughter. The entire family have all passed away—the last member died more than ten years ago. The first sermon preached by a Presbyterian minister in this neighborhood was in Mr. Hall's house, by Rev. James Rowland. Mr. Hall was fond of a good horse, and was remark able for keeping the finest lot of fat horses in the township.

In connection with Mr. Hall's history, it would be proper to make mention of a terrific whirlwind that swept over his farm in the year 1824, and the only one of that character that has visited this township in sixty years. It threw down every fence on the farm, carrying fence-rails through the air.

The best barn in the township, at that time, was on this farm. It lifted the heavy, new shingled roof off as if it had been a cobweb, and, what was most remarkable, a hewed log, lying in the lane, half buried in mud, was taken up out of its bed and thrown eight or ten rods.

The next day, fifty men collected on the farm to gather up the debris, and collect what materials were available for further use, and bring order out of chaos.

The year 1859 was memorable on account of the unprecedented heavy frost of that year. The preceding winter had been favorable for the protection of winter wheat, and, when spring opened, the wheat was unusually fine, and the prospect for an abundant harvest was never more cheering in the entire history of this township. Some fields of corn on favorable ground was nearly knee-high by the 5th of June. Although slight frosts had occurred during the months of April and May, no material damage had been done; all kinds of fruit were doing well; apples were as large as hickory-nuts, and wheat was all out in head and in much of it the grain was partly formed. About the 1st of June a light rain fell, after which it turned colder. The weather continued cloudy and cold for two or three days, and on the 4th it snowed a little during the day.

At 10 o'clock A. M. of the 4th, the thermometer stood just at the freezing point, a strong breeze blowing from the north.

At sunset, the wind dropped; the sun setting clear. By 9 o'clock P. M., the mercury was falling very fast; the stars were unusually brilliant; not a sound was heard in the air; no whip-poor-will raised his night-song; no chirping cricket lifted its unmusical voice; all was silent as the house of death—and the house of death indeed it was, for the "destroying angel" was abroad in the land, sweeping down tens of thousands of acres of the finest grain-fields that ever waved before the breeze, or delighted the eye of the husbandman.

The morning sun rose on a scene of indescribable grandeur and desolation. The meadows, the wheat-fields, corn-fields and gardens were thickly covered over with frost-crystals glistening and dancing in the morning sunlight. The work of destruction was complete; everything was frozen stiff. Under the powerful re-action from the rays of the morning sun, the corn wilted and soon fell to the earth, the ground being frozen down to the roots of the corn. On a farm on the Black Fork, a large iron kettle, half filled with water, was so frozen over, that a heavy man got on it with both feet and tried in vain to break it. It is worthy of note here, that there was a frost in every month in the year of 1859.

There was great sympathy manifested in those days for each other, and when one neighbor became distressed, the others would rush to his assistance with a perfect fervor. Mr. Hall died about the year 1832, regretted and respected by all his neighbors. His son Robert inherited the farm, and married a very amiable lady by the name of Walker, but died in four years after, of consumption, leaving one child.

Abel A. Webster came from the State of Connecticut in the fall of 1814, and settled on the Black Fork, one mile north of the Hall farm. He was the only man from the State of Connecticut in the township. He was a man of means, and was soon able to clear out a fine farm, so that when later settlers came in, about 1819–20, he had produce to sell them at his own figures. He was skeptical in his views, and although the wealthiest man in the neighborhood, he never could be induced to contribute a dollar to build a church, college, railroad or any other enterprise of the day. He sold his farm in 1859 to Mr. Minster, who married his daughter and now resides on the farm. He soon after removed to Cleveland, where he died at the advanced age of eighty-eight years.

John Dickson came to this township in 1815. He entered the quarter of land joining Elijah Charles on the south, and married the oldest daughter of Mr. Charles in 1818. In 1830, he formed a partnership with William Taggart, and built a grist-mill on a spring rising out of the Big Hill side, and, two years after, built another grist-mill about forty rods below the other, on the same stream. He was a man of great physical strength and endurance, an excellent workman and hunter; had very black hair and black eyes. His entire face and bosom were so thickly covered with hair as to hide the skin. He was generous in his impulses, honest in his dealings, and an accommodating neighbor. In the days of "corn-huskings," he was first choice in a race; he would become so excited sometimes in an exciting race as to leave marks of blood on the corn-husks from his lacerated fingers. These simple facts are given simply to exhibit faithfully the spirit of the times half a century ago, and the habits of our fathers. The last days of this good citizen were shrouded in melancholy and gloom. A dark shadow had fallen over the threshold of his domestic relations, and the cloud never lifted from his brow, or the load from his heart. He became a wreck, mentally and physically, and never did the weary heart look forward with deeper longings for the grave that should cover it, or the spirit with earnest yearnings for the brighter and better land, than did his.

Samuel Pittenger came to this township with his father, Peter. in the year 1815, landing on the 17th day of February of that year. The family made the entire journey from Harrison County on sleds. Samuel was the oldest son, and became the "Nimrod" of the family, supplying them with venison for several years, until stock could be raised. He killed his first deer on the "Big Hill," soon after landing, and has killed as high as twenty-eight deer in fourteen consecutive days. He was married in 1819 to Elizabeth Kent, and settled on the northwest corner of his father's farm, where he lived seven years, and removed to Greene Township, where he resided six years, and then returned to his present location, where he celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their wedding, a few months ago. He is now in his eighty-fifth year, and Mrs. Pittenger in her eightieth. There is a cabin that he assisted in building, in the year 1817, still standing on the farm now owned by H. G. Palmer. It is the oldest cabin known in the township. It was built and owned by a man by the name of Ensign, who was at that time a Swedenborg preacher, but subsequently became a Methodist, as his name appears on the minutes as an exhorter in 1829, in the official records of the M. E. Church, Mansfield Circuit.

Levi Stevenson came from Beaver County, Penn., in the year 1815, and settled on the section northwest of the Big Hill. He was a good mathematician, and was employed in the year 1818 to teach school in a little log cabin, built on the southeast corner of his land. It was in the days of "barring out," and a number of the young men attached to the school gathered before daylight on Christmas morning and barred "the master" out to make him "treat." Uncle Levi coolly surveyed the premises, and thinking no doubt that it was a long lane that had no turn in it, proceeded to climb the corner of the domicile, and without further ceremony jumped down the chimney, although there was a roaring fire of hickory logs, ten feet long, to receive him. The insurgents "took in the situation," and surrendered at discretion. Uncle Levi could not say that he came out without the smell of fire on him, but no serious damage resulted; but never was a pair of buckskin breeches in more serviceable demand than on that memorable occasion. He had four sons, William S., John, Andrew and Samuel. The last named still lives on the old homestead.

John E. Palmer came from the city of London, England, to this township in the year 1819. He bought half a section of land of William Holson, and commenced making improvements in the fall of the same year. His brother, Charles Palmer, and himself, brought a small stock of dry-goods, chiefly calicoes, with them, which sold for high prices at that day. They brought these goods in a light wagon from Philadelphia, crossing the mountains by way of Pittsburgh.

The following year, the two brothers married the two eldest daughters of Joseph Ward, who accompanied them from England.

Mr. Palmer engaged actively in all the moral enterprises of the day, such as the temperance movement, the antislavery question, etc. He assisted in the organization of the first Congregational Church in Mansfield, of which he was one of the first Deacons. For many years, he was connected with the underground railroad, and never was happier than when rolling away a wagon load of quivering fugitives by the pale light of the stars toward the Canada shore.

John Crabbs settled half a mile west of Olivesburg in 1817. He came from Jefferson County. He married Polly Montgomery in 1818, and is now living on the same farm with the same wife; they celebrated their golden wedding two years ago. A large fatty tumor has been growing on his shoulder for twenty years. In November, 1879, Dr. Craig, of Mansfield, assisted by Dr. Crabbs, of Olivesburg, successfully removed the tumor. He remained unconscious three weeks after the operation, but is recovering slowly. He is now in his eighty-fifth year.

Thomas Robinson emigrated to this township from England in the year 1821. He bought a quarter-section of Isaac Hanly, and afterward sixty acres of Israel Graham. There was a small improvement on each place, situated on the "Big Hill." Robinson was a man of singular notions and habits of life. He had plenty of money to do what he took in his head, and he conceived the idea of grubbing up all before him, when he cleared land, taking out trees three or four feet over. As a matter of course, it was a losing business financially, but it gave employment to poor men, and scattered his guineas round the neighborhood, where they were badly needed at that time. After staying two or three years, he returned to England, as he said, to get another wife, which important mission he accomplished in seven years, and then returned and recommenced grubbing up trees, etc. He also built a large brick house, made of bricks of extraordinary large size. He also built the first frame barn in the township.

The house above mentioned was remarkable for its immense cellars, which were all arched with stone. These were not properly constructed, and proved the ruin of the house by spreading the foundations, the walls cracking, and finally falling by piecemeal. It has not been clearly demonstrated whether the fall was great or not, but it fell, and the indications went to show, that Mr. Robinson, in more ways than one, did not build his house upon a "rock." He lost his fourth wife in 1842, and in the spring of 1843, returned to England, where he died.

In 1866, the property was sold at public auction, by order of the court, and Gen. James and Wm. Robinson bid it off and now own it.

A few years ago, a Sunday-school picnic from Ashland landed at Windsor Station, and made a raid over the Big Hill, taking in their rounds the ruins, of the fallen castle. On leaving the ruins it was observed by Mr. Robinson that each one of the party was carrying away a brick. He called the party to a halt, and gruffly inquired, what in thunder they were carrying off his bricks for.

The spokesman of the party proceded to explain, that they had heard down at Ashland that a rich lord from England had built a wonderful castle here once, that he was something of a Blue Beard in his character, that four wives had mysteriously disappeared, some thought, in the arched vaults of the cellar, etc., etc., and finally that an earthquake had shaken down the house, and buried the unfortunate wicked lord in the ruins; and that with this romance burning in their brains, they were carrying away the brick to keep as a souvenir, and one brick to deposit in the cabinet of curiosities in the Ashland Academy of Science.

At this wonderful story, Mr. Robinson's eyes dilated. He at once proceeded, with impressive voice and gesture, to strip this romantic legend of some of its superfluous verbiage, and put things in something like matter-of-fact form, such as would do to go into the history of Richland County. It is needless to say that quite a change came over the spirit of their dreams, and before the party reached the station on their return home, there was not a brick to be found in the hat of one of those boys. The teachers felt pretty badly sold.

In 1862–63, the Atlantic & Great Western Railroad was built, which enters Richland County and Weller Township on the east side of the township, at the crossing of the Black Fork, and running west to the west line of the township, where it makes a sudden curve to the south, to Mansfield.

There is a comfortable station-house at the crossing of the Windsor & Olivesburg road, commodious switches and spurs, and convenient accommodations for loading and unloading stock. There is considerable business done in the way of shipping stone, staves, lumber, grain, etc., from this point, though but little enterprise is manifested in building up a town. The old village of Windsor, three-fourths of a mile south, is dwindling away.

The railroad bridge over the Black Fork, one mile east of the station, broke down under a freight train in 1871, and all the train was precipitated into the river. The crash was fearful, but by a wonderful providence, none of the employes were killed or even seriously hurt, though some were pulled out of the water from under the debris. A wrecking train was improvised and all hands put to work, and a new bridge built as soon as practicable, which has stood the pressure since.

The first child or children born in the township were Samuel and Mary Stevenson (twins), in 1816, one of whom (Samuel) is still living on the old farm where he was born, and where he has lived sixty-four years.

The oldest man living within the bounds of the township is a Mr. Smith, living at Olivesburg, who claims to be ninety-eight years old. He is yet a hale old man, chops his own wood, and to all appearances, he is good for another half century.

There are fifteen persons in the township who have lived therein sixty years, viz., Samuel Pittenger, Nathaniel Pittenger, James Hagerman, William Hagerman, William Ferguson, John Ward, Samuel Stevenson, John Crabbs, Richard Houston, Robert Houston, Isaac Connell and Francis Porter—twelve men, and three women, viz., Mrs. Morgan, Mrs. John Cline and Mrs. Taggart.

The Richland County Infirmary is situated in the center of Weller Township. It is beautifully situated on the western slope of the Big Hill, on the Mansfield & Olivesburg road. In accordance with an act of the Legislature, proceedings were inaugurated by the County Commissioners, in the year 1846, toward its erection. William Taggart, William B. Hammett and John McPool were acting in that capacity at that time. The farm of one hundred and sixty acres, was bought of the heirs of Nathaniel Osbun, and the contract for making the brick and putting up the building was given to Col. Weaver, of Ganges, for $4,500. As Col. Weaver claimed he had lost money in the enterprise, the Commissioners humanely added a little pile to it as extras, but the house was finished, and, the following year, was occupied in accordance with its legitimate purpose. The first Board of Directors elected to take charge of its conduct were Richard Condon, Christopher Horn and Samuel Lind.

These men appointed Lowry Sibbet, of Mansfield, as Steward, and his lady, Mrs. Sibbet, was duly installed as Matron. The institution was managed as well, perhaps, as the average of such institutions throughout the State, and, as a benevolent institution, was a credit to the country. The average number of paupers accommodated within its walls was about seventy-five or eighty.

In June, 1877, the old building burned down, and great inconvenience was experienced in making temporary provision for the inmates till another building could be provided.

Plans and specifications were presented during the year 1878, and, in the spring of 1879, the contract was let to Sheets & Frayer, and the work commenced. The building is much more elaborate and expensive than the old one, and will cost between $30,000 and $40,000. It is a very handsome building, and makes a fine appearance from the Atlantic & Great Western Railroad. The present officers, under whose directions it was built, are William Newlon, J. F. Gerhart and Peter Snapp. Present Steward in charge is William Gates.

There was a school organized about the same time on Jacob Osbun's farm, at that time in Franklin Township (now Weller), adjoining the infirmary, and was taught by John Hagerman, and, in the winter of 1819–20, Joseph Ward taught a school on the south side of the Big Hill, and the winter following, in a log cabin on the farm of Mr. Hall, on the Black Fork, at which time and place the Hon. Barnabas Burns, of Mansfield, commenced his education, also James Rait, of Mansfield. This rustic seminary had greased newspapers for windows. The fireplace extended nearly across the east end, into which chasm immense piles of beech and sugar logs were rolled by muscular students. The master was favored with a splint-bottomed chair for his throne, but the students had seats made of split-rails, placed with the soft side upward.

The first schoolhouse making any pretensions to respectability was built at Olivesburg in the year 1824. This was a substantial, hewed-log house, twenty feet square, glass windows and good stove in the middle. The above-named gentleman (Joseph Ward) taught the first four terms in it. This was the first school continued through the summer season. His article of agreement stipulated that one-third of his pay should be in corn, one-third in maple-sugar and one-third money.

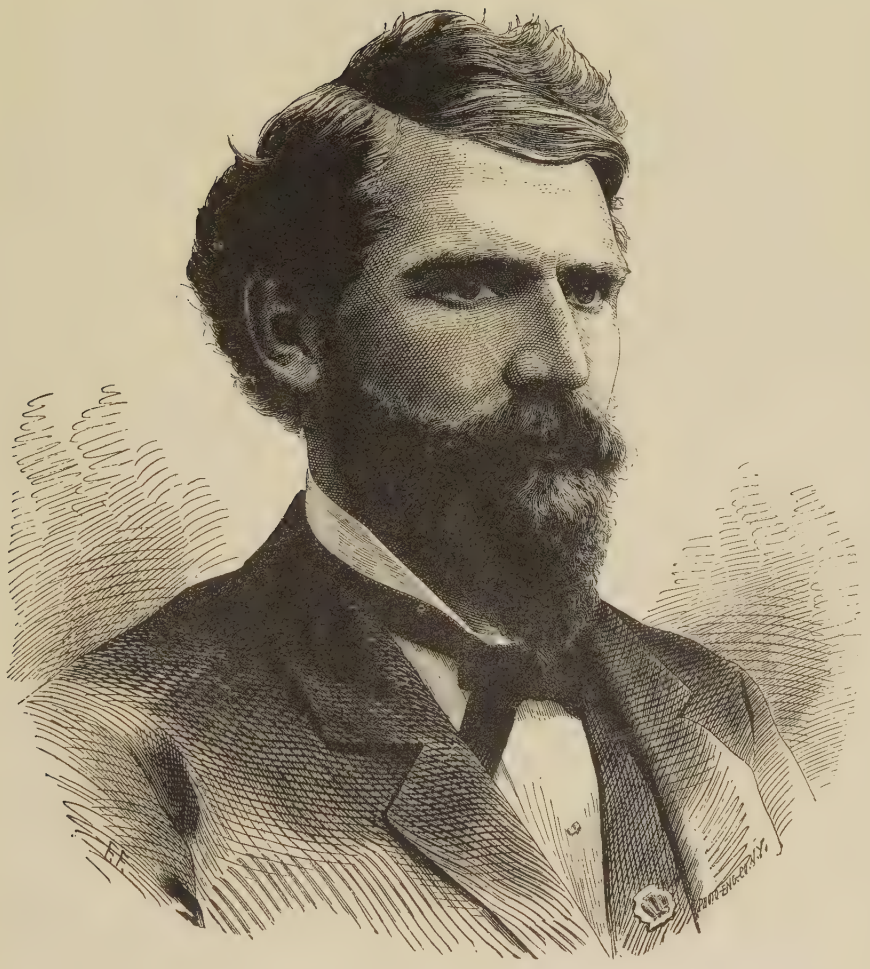
It was not till the year 1854, that the township was thoroughly organized into districts, and a Board of Education appointed, and a good frame house put up in each sub-district. The first Board of Education met at Isaac Charles' house, and was composed of the following members: Charles Palmer, Sr., John Ward, Elijah Charles, Daniel McCormick, James O. Hagerman and James Walker, since which time the schools have prospered, with regular sessions winter and summer.

The first religious service in this township was held at Peter Pittenger's house, conducted by Rev. John Clingan. Preaching was continued for some time at his house by the Methodist ministers before any church was built. In 1820, a log church was built on the land of Nathaniel Osbun, now the infirmary farm, and services held occasionally. The first church of any size or comfort was built by the Presbyterians at Olivesburg, in the year 1827. It was a good frame house for those days, and cost $500. Rev. William Mathews was Pastor; William Houston, Abel Montgomery and Joseph Burget were the Deacons.

John Crabbs, John Owens and James Godwin were the Elders; Joseph Ward, Clerk, and James Laughlin, Treasurer. In 1831, Mr. Nathan retired and Rev. James Robinson was installed Pastor and continued a number of years. The church is not more than half as strong at the present time as it was fifty years ago. In the year 1849, the old church building was removed, and a new one built on the site in 1852. The present Pastor is Rev. Mr. Boles.

The first Methodist Church in Olivesburg was built in 1840. Rev. M. Kinnear was Pastor; Dr. Mitchell and Isaac Charles, Trustees. It burned down in 1848 and was rebuilt in 1849. The Pastors were Rev. O. Burgess and Jacob Fry; the Trustees, Isaac Charles and Jacob Crabbs.



The M. E. Church at Frankton was built in the year 1837. The preachers were Revs. Gavitt and Yokum; the Trustees, Charles Palmer, Henry Newman, William Ferree, Andrew Oswalt. The church cost $500.

First M. E. Church at Milton was built in 1839. Pastors, Adam Poe, A. L. Harris; Trustees—Joseph Curtis, Henry Pittenger, M. Mason and Ezra Osbun. Second church was built in 1875. The Pastors have been John McNabb and C. C. Ball; Trustees, William Ferguson, John Ward, H. O. Pittenger, William Hagerman, William Robinson, William Wells and S. S. Harnly. It cost $2,400.

The first parsonage in the township was built in Olivesburg in the year 1847. Trustees—Jacob Crabbs, Charles Palmer, Joshua Ford. It was occupied severally by Revs. Hubbard Dubois, Jacob Fegtly, John McNabb, John Whitworth and others. In the year 1876, it was sold, and a more commodious and convenient house built near Windsor Station, in close connection with Milton Church, and costing about $1,200. Trustees—John Ward, William Ferguson, Henry Golladay, James Hughes and William Foulks. It is beautifully situated on the southern slope of the Big Hill, and, with its rather picturesque surroundings, presents a pleasing view during the summer season, from the Atlantic & Great Western Railroad. It frequently calls out remarks of passing strangers. The present Pastor occupying it is the Rev. C. I. Russel.

Sabbath schools were organized first in the year 1828 by a Mr. E. Judson, of Milan, Ohio, at Olivesburg and at Fleming's Falls. James Godwin, Superintendent at Olivesburg; Thomas Wilson, Superintendent at Fleming's, and Levi Horseman, Secretary.

In 1829, the Rev. Mr. Matthews assisted in organizing a school in a cabin on Simon Morgan's land. Bartholomew Williamson,

Yours Truly,
L. H. Stevens

Superintendent; Joseph Ward, Sr., Secretary and Librarian. A collection was taken up here and forwarded to New York for books, and these were the first Sabbath-school books introduced into the township. There was a small school also in the west part of the township, with Charles Palmer as Superintendent. All these schools went down after a brief struggle for support; but after the building of commodious church edifices at the various points already indicated, they were all reorganized on a permanent basis, and have continued with brief intermissions ever since. Some of them are very prosperous and successful. These schools were superintended alternately by Ezra Osbun, John Ward, William Hagerman, Newton Charles, Freeman Osbun, and others at Milton; Charles Palmer, James Hughes, Henry Golladay, Allan Haverfield, David Hughes and others, at Franklin, and Dr. Crabbs, William Burget, William Foulks, at Olivesburg.

The village of Olivesburg was laid out by Benjamin Montgomery in the year 1816, and called Olivesburg in honor of his oldest daughter, Olive. In 1821, the village contained one tavern, kept by Benjamin Montgomery; one blacksmith-shop, by Abel Montgomery; one tailor-shop, by John Gum; one cabinet-shop, by Thomas Beach; one tannery, by Joseph Burget; one horse-mill and water-mill, by Jonathan Montgomery; one wheelwright-shop, by William Lee, or James Hall, and about the usual per cent of loafers.

It was suggested to the writer by an old settler, that the history of Weller Township would be incomplete without some allusion to the witchcraft excitement that prevailed some fifty years ago. It will, perhaps, be looked upon by some as a matter almost incredible that such things took place at so comparatively recent date, and we should feel reluctant about placing them on record were there not living witnesses to substantiate all the statements made here: It was about the year 1831 or 1832, that a family living on the farm now occupied by the county infirmary, conceived that they were annoyed by enemies who were endowed with the powers, qualities and attributes of witchcraft. A Mrs. Holstein, living at that time on the farm now occupied by Alanson Martin, was one of the parties thus charged, and that, in the exercise of powers and capacities above mentioned, they entered into their churns, sugar-kettles, etc., and prevented the butter from coming and the sugar from graining, etc. At other times, the old lady would fancy they had taken partial possession of her person, and she would commence a series of gymnastic performances, swaying her body and limbs to and fro, looking mysteriously out into vacancy and uttering sepulchral tones; then she would take a silver half-dollar and clap it on the calf of her leg and kick like a mule in her efforts to throw it off. In the night, mysterious noises were heard up-stairs and down; there were hissings and screechings, and runnings to and fro. In the morning, piles of meal would be found in one corner, piles of salt in another, and torn shreds of old faded calico dresses would be scattered hither and thither. Neighbors were called in to witness the "proceedings," and, according to the Scripture, "some believed, and some believed not." A large portion of the more intelligent part of the community scouted the whole thing and stood aloof from all the proceedings. It was thought by many, that the object of the old woman was to excite hatred toward old Mrs. Holstein. The excitement, however, continued to increase in a class of community who either did, or feigned, to believe it. Finally, a meeting of the "believers" was called to take steps looking toward the abatement of the nuisance. A man by the name of Wycoff, a connection of the troubled family, was Chairman of the meeting.

Wycoff settled on the western slope of the Big Hill in 1815. He was a man of immense weight—on a pair of scales—of very indolent habits, but a more inoffensive, good-natured man there was not in the county of Richland. Wycoff and his confreres, on the occasion above alluded to, held a kind of "experience meeting," in which each one is supposed to have told "what I know about witchcraft," and its probable cause and cure. The conclusion of their deliberations was that the witch should be shot, not in dramatis personæ, but by proxy. So they very gravely went to work, and, with the aid and assistance of the female department of the house, took wheat-flour and created a dough image, made after the "similitude and likeness" of a sinful and erring old woman, whose presence was now invoked with mysterious incantations. It was then placed on the corner of an outside, old-fashioned mud and stick chimney, at a convenient angle, with a big forked cherry-tree, where an excellent marksman was placed, with a rifle loaded with a silver bullet which had been melted down from two or three old, smooth sixpences that had been previously well soaked in buttermilk from which no butter would come. The nerve of the marksman was good, and his aim was true. No better nerve was ever exhibited by "Fitz James or Roderick Dhu," considering the conditions. Sir Walter Scott's heroes pale before him. The silver bullet was true to its magic charm and "accomplished the end whereunto they sent it." At all events, the poor innocent image was bored through and through; and it was not three days till there was a report circulated all through the neighborhood that there was a corresponding wound in poor old Mrs. Holstein's side or bosom. It is a veritable fact, however, that Mrs. Holstein died shortly after these ridiculous transactions, which served to strengthen some in the faith. The writer hereof was present the year after these things took place, when a witch-doctor was sent for, who lived two miles north of Mansfield, who claimed to have power to exorcise evil spirits. He went out to the sugar-camp and muttered something over the sugar-kettles, to make the sugar "grain" good. He appeared to be an honest Pennsylvania Dutchman, talked broken English, charged a small fee for his services, stayed all night with the family, and, early in the morning, left them with his blessing. This was about the winding up of the era of witchcraft.

Absurd and ridiculous as these things were, they had their counterpart in the spiritual rapping period, a quarter of a century later. Not more than a mile from this same locality, on the farm owned at that time by Henry Newman, and rented by a man named Heppard, some very extraordinary things took place, and the family was kept in a terrific state of alarm and excitement for weeks and months by similar noises, thumping, rapping and tearing round the house in the night; and no satisfactory solution of the strange proceedings ever came to light. But these singular manifestations, like the former, have all passed away, and we look back upon them with mingled feelings of wonder and incredulity.

"Ye who love the haunts of Nature,
Love the sunshine of the meadow,
Love the shadow of the forest,
Love the wind among the branches,
And the rain-shower and the snow-storm,
And the rushing of great rivers
Through their Palisades of pine-trees,
And the thunder in the mountains,
Whose innumerable echoes

—Longfellow.

THE township was erected June 6, 1815, out of the east half of Greene, being then twelve miles long from north to south, and six miles wide. Thus it remained until February 11, 1817, when Monroe was created out of its north half, leaving it in its present shape, six miles square. It is now in the southeast corner of the country. It was named after Gov. Worthington, of Ohio. Its surface is broken and hilly, especially along the Clear Fork, where the scenery is picturesque and beautiful. It is well watered by the Clear Fork and its tributaries; this stream entering the township about the center of its western side, its course being generally northeast, leaving the township on its way to the Black Fork, about the center of Section 2. It is a clear, rapid stream, tumbling down among the hills, over a rocky and pebbly bottom. It must have been, long years ago, a very paradise of the red man. Slater's Run and its tributaries water the northern part. It passes from west to east across the northern tier of sections, entering the Clear Fork at Newville. Andrew's Run enters the southwest corner of the township, and, passing north, empties into Clear Fork at Independence; and Gold Run, coming from the southeast, joins the Clear Fork a short distance below Independence. In addition to these, numerous beautiful springs burst from the hillsides in every direction.

Every part of it was once densely wooded; every species of hardwood growing with great strength and beauty. Much of this timber has been cleared away, but even yet the hills along the Clear Fork, and patches of ground all over the township, are covered with timber of the best quality.

The only railroad in the township is the Baltimore & Ohio, which enters its western boundary with the Clear Fork, running parallel with it to Independence, where it makes a curve, passing out on the same boundary line about a mile from the southwest corner.

Among the most noted springs is one on the land now owned by the heirs of Abner Davis, two and a half miles southeast of Newville. This Mr. Davis was once robbed of $1,100 in gold, and recovered his money in a peculiar manner. Three men came to his house one bitter, cold night, before he had retired, and, presenting a pistol to his head, demanded his money. After getting the money, the robbers departed, and, becoming somewhat bewildered by the snow-storm, wandered about until two of them froze to death, and, when found, the third was badly frozen, but survived, and was afterward sent to the penitentiary. The money was all recovered.

The magnificent rocky country in the vicinity of Newville is, without doubt, the most interesting geographical feature in the county. In the early history of the country, these great rocks formed a secure retreat for the various wild animals, and dens for an immense number of yellow rattlesnakes. Hundreds of these reptiles have been seen and killed by the early settlers among these rocks. The bottoms along the Clear Fork are exceedingly rich, where they are extensive enough for farming purposes; occasionally, however, the high rocky bluffs crowd the little stream into a narrow gorge, and the tiller of the soil must let these hills and rocks alone in their natural state forever. A narrow road borders the creek, clings to the hillside and wanders among the great rocks, which, jutting from these young mountains in great profusion, frown darkly upon the passer-by, silent monuments of lost races and ages.

The banks of the stream in their primeval state were covered with a luxuriant growth of vegetation, among which are the most beautiful wild flowers and flowering shrubs. With all this beauty, it is not pleasant to think of the slimy yellow rattlesnake creeping beneath these flowers, in such vast numbers as to render a walk along the banks of the stream, in an early day, a very dangerous undertaking.

In the vicinity of Newville are various ledges of rocks which have received various names, suggested by the shape and locality.

Fair View Rock received its name from the extensive and magnificent view to be obtained from its summit. A view of the valley may be had for some miles up and down the stream.

To the right of this are Chasm Rocks, which consist of detached masses thrown off from the main cliff, by some convulsion of nature in past ages, forming a deep rent in the rocks. In some places, this rent is four, and in others ten, feet across. These chasms are winding, tortuous and open at the top, for the most part. This is an interesting point for the visitor, but space will not permit a description; neither is it considered necessary, for these things will stand forever as they are. No human power will ever be exerted to change them, and it is sufficient that their locality be pointed out by the historian.

Hemlock Falls, a highly interesting and romantic natural curiosity, is situated about one and a half miles south of Newville, near the road leading to Danville, in Knox County, about one-half mile from the Clear Fork. This locality is noted as being the resort of Indians in earlier times, and, in later times, as the resort of pleasure parties and meetings of various kinds. In point of interest and simple beauty, the country and scenery about Hemlock Falls is hard to excel. The water pours over a precipice about seventy-five feet in height, not, however, perpendicularly, but at an angle of seventy-five or eighty degrees in a succession of cascades. There is evidence, however, that at one time the water poured over a precipice about fifty feet perpendicularly, the rock having been worn away by the action of the water. One evidence of this is in the detached fragmentary masses lying scattered at the foot of the falls. At present, the water pours over a precipice of gradual descent about sixty feet, then makes a perpendicular leap fifteen feet to the fragmentary rocks beneath. Huge rocks, ragged and uneven, project from either side. The banks of the stream are fringed with hemlock-trees—hence the name. A large one of these, standing on the verge of a projecting rock, looks as if it would be detached at any moment, and the traveler who has the nerve may hang out over a fearful abyss, by ascending this tree a short distance.

Toward the southern extremity of this ledge of rocks, is "Horseshoe Bend." In this bend, during the wet season, a stream of water issues from the perpendicular side of a rock, falling about thirty feet. In every direction about these falls, the scenery is beautiful, and the traveler is continually stumbling upon wonderful things.

Near these beautiful falls, one of the first pioneer meetings in Richland County was held. Dr. S. Riddle, of Ashland, owner of the falls, in a communication regarding this event, writes:

"The first pioneer meeting in Richland County was held at Hemlock Falls the first Saturday of September, 1856. The principal actors were Rev. James McGaw and Gen. Brinkerhoff, of Mansfield, Ohio; Dr. S. Riddle, of Ashland; Dr. J. P. Henderson, Noah Watt (long since dead), William B. Carpenter, Peter Brubaker, Peter Keller, John Uhler and A. Darling, of Worthington Township, and Solomon Gladden and John Coulter, of Monroe. William B. Carpenter was the President on that occasion, and Dr. J. P. Henderson was Marshal of the day. Speeches were made by McGaw and Brinkerhoff, also John Coulter referred to his early experience in pioneer life and the encounters he had with bears and other wild beasts of the forest. A large concourse of people were present; there was music suitable to the occasion, and a splendid picnic-dinner spread out on the beautiful green above the Falls. The underbrush had been cleared away by some little boys, who took great delight in so doing. Among that number was G. W. Watts (now dead) and Jonathan Herring—who now lives on North Main street, Mansfield, Ohio, and runs the steam-dye works—who were at that time little boys about ten years old. The day was beautiful, and everything went off pleasantly, good order prevailing till the close of the meeting. A short time previous to this meeting, the place had received the name of Hemlock Falls by Gen. Brinkerhoff, who preferred giving it that name instead of an Indian name, as some had suggested. At the second meeting, one year from that time, a large gathering of the people took place, and a general picnic was held, without any special reference to the pioneers. Speech by Hon. John Sherman. Adjourned to meet again in one year from that time. Third meeting, held a Sunday-school picnic. A very well-behaved and orderly crowd of people was there; had appropriate music. The speakers on that occasion were Rev. Richard Gailey (now dead) and Dr. Riddle. Yearly picnics were held there for some years afterward by other parties, but have dwindled down to a mere nothing. The Falls are still owned by Dr. Riddle, who intends to revive again the spirit of the meetings of former days."

Slanting Rock is an enormous fragmentary rock, 80 feet long by 40 wide and 30 in thickness, which some convulsion of nature seems to have precipitated some considerable distance from the main cliff. This rock stands upon one of its ends, the other pointing upward at an angle of forty-five degrees. The ascent of this rock is somewhat perilous, the upper surface slanting about like the roof of an ordinary dwelling. Contiguous to this is another rock of larger dimensions, the upper surface of which is covered with moss and shrubs, which is also detached from the main ledge.

The Eagle's Nest is a bold projecting rock, about seventy-five feet in perpendicular altitude, and is situated one-fourth of a mile north of Hemlock Falls, on the same side of Clear Fork. It received its name from the circumstance of an eagle having a nest under the the shelving rock near its summit.

A short distance south of Eagle's Nest is the Pioneer Threshing Floor, which rises perpendicularly three hundred feet above the waters of the creek. Its upper surface is about forty feet square, and somewhat bowl-shaped. The name is derived from the circumstance of its being used during pioneer times for a thrashing floor, for which purpose it is admirably adapted. It is surrounded on two sides by trees of considerable growth. Its position is marked by a bend in the creek at nearly right angles, where the creek is seen stretching away toward the west. On either side, so far as the eye can penetrate, the creek is walled in by high precipitous bluffs.

Indian Hill forms the eastern extremity of the ledge of rocks upon which Hemlock Falls, Eagle's Nest, etc., are situated. This eminence affords a fine view of the Valley of Clear Fork and Slater's Run. On the top of this hill are seen several depressions, extending in a line about twenty-five feet across the hill, which would seem to indicate an Indian burial ground.

Prospect Hill is situated about one-half mile west of Hemlock Falls, on the south bank of the Clear Fork. It is probably the highest point of land in Worthington Township. The view from its summit is very beautiful. The Clear Fork valley, and thousands of acres of field and meadow and neat farmhouses: cattle, sheep, peace, plenty and beauty everywhere. Near its summit are several bowl-shaped cavities, the largest of which is, perhaps, twenty feet in diameter, evidently formed by the sinking down of the earth among the cavities of the rocks beneath. They lie at the edge of a cleared field, and when the ploughed earth, on different occasions, has rolled into one of these depressions, and been washed down by rain, it finds its way out about five hundred feet below, at the base of the hill, through the outlet of a strong spring of water. From this circumstance, it is supposed that there is a subterranean passage from these depressions to the base of the hill.

A short distance below the cavities is a magnificent rocky tower, one hundred and fifty feet high, overlooking the valley.

A perforation of twenty or thirty feet always existed in this hill, but it was not until within the last twenty years or more that this was found to be the entrance to a cave, which has received the name of Fountain Cavern. This cavern is quite roomy, being perhaps three hundred feet in circumference, and with several distinct rooms and narrow, winding ways. Near its entrance is a rock called the Giant's Plowshare, from a resemblance to that farming implement. A short distance from this is another large rock resembling a pulpit, and near this a rock called the Indian's Arrowpoint, from its resemblance to that article. It stands on the large end, pointing to the north at an angle of seventy-five degrees. It is six feet broad at the base, and tapers to a point like an arrowhead.

Watts Hill is on the north side of the creek, immediately opposite Prospect Hill, and derives its name from Mr. Noah Watts, on whose farm it is located. The location of this gentleman's residence at the foot of this hill is one of the most beautiful that can be imagined.

The eastern ascent of the hill is gradual, but the south is more abrupt, being in places almost perpendicular. All over the hill are scattered curious-shaped rocks, cliffs, arches, towers and various strange things nature has provided to astonish the beholder.

Near Watts Hill is a solitary rock called Dropping Rock. It is about one hundred feet in circumference, and ten or fifteen feet in altitude. It stands entirely alone, no other rocks being near, and its surface is covered with moss and shrubs. From its outside walls the water is continually dropping, even in dry weather—hence the name.

It will be seen from the foregoing, that this must have been a delightful hunting-ground for the Indian, and equally delightful to the first white residents; but how much more beautiful is it to-day, when there are no Indians, rattlesnakes or wolves lurking beneath its rocks and in its caverns.

The township is rich in Indian relics, Dr. J. P. Henderson, of Newville, having quite a cabinet of curious things gathered in this vicinity. The plow even yet unearths some curious implements. Not long since, a curiously wrought copper pipe was plowed up in the old Indian burying-ground at Helltown, which is now in possession of Dr. Henderson.

The first white settler came into the township, so far as known, in 1809, and was, therefore, among the first in Richland County. The names of its first settlers are mentioned in a statement printed some years ago, from which the following extract is produced: "The first settlement of this township was made in the year 1809, by Samuel Lewis, James Cunningham, Andrew Craig and Henry McCart." This is, in part, erroneous, Samuel Lewis being the only one of those mentioned who settled within the present limits of Worthington. The men, however, settled very near to each other, and very near the line between Monroe, Worthington and Green, and it has been with some difficulty that their exact places of residence have been ascertained. They have been claimed as residents of Greentown, and of Green Township, but the fact is they settled very near where Monroe and Worthington joins Green. James Cunningham moved about considerably: in fact, many of these early settlers were somewhat restless, and it is therefore hard to locate them. Andrew Craig was among this number, and can hardly be called a settler at all. Of the former (Cunningham), it has been ascertained that he first settled on the northeast quarter of Section 6, in Monroe Township, so that his first residence was far from Worthington. His next move, so far as known, was to Mansfield, and his third move, made in 1810, was back to Monroe Township, where he settled on Section 36, near Greentown, and in the McCart and Lewis neighborhood, so that he was not one of the earliest residents of Worthington at all, though very near its northern line. He afterward moved to the northeast quarter of Section 24, in Monroe. Sometime during the war of 1812, he moved his family to Licking County, Ohio, and returning again after the war settled permanently in Worthington, on Section 17. It will be seen that he was an early settler in Worthington, but not among the earliest.

Samuel Lewis was probably the first permanent white settler within the present limits of Worthington, settling on the northwest quarter of Section 1, in the spring of 1809. He afterward, in 1812, erected a block-house on his farm for the protection of the settlers. This was known as Lewis' block-house, and is mentioned in another chapter. Henry Nail, Sr., came in 1810, settling on Section 1, and William Slater, Peter Zimmerman and James Wilson in 1811; Herring, Brodie, Pierce, Davis and some others, perhaps, a little later. James Pierce came before 1815, and settled on Section 2. William and Jonathan Darling came in soon after Lewis, and settled on Section 1. Joseph Friend and Peter Zimmerman came about 1811, the former settling on Section 3, and the latter on the northeast quarter of Section 16. Zimmerman erected a powder-mill, the first in the country, on Clear Fork, and established a good trade in the powder business. In 1813, William and Thomas Simmons came, settling on Section 20, and entering the land upon which stands the village of Independence. In 1823, Moses Andrews, wife and family, consisting of Thomas B., William, John E., Moses, Jr., Catharine and Ann Eliza, came, settling on Section 32. When Mr. Andrews came, the following settlers were already here, in addition to those mentioned, viz.: Frederick Eck, Section 32; Zeheniah Wade, Section 27; John Halferty, Section 34; Robert Kinton, Section 26; John Pipe; Stephen Bishop, Section 28; Frederick Herring (one of the earliest settlers), Section 3; Thomas Watt, Section 31; David Filloon, Section 23; Nicholas Fleeharty, Section 24; James Fleeharty, Section 13; Amasy Fleeharty (father of James and Nicholas, and a soldier of the Revolution), Section 24; Daniel Carpenter (father of George and W. B. Carpenter, of Mansfield), Section 2; Andrew Ramsey, Section 17, (1815); Robert Phipps. Section 17: Jacob Myers. Section 18: William Robison. Section 18: Samuel Boyle. Section 32. Mr. Boyle's cabin is yet standing, and is, probably, the oldest house in the township. John Duncan and William Hanlan settled on Section 30, and Robert McConkey on Section 13. Probably other settlers arrived before 1823, whose names cannot at present be recalled.

David Filloon erected the first blacksmith-shop in the township, on Section 19, the land being now owned by T. B. Andrews.

These settlers were mostly from the Ligonier Valley, in Western Pennsylvania. Most of them came into the township along the old Wyandot trail, following up the Mohican, the Black Fork and Clear Fork, settling first where the latter leaves the township, in the northeast corner. Of those who came later, a portion followed the military road, cut by a section of Gen. Harrison's army in 1812, which is yet a highway, and runs diagonally across the township from northeast to southwest, on the high ground south of the Clear Fork. This was, probably, the first road in the township. It is here in order, to relate a few incidents connected with the struggles of these early settlers, in their first efforts at transforming the rugged wilderness into the present cultivated gardens. Space can only be given for a few that will illustrate life in that time.

Henry Nail relates, that, when a boy, he was sent to Shrimplin's Mill, with two pack-horses, upon which the grist was loaded. He started home late in the afternoon; the path was narrow and winding, so that he was compelled to drive one horse before the other, he riding the rear one. The twilight of the dense forest was fast deepening into darkness, and he made all possible haste to reach the more open country, fearing he might be intercepted by a gang of wolves. Unfortunately, the forward horse passed too near the projecting point of an upturned root, and a large rent was made in the bag of meal, and its contents scattered upon the ground. Here was trouble. He had no means of fastening the parts of the torn bag together, and, if left over night, it was certain to be devoured by hogs or other animals, besides, there was a large family at home needing it for immediate use. Something must, however, be done immediately. The prolonged, undulating howl of wolves echoed through the forest, and an occasional child-like cry, from a swamp not far away, fairly made his hair stand on end. The thought of a panther in the vicinity was not pleasant. His ingenuity being quickened, he drew several strands of hair from his horse's tail, gathered up as much of the meal as he could, and succeeded in closing the rent in the bag with the horse-hair. "I had not proceeded far on my way," said he, "when I heard the wolves quarreling over the remnant of the meal remaining on the ground, and with all my haste, by the time I reached the nearest clearing, there seemed to be a hundred of them within a few rods of me. The furious barking of several dogs belonging to a cabin near by, fortunately checked the pursuit, so that I reached home in safety."

On another occasion several young men residing on the Clear Fork started off to visit a pigeon roost, situated in a swamp near the present site of Danville in Knox County. Arriving at the swamp, and not knowing the exact locality of the roost, they separated, and, surrounding it, were to proceed inwardly until the roost was discovered, or they should meet in the center. They had only advanced a short distance when one of the party, Alexander McKee, aroused a bear that had taken lodgings in the swamp. The animal immediately rushed upon McKee, seizing him by the leg just as he reached the branch of a tree he was trying to ascend. He held on with a death-grip, and shouted for assistance. His companions coming up, the bear let go his hold, and, rising on his hind feet, faced his new assailants, ready for fight. A rifle ball through the head sent him dancing a jig, and another through the heart settled him. McKee's limb was badly lacerated, and he remained a cripple for life.

Two young men, Henry and John Nail, sons of one of the earliest settlers, went out one day to hunt their horses, which were allowed to roam in the woods in summer. They carried their rifles, and were accompanied by two trusty dogs. When several miles from home, the dogs treed a young bear, which one the boys shot and wounded. It fell to the ground and set up a piteous cry. Both had fired, and their guns were therefore empty, when the mother of the cub appeared and rushed upon the slayers of her young with savage growls. The boys had neither time to re-load or climb a tree, but fortunately the dogs came to the rescue and attacked the bear fiercely, upon which she unexpectedly beat a retreat. They carried the cub home, and had roast bear meat for dinner.

One of the earliest settlers of Worthington, Frederick Herring, erected a mill on the Clear Fork, near the present site of Newville, which was probably the second mill erected in the county, Beam's being first. The mill was resorted to from great distances by the early settlers. It was in operation nearly fifty years. Clear Fork furnished excellent water-power, and many mills have been erected from time to time on its banks. Another of the Herrings, David, erected a large three-story frame mill, about 40x60 feet, in 1841, two miles below Independence, on Clear Fork. Some years ago, this was converted into a woolen-mill, and is now owned and operated by Alexander & Zent, of Bellville. Its machinery is first class, and it is capable of doing a large business.

About a mile above Independence is a grist-mill now owned by J. & E. Plank, erected about 1820, by Jacob Myers. It has changed hands several times and been rebuilt, but is now in first-class condition and doing good work. About 1850, Jacob Armentrout erected a grist and saw mill one mile northeast of Independence. It is now owned and operated by D. J. Rummel. These are all water-mills, and have saw-mills connected with them. In addition to these, saw-mills have been erected in various parts of the township on the swift little streams and near running springs.

The first brick house was erected by William Darling, about 1828. The first voting place was at the house of Robert Phipps, on Section 17.

The religious sentiment of this township is well developed; the larger portion of its people being connected with some church. It is found here as elsewhere, that, long before the people were able to erect churches, they had preaching at private houses and the old log schoolhouses that began to spring up here and there in the woods, as the settlements grew. Among the earliest ministers were the Rev. James Johnson, of Mansfield; William Hughes, George Leiter, Shadrick Rhuark, George Hiskey and others. One of the earliest church buildings was the old Union, or United Presbyterian, located on Section 8; erected, and the society organized, through the efforts of Rev. James Johnson, who was its first Pastor. The first and most influential members were the Laffertys, Halfertys, Ramseys, John Robinson, William Wilson, Peter Alexander and others. The first building was a hewed log, and in after years (about 1831), a frame addition was built. This building and organization have long since disappeared, and nothing remains to mark the spot but the graveyard in the vicinity.

In an early day, the Rev. William Hughes established the church now known as the Clear Fork or Bunker Hill Presbyterian Church, located on Section 23. Rev. Hughes preached many years to the people of this neighborhood before the building was erected. The first building was a hewed-log, and the second, the present frame, was erected about 1850. To this church belonged, in an early day, the Moffats, Prichards, Hazletts, McClellands and others. Some of its early ministers were Luke Dorland, Frank Eddy and W. W. Anderson. Rev. Mr. Ferris is the present minister, and the membership is about forty. A Sunday school is conducted at this church during the summer, and has been for many years.

One of the early churches is the English Lutheran, erected about 1832, on Section 6. The first church was a small frame, costing about $400; the second one, which is also frame, was erected in 1876, at a cost of $1,000. It is sometimes known as the "Harsh Church," and among its first members were the Harshes, Berrys, Crouses, William Harter, Daniel Teeter and others. Rev. Seidel and George Leiter were the first ministers. The membership is at present about fifty. An active Sunday school is also connected with it, the membership averaging fifty pupils.

A little later, about 1834, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Newville was organized. The early and influential members of this church were James Morrison, Daniel Carpenter, Peter Keller, David Shellenberger, George Fickle, James Hazlett, and the wives of these gentlemen. The early meetings of this organization were held at the houses of James Morrison and George Fickle. Shadrick Rhuark was the first minister. Charles Reed and John Mitchell were also early ministers. Rev. Lion is present minister, and the membership about forty. An active Sunday school is connected with the church, the average attendance being about fifty.

The United Brethren Church, located on Section 4, was organized about the same time, or, perhaps, a little before the Methodist of Newville. The first church was log, erected about 1840. It was afterward weatherboarded over, and thus used until the present brick was erected. The early members were the Suaveleys, the Snyders, the Easterlys, Henry Muck and wife, Peter Leyman and others. The early meetings of this organization were held at the residence of Lawrence Easterly. George Hiskey was among the early ministers. The present membership is about fifty, and a live Sunday school is in operation.

In an early day, the German Reformed society erected a log church on Section 22, which was used by them many years. The Baymillers, Cramers and others were influential in this church. It is now extinct, the church decayed and the society disbanded. A Baptist society was organized and a church erected in Independence, in 1852. The Rev. George Wilson was the founder, and called himself an "Independent Baptist." The Halfords, Samuel Phipps, John Wise, Samuel Wilson, David Teeter and others were the first members of this church. The early ministers besides Wilson, were Benjamin Tulloss and Revs. Jenkins and Dye. No regular services are at present held in the church.

The Methodist Protestant Church of Independence was erected in 1857, at a cost of $800, though the society was organized four years before. The early meetings were held in the old log schoolhouse, located on the farm of Thomas B. Andrews, near town.

The early members of this church were Thomas B. Andrews and wife, David and Jane Spear, William and Letitia Huston, Catharine Myers, Jane and William Lamley and Richard Gatton. Rev. N. T. Brown, of Fredericktown, was the first Pastor.

The present minister is W. S. Carns, and the present membership about forty. A large and active Sunday school is connected with this church.

The Albrights are numerous and strong in this part of the county, having three separate and active organizations and churches near Independence. This church prefers to be known as the Evangelical.

The first of these churches is the Zion, or Four Corners Church, located on Section 18, on the Kanaga property. This building was erected about 1860, at a cost of $1,000. The principal original members were Michael, Jacob, John and David Secrist and their wives, Uriah Lafferty, Elizabeth Kanaga and Jonathan Plank. The first ministers were John Seibert and Rev. Bomgardner.

At present, the church is weak. Rev. Mr. Mesey has, at this time, charge of these three churches.

The Salem Church was organized about 1850, and the building erected in 1862, at a cost of $1,000. Its early members were Samuel, Elias and Henry Moore, Jacob Shaffer and Jonathan Freeheffer and wife. The present membership is about forty, and this, also, is about the average attendance of pupils at the Sunday school.

The Mount Sinai Evangelical Church is located in Independence. This is an offshoot from the other two, and was organized and a building erected in 1875. The building and parsonage cost about $3,500. Its principal organizers were Franklin Oberlin, Joseph Clever, James Near, Mary Clever, Sarah Thompson, Robert McEwin, Jonathan and George Freeheffer, and a majority of the members of their families. Bishop Stubbs preached at the dedication of the church in December, 1875, and Joseph Rosenberger was their first Pastor. The present membership is about seventy-five.

A Sunday school was organized in 1876, A. Hitchman being first Superintendent. It now numbers about forty-five members.

Three villages have been laid out in Worthington, two only being in existence at present.

The first of these, Newville, was laid out by Frederick Herring in December, 1823, on the northeast and southeast quarters of Section 3, on the Clear Fork near the mill which he had previously erected. His cabin, erected some years before the town was laid out, was the first dwelling on the town site. Abraham Nye was among the first residents, and was instrumental in inducing Herring to lay out a town. He purchased a few lots and erected the first hotel, one of the first buildings in the place. The first people who settled in the place were the Hogans, Daniel Carpenter, George and Jacob Armentrout and Luther Richard. The latter erected the second hotel. Daniel Stoner erected the first blacksmith-shop. The first Herring mill has not been in operation for twenty years or more, but another mill erected later by the Herrings is in operation, and is owned by the Garretts, of Mansfield.

The first schoolhouse—a log one—was erected about 1826. Samuel J. Kirkwood, late Governor of Iowa, was one of the first teachers here. In 1830, a frame schoolhouse was erected, which was used until 1870, when the present neat, two-story frame was erected. It contains two rooms, two teachers, and accommodates sixty or seventy pupils. The population at present is about three hundred. There is one store, one hotel, and the usual number of mechanics and working people. Most of the inhabitants live by farming and various trades. The town is beautifully situated on the Clear Fork, being inclosed by high, rocky bluffs. It is a rather sleepy little place, being undisturbed by railroads, or the rush and roar of the business world. It passes a dreamy existence, inclosed by a country rugged, picturesque and charming. One of its honored citizens is Dr. J. P. Henderson, now in his seventy-eighth year, a graduate of Washington College, Pennsylvania, who, curiously enough, elected to pass his life in this quiet village, in the practice of his profession, among these simple, honest people, surrounded by his books and his cabinet of relics and curious things, in which he has always taken great delight.

In March, 1845, a town named Winchester was laid out on Section 9, on the Clear Fork, by Noble Calhoun. A few houses were erected, but the land upon which it was platted, being heavily mortgaged, was sold at Sheriff's sale, and the place never amounted to anything.

Independence was laid out on the northwest quarter of Section 20, January 12, 1848, by Daniel Spohn. In the early days of its existence it was nicknamed "Spohntown" and "Squeelgut," but was named Independence by Thomas B. Andrews, rather in a spirit of defiance at the attitude of Bellville, which was not a friendly one to the aspiring village. Andrews was its first Postmaster, and, before the town was laid out, kept the office in his house near the site. After the town was laid out and a warehouse erected, he moved the office into the warehouse. The land upon which the town stands was entered on the 13th of May, 1820, by William Simmons. The town plat was surveyed by Joseph Hastings. Mr. Andrews was instrumental in getting the town established and laying it out, taking a lot for pay.

The first store was started by William Lamley, who kept groceries and whisky. It may be remarked here that Independence is a temperance town, and will not allow (since the Bowersox affair mentioned in another chapter) any saloon to exist in the place. Lamley's store was a small frame building, near the railroad, in the north end of the town. He afterward erected a building, which is now occupied by Downing as a store, and started a hotel. Joseph Geary kept this hotel, the first in the place. David Teeter erected a second hotel. John Diltz, a carpenter and present Postmaster, erected the next dwelling, and shortly after, Daniel Garber erected a shoe-shop on Main street. William Clapper erected the next building and kept boarders.

Gen. G. A. Jones came up from Mount Vernon, erected a warehouse, started a store and dealt in produce. In 1856, I. W. Pearce purchased the warehouse of Jones, conducted the business, and was also railroad agent. This gentleman at present keeps the principal store in the place, and does what banking business is necessary.

When the town was laid out, the schoolhouse —a frame—was a short distance south of town. In 1868, the present building was erected. It is a two-story frame, and occupied by two teachers and about one hundred pupils.

In 1877, the village was incorporated, the first Mayor being J. M. McLaughlin; the second and present Mayor, George W. McBee.

There are four dry-goods and grocery stores, one hardware, one stove and tin, and several smaller establishments; two churches, one hotel, and a proper proportion of mechanics and professional men. The population is about four hundred. The place stands in a great bend in the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad.

One of the noted places in this township, whose history dates back to early Indian days, was known by the seemingly profane name of "Helltown." It is thus described by Dr. J. P. Henderson:

"Helltown was situated on the right bank of the Clear Fork of the Mohican, one and a half miles below Newville. It occupied a high bank, where the stream is low and easily forded. A few hundred yards above, on the margin of the creek, issues a fountain of water, and near the same place, on the opposite side, Switzer's Run empties into the Clear Fork. The ground on which the village stood is a rich, alluvial and loamy bottom, extending some distance to the east, and, when first seen by the writer, was overgrown with wild plum-trees, three apple-trees, evidently volunteers; and all around and east of the town stood a luxuriant growth of wild cherry-trees of the size of a man's thigh, and interspersed were a few very large sugar maples. This bottom had evidently been cleared, and at an early day small conical elevations were to be seen, presumed to have been hills where corn had been cultivated. Back almost immediately from the village, and where the ground gradually ascended from the creek, was the graveyard, where about sixteen graves were originally counted.

"This village was occupied by a tribe of Delaware Indians, who emigrated from Eastern Pennsylvania about the year 1745, and settled on the Muskingum and its tributaries, on lands granted them by their 'ancient allies and uncles, the Wyandots.' Having in Pennsylvania commingled with the German and English population, and acquired a smattering of the language of both, they gave the name of the village partly to each. Hell, which in the German means clear, united with town, in the English, the words designating simply, but not profanely, the town on the Clear Fork. As to how many huts and wigwams stood originally in this 'Old Plum Orchard,' as it was sometimes called, tradition is silent. When first seen by the writer, there were but three cabins standing, old and dilapidated, without chimney, floor, door, window, or roof, and one of the corners broken down. Depressions in the neighboring grounds, however, were supposed to have been the sites of other buildings.

"In the spring of 1781, Col. Williamson and his party from Western Pennsylvania massacred the Moravian Delaware Indians at Gnaudenhutten, in Tuscarawas County, treacherously and in cold blood. When the inhabitants of Helltown heard of the massacre, they were panic-stricken and fled to Upper Sandusky, the home of the Wyandots, for protection. The panic having subsided, they returned to Helltown, and, after some time, removed, founded and located at Greentown, in Ashland County, near the Black Fork, about two miles above Perrysville. Helltown was not wholly abandoned, but was used until 1812 as a hunting encampment, and, being but five miles distant, the trail between the two places was deep and well marked. A trail also existed, on the first settlement of the whites, from Helltown to Mansfield, and crossed the one from Greentown to Upper Sandusky. A trail, too, from Helltown to Jeromeville doubtless originally existed, but, being disused, was necessarily obliterated in the lapse of years from 1782 to 1812.

"The route of Col. Crawford and his army in their march to Upper Sandusky in 1782 has not been definitely located. It is believed they marched from Odell's Lake to Mansfield, but the course they took between these two places is not yet determined. In a conversation the writer had, many years ago, with the late Col. Solomon Gladden, of this county, he stated that Col. Crawford and his party passed through Helltown on their way to Upper Sandusky, and that such was the statement to him of Capt. Munn, his uncle, who was an officer in the expedition. Of this conversation the writer took a minute shortly after, and as to the fact he cannot be mistaken.

"In and about Helltown many Indian relics, ancient and more modern, have been found, such as arrow and spear heads, pipes of stone, pottery and copper, a stone drinking cup, copper lancets, leaden bullets, a scalping-knife, fragments of gun-barrels and brass mountings of gun-stocks, etc. Many of the graves have been opened, as they were superficial and easily dug into, but, so far as informed, nothing but bones more or less decayed were found and exhumed.

"It may be added, that the site of Helltown, with its graves, has for years been part and parcel of a cultivated field, and when last seen, early last summer, the ripening wheat was waving over the former habitations of the departed and the dead."

Dr. Henderson also notes the history of an old Indian, known as Lyons, who once inhabited this part of the country. The Doctor says:

"Old Lyons was the last of the Indians who had 'a local habitation and a name' in Worthington Township. His dwelling was on the farm of David Rummel, near where it connects with that of John Ramsey, and contiguous to the Clear Fork. It resembled a double barn, and consisted of two cabins constructed of buckeye logs, with a small ground spot intermediate, and the whole covered with basswood bark.

He was aged, dark, large for an Indian, of coarse features, high cheek-bones and large protruding lips, so much so, indeed, that, when ornamented with a miniature silver clevis and double-tree in each ear, and one in his nose, and smoking from the bowl and through the handle of his iron tomahawk, he presented rather a grotesque appearance. He was, in a word, regarded by the whites as extremely homely and repulsive.

"Where he originated, or from what tribe he sprang, is unknown. He claimed land in Wyoming Valley, said 'the whites had no right to it, never bought it; that it was his.' He requested Judge Kinney to procure lawyers, institute suit and oust the intruders, promising the Judge one-half if successful. Such action, it is needless to say, was never undertaken.

"That he was superstitious, would appear from one of his dreams, its supposed baneful import, and its antidote. He dreamed that he was bitten by a mad hog, which he interpreted to mean that he would, while hunting the next day, be bitten by venomous snake, unless he plunged into the water the next morning, and thus broke in upon and nullified the vision of the night Hence his voluntary immersion in the Clear Fork the next morning before sunrise, though the water was cold, and he emerged from it shivering and perfectly chilled.

"That he was sarcastic, is also apparent from another incident. Mrs. Cunning, a young woman living near Hemlock Falls, and but recently married, discovered him looking between the logs of the cabin before he entered the house. At this she became frightened, as her husband was from home. On seeing her trepidation, he laughed outright, and exclaimed, 'Very old woman, very much scared,' and left the house repeating the exclamation time and again at the top of his voice, and in a chanting tone, till he disappeared in the forest.

"He called on Mrs. White, said he wanted a loaf of bread then on the fire baking. On being promised it so soon as baked, he exhibited to her a string of what he called the tongues of white persons, stating he had ninety-nine, and was determined to have another, a woman's, and then he would have 100. On her exhibiting some alarm, being alone, and her husband absent, he said it was not her tongue, but that of a woman who had mistreated or insulted him.

"He was very communicative to Mr. Johnston, and talked to him often and long. He stated that, during the Indian troubles and hostilities on the frontier, he was accustomed to approach the cabins of the settlers at the dead hour of night, when the inmates were asleep, and, silently as possible, punch a hole through the clay daubing of the chimney into the fireplace, and then attaching a charge of powder to his ramrod, thrust it into the embers, when the powder would flare up, and illumine the inside of the dwelling, and enable him to count and discriminate the inmates, and if he discovered two men within he withdrew, but if but one, he entered the house and killed him, and then dispatched the women and children. He said, also, that at Crawford's and St. Clair's defeats, he had tomahawked white men till his arm was 'sick,' and denounced Gen. Wayne as 'bad man, swear that he could be heard three miles.' The only scalp exhibited by him, however, was that of a fairhaired person, and said by him to have been taken from the head of a British officer.

"Notwithstanding this bloody record, he had the credit of saving the life of Mr. Flack, taken prisoner in Ligonier Valley, afterward taken to Detroit, redeemed by the French, and by them restored to his home and his family. While a prisoner in the hands of the Indians, and apprehending death at the stake, or otherwise, Lyons came to him and told him the only way to save himself was to strip off his clothes immediately, go to bed, cover himself up, and pretend to be asleep. He did so, and soon the savages dashed into the apartment where he was, whooping, yelling, and careering through the room, in high and full feather, as though pandemonium itself was unchained. What all this had to do in saving the life of Mr. F., is a mystery we cannot solve. Suffice it to say, such was his lifelong conviction.

"On removing from Worthington Township, Lyons had his hut at Jeromeville, but frequently revisited Greentown and his former neighborhood. N. Flaharty, Esq., saw him with a hunting party camped on Pine Run, below his house, as late as 1818 or 1819, when too old to hunt, and he said he was one hundred and sixty. He sold wooden ladles, made by himself, to Mrs. F., had a new suit at the time, and a new gun, procured from a gunsmith who lived near Cadiz, on the Brush Fork of Stillwater.

"It is said to have transpired that, on leaving a tavern in Lexington, Lyon was followed and killed by a party of roughs, probably stimulated by whisky. He had boasted of having ninety-nine tongues of the whites, and wanted one more, which, if obtained, he would die content, or be willing and ready to die. This was construed as a design on his part to murder some one, and it was determined to anticipate him by putting him to death. Soon after, he was found dead, and lying beside a log, near Hanewalt's mill, on the Clear Fork."

AUBURN TOWNSHIP.*

SURVEY—ORGANIZATION—PHYSICAL FEATURES—JEDEDIAH MOREHEAD—TWO HERMITS—FIRST SETTLERS—FIRST ROAD—GEORGE MYERS—CHURCHES—VILLAGES.

THE territory comprising Auburn Township was surveyed by Maxfield Ludlow in 1807. Until April 3, 1820, it was part of Plymouth Township, which was twelve miles long from east to west, and six miles wide. At that date, this territory was divided by a line through the center north and south, and the west half called Auburn, making it six miles square. Thus it remained until the county of Crawford was organized, in February, 1845, when it was again divided by a line north and south, the four tiers of sections on the west being given to Crawford, leaving the remainder (two tiers) attached to Plymouth. December 6, 1849, Cass being erected out of the east part of Plymouth, these two tiers of sections were attached to the latter, and the whole of Auburn (four by six miles in extent) remained in the northeast corner of Crawford County. It is said to be one of the finest townships of land in the State for agricultural purposes, the soil being deep, dark, rich, and the general surface comparatively level. It slopes gently to the north, and, in an early day, before the white man began its cultivation, the northern tier of sections were mostly under water for the greater part of the year, as they bordered on the great cranberry marsh lying to the east and north. It has always been considered "swamp land" throughout its northern part, but since it has been cleared of timber and underdrained, it appears as the finest of farming land, there seeming to be no end to the strength and productiveness of its soil. It is watered on its eastern side by Cuykendall's Run, which rises in the southern part, and, passing directly north through its eastern sections, enters Huron County about the center of the northwest quarter of Section 3. On the west side is Honey

* Now in Crawford County, formerly in Richland.

Creek, which also rises in the southern part, and, passing north the entire length of the township, enters Huron County through Section 6. The Mansfield, Coldwater & Lake Michigan Railroad passes across the southwest corner, and Tiro, on this road, is the only railroad station and post office within its limits.

One of the earliest settlers in this territory was Jedediah Morehead, a hunter and trapper. He might not, in those very early days, have been called a settler at all, as he roamed about a good deal, squatting here and there wherever he found the best hunting, though later, he moved his family—a large one—to Vernon Township, where he purchased land and settled, on Section 1. He hunted the swampy region about the cranberry marsh (the old settlers called it "the mash"), where he found bear and all other four-footed wild animals plenty, as well as wild geese and ducks. Even to this day it is is a good ducking-ground. In the northern part of the township, and extending into Huron County, is a narrow, irregular strip of dry land jutting into the swamp; and, upon the extreme point of this strip, Morehead built a small brush cabin, which is well remembered by the later settlers, in which he spent much of his time. This is yet known as "Morehead's Point." There is little doubt that he was the first settler and built the first cabin in the township.

Two very singular characters, bachelors and hermits, named Varnica and Wadsworth, were among the earliest residents of the township. They could hardly be termed settlers, as they lived here in caves, and did not associate with their fellows. They were solitary in their habits, and sufficiently eccentric to be called "crazy" by those who knew them.

Varnica was a German, a fine scholar, and in his youth, it was said, was a military commander in Europe, but for some unknown reason, fled to the wilds of America, and his entry of land in Auburn Township was among the first. He had money, which he kept hid in the most singular places, and lived a hermit until quite old, when he took a fancy to a young man by the name of Robert Wilson, with whom he resided until his death.

After his death, very little money could be found until they came across a will, written in German and properly witnessed, giving his fine quarter of land and some money to his friend, Wilson, who was also made executor and enjoined to give the residue of his money, several thousand dollars, to poor, aged and friendless females, and to make the distribution in small sums. This provision of his will was surprising, as during his life here, he was never known to notice the opposite sex, and appeared to detest them. The will also revealed the place where the money was secreted; $2,200 in gold was discovered in a gate post, in the top of which a large hole had been bored, and the coin dropped in, after which the hole was plugged with a pin of the same wood as that of the post. Other smaller sums of money were found in singular places. This strange man died about forty years ago. From the clause in the will regarding women, and other evidence, it is conjectured some one of them had something to do with shaping the man's life. Young Wilson, who has also been dead about thirty years, executed the will with commendable fidelity, and relieved the wants of many poor women.

The other man, Wadsworth, was also a fine scholar, a graduate of Yale College, and studied theology. He also made one of the first entries of land in Auburn, and lived in a cave on his land. He was singular in appearance as well as action, being very round shouldered, so much so that it amounted almost to deformity; but was one of the most muscular men in the township. He was an expert hunter and trapper, and a miser. He raised chickens, melons and vegetables, and peddled his own produce later, when settlers came in and villages began to spring up. He would take a bag of melons on his shoulder, a basket of eggs on his arm, and walk several miles to Plymouth or other places, and peddle from house to house. He was strictly honest and conscientious in his dealings, careful in making change even to a cent or the fraction of a cent. He was never known to laugh, or even smile, and never owned or would use a horse, always carrying his grist to mill upon his back, and returning with the meal or flour the same way. He died about 1840, without a will, leaving considerable money and a fine quarter-section of land, which was taken possession of by his rich and aristocratic Boston relatives, who had frequently visited him, and tried to induce him to return to Boston. His was, also, a severe case of "woman."

The early settlers were John Pettijohn and William Greene, who came as early as 1815; Charles Morrow, 1817; Adam Aumend, Rudolphus Morse and Resolved White, who came from New York in 1819; John Blair, 1821; A. T. Ross, 1825; John Webber, 1817, Section 13; Jacob Cuykendall, John Blair, Van Osdoll, Van Fleet, Ruckman, Capt. Joseph Gardner, John Bodley, Jesse Ladow and Samuel and Robert Hanna. These were all here before 1820, except Ross. These early settlers are all dead. They and those who immediately followed them were generally New Englanders, New York Hollanders and Pennsylvania Scotch-Irish.

Probably the first road opened through the township was one cut by a portion of the army of Gen. Harrison, in 1813–14, from Mansfield to Fort Ball, near the present site of Tiffin, which passed diagonally across it from southeast to northwest. This route was frequented by Harrison's couriers with despatches to the East. One of these couriers, well known to the settlers, was George Myers, a German, who afterward laid out New Washington, in Crawford County, and called it after the "Father of his Country." A fact may be here noted, that nearly all the early settlers in Plymouth and Auburn Townships were soldiers of the war of 1812. They must have been attracted to this beautiful country, and returned to it after the war.

Auburn is well supplied with churches, there being seven, at present, within its limits. One of the oldest religious organizations is that of the Presbyterians, at Waynesburg. Rev. M. Wolf, a missionary, organized this society in a very early day. Their meetings were held in private houses and schoolhouses; no church building was erected.

The Baptists organized a society about 1830, Deacon Howe was the founder and leading spirit. About 1840, they erected a small frame church on Section 16, which they occupied until January 1, 1880, when they dedicated a new one which had been erected at a cost of $2,500.

The Methodists have a church called "Pleasant Grove," in the southern part of the township. The United Brethren also have a church near Tiro in the southern part of the township, erected in 1878, at a cost of about $1,500. In the same neighborhood, on the Plymouth and Bucyrus road, is the Lutheran Church, organized about 1855. One of the earliest Methodist churches was located on Section 8; it was used for many years, and sold to the Winebrenarians, or Church of God, who organized about 1874, and have since occupied it. The "Good Will" Methodist Church, is located on Section 20, and was organized about 1850. The church was not erected until 1870; Thomas Milliard, who came from Pennsylvania and settled near here in an early day, was the founder. During 1879, the Catholics erected a church at a cost (including parsonage) of $4,000, on Section 7. But two towns have been started in this township—Waynesburg, on the west side, which became a village with two or three business places, but was killed by the passage of the railroad through Plymouth, and Tiro on the Mansfield, Coldwater & Lake Michigan Railroad. This latter is generally called DeKalb station, Tiro being the name of the post office.

CHAPTER LXIV.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.*

CRESTLINE—ITS EARLY HISTORY—VERNON STATION—THE FIRST RAILROAD—LAYING-OUT OF CRESTLINE—FIRST BUILDINGS—A RAILROAD TOWN—INCORPORATED—LIST OF MAYORS—EDUCATIONAL MATTERS—THE CHURCHES—SECRET SOCIETIES—GROWTH, HOTELS, ETC.—MILLS—THE PRESS—WATER WORKS.

THIS is comparatively a new place; a little more than thirty years ago, it was not thought of; consequently the "oldest inhabitant" is not in particular requisition in gathering its history. Men comparatively young remember when its site was a good place to hunt deer. It is generally flat about Crestline, and it has something of the appearance of a frontier railroad town, being very muddy when muddy anywhere, though its general elevation is about the average; indeed, when laid out it was thought to be the highest point above sea-level in the State, hence the name—Crestline.

John Newman, who lived in the village of Leesville in 1840, says he was in the habit of coming down into the "big woods," where Crestline stands, to hunt deer, which were plenty, even at that late day; also wolves, wild turkeys, etc. It was a country very similar to certain portions of the Black Swamp, in the western part of the State, to-day; flat, swampy, but the soil is rich and very valuable, when cleared of timber and cultivated. A Dutchman by the name of Harvey Aschbaugh, owned eighty acres of this valuable land, including the present site of Crestline. All that appeared to him valuable on the tract were the game, the timber, and a fine sulphur spring, the latter at present within the corporation limits. His cabin stood on the narrow, winding, muddy road that led from Mansfield to Leesville—the first road through there.

North of the Aschbaugh place, was a cabin occupied by a negro family, who owned the eighty acres upon which they resided. Where this family came from, what was their name, or what became of them, is not remembered. Their cabin stood at what is now the west end of Main street, and was erected after the Aschbaugh cabin. About the time the negro cabin was erected, another cabin was erected directly east of it, on the adjoining eighty acres, at what is now the east end of Main street, by Samuel Rutane, who had entered and purchased the land from the Government. Still further east of Rutane, was the cabin of Benjamin Ogden, on another eighty-acre lot; further east still, on the Leesville and Mansfield road, stood the old log house called Seltzer's Tavern, in which, for many years, while all was a wilderness around, one Seltzer kept weary travelers in his rude loft, and fed them on "corn pone" and venison.

This was about the state of affairs, when the wave of civilization approached, and came down upon the doomed settlement, through the blare of a head-light and the fuss and thunder of a locomotive.

John Adam Thoman—a well-known name in Crestline—first saw the locomotive coming; he could see the headlight through the dense woods in the direction of Cleveland, and knew it would strike that wilderness and scatter the wolves, deer and timber, like chaff before a hurricane, and immediately began his preparations to meet it and accept the inevitable. He purchased the eighty acres belonging to the negro family, paying what was then a high price, $600, and immediately began laying out a town in the woods. The road, however, struck the farm of Rutane, at the east end of Main street, where the company erected a little shanty for a depot, and called it Vernon Station. Rutane sold his place to a man named Conwell, who erected the first house near the station. It was on Main street, west of the railroad. Conwell afterward sold it to Rensselaer R. Livingstone, who laid out a town around the station. Here, then, the present town had its beginning, and many houses were erected around Vernon Station before Crestline was thought of. The Livingstone and Thomas Additions, as they are called (though really Crestline is the addition), are now the larger part of the town.

The Cleveland, Columbus & Cincinnati Railroad has the honor of establishing Crestline. The charter for this road was granted in 1836, but it was not until February, 1851, that the road was opened for traffic. In 1850, however, trains were running as far as Shelby and Crestline. At that time, the road was a wooden one, comparatively speaking, the improved "T" rail not having been invented. For three years, Vernon Station had an opportunity to spread itself before it was interfered with by another railroad. It grew to be something of a place. A post office was established there; a hotel erected, called the Ohio House, kept by Michael Heffelfinger; Messrs. Newman & Thoman started the first store, and kept a general stock, such as is usually kept in a country store. A grocery and provision store was also established about the same time, by Thomas Hall, who was a contractor, and engaged in building a section of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, then being rapidly pushed forward, and who established the provision store partly for the purpose of supplying his employes. Thoman and Livingstone were busy during these years, selling their lots, advertising the town, and erecting dwelling-houses for the accommodation of new residents and the numerous employes of the different contractors on the two roads.

On the 11th of April, 1853, the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad was opened for traffic from Allegheny City to Crestline, a distance of 187 miles. Unfortunately for Vernon Station, it was for some reason ignored by this road, which crossed the Cleveland, Columbus & Indianapolis road a half a mile or more south of it, and immediately there was a rush for the junction. Thereafter Vernon Station was "left out in the cold."

Previous to this, a party of gentlemen concluded that money could be made out of this point on the road by laying out a new town. The names of these gentlemen were Jessie R. Strong, the chief engineer of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad; Thomas W. Bartley, of Mansfield, and John and Joseph Larwill, of Wooster—the latter gentlemen being well known in the early history of Mansfield and this county, as surveyors. Whether these gentlemen exerted sufficient influence to change the direction of the road slightly so that it should strike the other road at a point so far from Vernon Station as to give room to plat a new town, is not certainly known, but may be reasonably inferred, from the fact that the chief engineer was interested in the project, and that these gentlemen were connected with each other by marriage, if not by blood relationship. Be this as it may, it was perfectly legitimate. They purchased the eighty acres of Harvey Aschbaugh, across which it was determined to run the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, and laid out a town at the junction, which they called Crestline, and thereupon Vernon Station was abandoned. It, however, made little difference to the latter, as the two towns soon grew together and the line between the two plats was obliterated. The two railroads built a frame union depot which stood there in the mud a squatty, ugly-looking thing for years. In 1864, the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad erected the present fine brick edifice at the junction, which is used as a depot and hotel.

Jessie R. Strong erected the first building in Crestline. It is yet standing close to the junction, on the north side of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, is two and a half stories in height, and one hundred and twenty-five feet in length. When erected, it was considered one of the finest hotels in the State; was lighted with gas manufactured on the premises, and furnished with bath-rooms, hot and cold water, etc. It was called the Crestline House. It has been in continual use as a hotel, and is now called the Gibson House. Its first proprietor was Jacob Brown.

Soon after the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad was completed to Crestline, the Bellefontaine road made its appearance. It was first built between Galion, Ohio, and Union City, Ind., and afterward extended to Indianapolis and to Crestline. It was opened for business in July, 1853. For some years, it used the track of the Cleveland, Columbus & Cincinnati between Galion and Crestline, and then passed into the control of the latter road, which was thereupon changed to Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati & Indianapolis, thus giving the road direct connection with St. Louis and the West. Crestline became immediately an important railroad point and grew rapidly, notwithstanding the unfavorable location.

Mr. Hall, the contractor before mentioned, erected the second building, on the north side of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, on Thoman street, and started a store, abandoning his business at the station and opening out a general stock at his new location. The first lots were sold at auction, and the first one sold was purchased by G. W. Emerson, who afterward sold it to Mr. Babst, who erected upon it the Emerson House—the second hotel. Mr. Emerson kept this hotel many years. In March, 1854, an addition was made called East Crestline, which is within the present limits of Richland County, the main part of the town being now in Crawford County, though when platted, Crawford had not been formed, and the territory was included within the limits of Richland—the line of Richland then being about four miles west of Crestline.

It will be seen that Crestline is emphatically a railroad town; the crossing of two important trunk lines caused it to spring into existence, and the principal dependence of the place for its growth and prosperity was, and is to-day, upon these roads. There is an excellent farming country around it, but, Galion being only four miles away, Bucyrus and Shelby a short distance on either side of it, there was no occasion for its existence but the railroads; take these away, and its farming community is not sufficiently strong, perhaps, to save it from a lingering death. But the same power that breathed into it the breath of life, yet sustains it. The Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad shops are located here, and these, together with other shops and foundries that have sprung up in connection with the railways, employ several hundred hands continually, that must be fed, clothed and lodged. The town was incorporated March 3, 1858, David Ogden being elected first Mayor, and William Kinsley first Recorder. The first Trustees were William P. Kernahan, E. Warner, Robert Lee, M. C. Archer and William Boals. The following is a list of the Mayors, who served in the order in which their names appear: Silas Durand, Samuel Hoyt, Jacob Staley, Nathan Jones, Robert Lee, Jacob Staley, Dr. J. M. McKean, George W. Pierce, Nathan Jones, A. E. Jenner, Nathan Jones, Dr. Edwin Booth and Dan. Babst, the present (January, 1880) officer.

In educational matters, the town has not been neglected. Before the arrival of the railroads, a district log schoolhouse stood about one and a half miles northwest of the present site of the town, on the Leesville road. This had been sufficient for educational purposes for many years, and a school was taught there as late as 1850. In 1853, when Crestline began to grow, a two-story frame school building was erected in the east part of the town, and shortly afterward, a similar one was erected in the west part. These two buildings served the purpose until 1868, when the present union-school building was erected. This building, which is an ornament and honor to the place, was designed by Mr. Thomas, and built by Miller, Smith & Frayer, contractors. The Board of Education, under whose supervision it was erected, were Jacob Stahle, President; D. W. Snyder, John Berry, S. P. Hesser, C. Miller and N. Jones. The cost of the building and furniture, together with the two lots upon which it stands, was $30,000. It is located on Columbus, between Union and Cross streets; is of brick, three stories above basement; seventy-two feet in length by sixty-five in greatest breadth; contains eleven schoolrooms, besides six smaller rooms used for offices, library, etc., and will accommodate 500 pupils. Adjoining the lots on which the building stands, is the school park, which consists of six town lots, and is beautifully diversified by gravel walks, evergreens and shade trees. In the center is an elegant fountain, around the base of which are six hydrants for drinking purposes. The building and surroundings are, indeed, well calculated, with an efficient corps of teachers, to improve the mental faculties of its pupils in a superior manner. Not only has the intellectual training of the children been well provided for, but the spiritual needs of the older people have been well attended to, there being at this time seven churches in the town, occupied by as many different denominations.

The Methodist Episcopal is the oldest of these, having been organized about 1844, in what was then called Minnerly's Schoolhouse (now McCulloch's), and, as will be seen, some years before Crestline had an existence. John Lovitt was a prime mover in this organization. The church which is now standing on Thoman street was the first one erected by the society; it was erected in 1854 through the influence and personal exertions of Mr. Minnerly, David Thrush, David Kerr, Francis Cornwell, Mr. Howland, Francis Peppard and David White, who, with their wives and portions of their families, were a few of the first members. L. A. Markham is the present minister, and the present membership is about two hundred and fifty. The Sunday school connected with this church is one of the largest and most active, with a membership of 230.

The Trinity German Lutheran located on Main street was organized about 1851, in the schoolhouse; the members of the first organization being Michael Webber, Henry Lambert, George Hass, B. Faltz, John Keller and others. In 1861, they erected the present church edifice at a cost of $3,000. The first minister was the Rev. Meiser, who was followed by M. Hatsberger, H. Smith, Rev. Haley and Martin Berkley, the latter being present Pastor. The present membership is about seventy. An active Sunday school is connected with the church, conducted by the officers, with a membership of sixty. Its organization is coeval with that of the church.

In 1879, Peter Sleenbecker, George Shaffer, George Snyder, George Sleenbecker, Michael Reh, Charles Christman, C. Morkel and others, becoming dissatisfied regarding some matters of church government, withdrew from the above church, organized a second German Lutheran society, and erected a church on East Mansfield street, costing about $4,000. Their first meetings, before the erection of their church, were held in the old German Reformed Church, which kept its doors open for them. Rev. Shultz, of Galion, was their first minister, and was followed by Rev. Voegele, their present Pastor. Their

Sunday school was organized about the same time, its present membership being about thirty. The church is not a strong one in numbers.

The English Lutheran Church was organized in 1854, by Rev. A. F. Hills ; the members of the first organization being David Lichtenwalter, A. W. Stine, William Kinsely, David Keplinger, E. Warner, David McCartel, D. Minich, Jane McCartel, Hannah Stine, Elizabeth Warner and Isaac Miller. Their early meetings were held in the private residences of the members, though the present frame church was erected about the same year the organization occurred. A. F. Hills was first Pastor, followed by A. B. Kirtland, D. I. Foust, H. K. Fenner and B. F. Crouse, the present minister. The present membership is about one hundred and seventy. The Sunday school is large, active and healthy, numbering about one hundred and sixty pupils. Henry Erkley is Superintendent.

The German Reformed Church, situated in the northwest part of the town, was organized in 1858, by Rev. M. Stern, of Galion. A few of the original members were David Bluem, Phillip and Frederick Eichorn, and Joseph Bender. For three or four years, their meetings were held in the English Lutheran Church ; but in 1862 they erected a brick church costing about $1,900. Their first minister after Stern was John Rettig, followed by John Winter. F. W. Marcus is present Pastor, with a membership of 130. The organization of the Sunday school was coeval with that of the church, and now numbers about one hundred and twenty-five pupils. William Lampert was first Superintendent.

The St. Joseph Catholic Church is located on North street. The present organization dates back to 1858, though services were held by different priests of the church many years before this. The few Catholics who were scattered among the early settlers were frequently visited in this way, and meetings called at their residences, some years before they were gathered into a church. The church was organized by Father Gallagher, of Cleveland, who was Pastor at Mansfield at the same time. The early meetings were held in the houses of Mike Dunn and Laurenz Raindl, who, with Patrick Dunn, Mr. McNamara, J A. Barrel and Thaddeus Seifert, were the original members. The present frame church was erected in 1861, at a cost of $1,000. The membership numbers about one hundred families, and the Sunday school about two hundred children. There is a day school in connection with the church, with one hundred and seventy pupils in attendance.

The Presbyterian Church of Crestline was organized February 20, 1855, in a small schoolhouse, by Rev. I. N. Shepherd, of Marion, Ohio, and Rev. Silas Johnson, of Bucyrus. Previous to this, however, Rev. Luke Dorland had collected the Presbyterians of the place, and preached to them at various times and places, for six or eight months. After the organization, meetings were held occasionally in the different churches of the village, already erected. The principal original members were John S. and Jane Smith, Alexander, Margaret and Martha J. Patterson, John and Mary White, Sampson Warden, John S. and Eliza Jane Banbright, B. and Mary Mansfield, and Samuel R. and Isabella Graham.

The present church was erected in 1866–67. Rev. J. P. Lloyd was the first minister after the organization was effected, and continued in charge thirteen years. He was succeeded by Rev. James Shields, who remained seven years. The present Pastor, Rev. W. W. Macamber, succeeded Shields, November 18, 1879. The present membership is 200. A. M. Patterson is Superintendent of the Sunday-school, which is a large, active one, embracing 175 pupils, and was organized August 10, 1862.

The several secret societies at present in existence in the town are the Crestline Chapter, No. 88, R. A. M.; Arcana Lodge, No. 272, F. & A. M.; Crestline Lodge, No. 237, I. O. O. F.; Crestline Division, No. 8, Conductor's Brotherhood; Labonah Encampment, No. 123; Crestline Commandery, No. 21.

Crestline has grown rapidly, and therefore is not as healthy as towns around it that have grown slower. Some of its streets are narrow, winding and dirty; a large majority of its business houses near the railroads, where they are the most conspicuous to public view, are weather-beaten, tumble-down frames, jumbled together, big and little, in a triangular and and almost every other shape, caused by trying to build them facing the railroads, and at the same time preserve the points of the compass. In fact, its general appearance is more that of a frontier town than of a solid, substantial, well-laid-out, healthy Ohio town. In addition to its railroads, their shops, etc., there are about a dozen hotels, and as many more boarding houses, some of which eke out a precarious existence boarding railroad employes. The hotel business has been overdone, and some of them are standing idle, or have been converted to other uses. The Continental, kept by Russell & Co., is the only first-class house. It is heated by steam, lighted by gas, manufactured on the premises, has every convenience for the comfort of its guests, and charges accordingly. One excellent feature is the establishment in the building, above the gentleman's waiting-room, of a reading-room, where the waiting passengers may while away a pleasant hour, among the latest magazines and papers, in a pleasant room, instead of spending their time and money at the numerous saloons which still defy, not only in Crestline but everywhere else, the "boasted civilization of the nineteenth century."

The hotels are mostly located in the neighborhood of the depot. At present, there are five dry-goods stores, three drug, one book, three jeweler, and a large number of grocery stores and saloons; two banks, one publishing house, an iron foundry employing half a dozen hands, two wagon and carriage shops, one planing-mill, five lawyers, six physicians, besides the usual number of mechanics in every department of labor. The Continental Flouring Mill was erected in 1860, was a small affair, but has been in many different hands, improved many times, and is now capable of turning out 100 barrels of flour every twenty-four hours. It is owned by Russell, Daily & Co. It is the only grist-mill in the town. Two saw-mills were erected in an early day (between 1850 and 1856), one by Lang & Miller, the other by S. B. Coe; both were within the limits of the present corporation; both have disappeared. It is a noticeable fact that the stationary saw-mills once so plentiful in the county are fast disappearing. They will probably become a curiosity to the next generation, especially those propelled by water-power.

The Crestline Advocate was established in July, 1867, by A. Billow, its first editor and proprietor. It is independent in politics. Mr. Billow died in May, 1876, since which time the paper has been conducted by his son, D. C. Billow. It is successful and permanent. Its presses are run by water-power furnished by the water-works.

It once had a competitor called the Independent Democrat, established by Jenner & Reed in 1873. It advocated the politics its name indicates and changed hands several times during its fleeting career. It was moved to Bucyrus in the summer of 1876, and shortly afterward discontinued.

One of the best of Crestline's institutions is its water-works; they are simple and inexpensive in construction, and furnish the purest of water, which, no doubt, contributes largely to the health of its citizens. The water is brought in a large wooden pipe from a powerful spring three miles east, in Springfield Township—mentioned in the history of that township. It has a fall of 150 feet, from which considerable force may be obtained. It is carried over the town in smaller pipes, and used for all purposes.

CHAPTER LXV.

POLK TOWNSHIP AND GALION.*

LOCATION—NAME—EARLY SETTLERS—FIRST ROADS—AN INDIAN CAMP—MILLS—FIRST SCHOOLS AND TEACHERS—EARLY RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES AND PREACHERS—THE ESTABLISHMENT OF GALION—FIRST POST OFFICE AND STORE—CHURCHES—THE RAILROADS AND BANKS—THE PRESS.

THIS township was surveyed by Maxfield Ludlow, and bears the name of President Polk. It once belonged to old Richland, but is now the southeastern township of Crawford County. It contains twenty-one sections of land, considered among the richest in Central Ohio. Galion, the only important town, is located in the southern part of the township. Its early settlers were principally from New York and Pennsylvania.

Benjamin Leveredge and his sons, James and Nathaniel, together with George Wood and David Gill, came in 1817, and were the first settlers on the present site of Galion. To these were added, in 1818, Benjamin Sharrock, and, in 1819, Asa Hosford. The Leveredges did the first clearing and put up the first cabins. Benjamin Leveredge's cabin was erected of unhewn logs, near the spring, now within the corporation limits, on Atwood street. That of James Leveredge stood on the site now occupied by David Mackey's fine brick residence on Atwood street, and Nathaniel's stood near the center of the present public square. The old well on the square, filled up several years ago, was dug by him, and was but a few yards from his cabin door.

The vicinity was heavily timbered in those days, and rather swampy. This was twelve years before Galion was laid out.

The Whetstone Creek (formerly called the Olentangy) passes a little north of Galion, and upon land north of this creek, George Wood and David Gill settled in 1818, erecting their cabins near the old army road over which troops passed in 1812, which was, probably, the first road cut through the township by white men. The site of these cabins is yet marked by a few apple-trees.

In those early days, the Wyandot Indians had a camp on the south side of the Whetstone, east of the Catholic Cemetery. They were peaceable, and rendered valuable assistance to the whites at their log rollings, and in the construction of their primitive homes.

Asa Hosford, yet living near Galion, relates that he employed these Indians to assist him at a log rolling, the only pay required for their services being a plentiful supply of whisky. In the evening, after working hard all day, and being slightly intoxicated, they, at his request, executed a war-dance at his house. They placed one of their number, named "Buckwheat," in the center of the cabin floor, and began their dance in a circle around him. They became greatly excited, but Mr. Hosford had taken the precaution to conceal their arms, that they might not be able to commit any serious outrage. After a time, they dragged Buckwheat roughly from his seat, threw him upon the floor, and one of them, placing his foot on his neck, imitated the operation of taking his scalp, and of plunging their knives into him; and Buckwheat played his part well, going through all the necessary motions of a dying white man.

These early settlers were followed in 1820 by Nathaniel Story and Father Ketteridge, the latter living with the former, who was a trapper and hunter, and erected his cabin near Reisinger's Corners, west of town. Rev. James Dunlap came in 1822, and Nathan Merriman in 1824, the latter erecting, in the following year, the first distillery in Polk Township. It was located near the spring, before mentioned, and was familiarly known throughout the settlement as the "still house."

* Now in Crawford County, formerly in Richland.

About the same year, the first grist-mill in the township was erected by John Hibner on the land now owned by John Burgener. The buhrs were made of "nigger heads." Near the railroad bridge may yet be seen the ruins of this mill. The next mill was built by Asa Hosford, a few years after, on his farm southwest of Galion, which is yet in operation and owned by him.

The first hotel was kept by Asa Hosford in 1824, on the J. R. Clymer property west of town. The large orchard adjoining the property was raised from the seed by Mr. Hosford. He was elected in 1826, the first Justice of the Peace, and was, from the time of his location, one of the prominent men, visiting the State capital frequently in the interest of this section, which owes much of its prosperity to his efforts. He circulated a petition to have a road cut through the woods from Mansfield to Upper Sandusky, and was afterward instrumental in getting a north and south road, from Columbus to Lower Sandusky, through this settlement. The opening of these roads aided largely in developing and settling the country. These roads intersect at Reisinger's Corners, and Main street, in Galion, was formed by that portion of the east and west road, which passed within the present limits of the corporation. Its original course was, however, changed nearly fifty years ago. When laid out, it diverged to the northward at the corner of East Main and North Columbus streets, following the meanderings of Whetstone Creek to a point beyond the present eastern limits of Galion.

The first schoolhouse was erected near the residence of C. S. Crim, on West Main street. in 1822. It was of round logs, and was modeled after the generality of cabins in those days. The first school teacher was David Gill, who, however, only taught two or three weeks, when Asa Hosford took the school and continued it to the end of the term. The next schoolhouse was of "scutched logs" (which means that the logs were lightly hewed on the outside after the building was erected) and stood on the ground now occupied by the old graveyard on West Main street. This building was also used for religious worship. This building having been destroyed by fire, the next school was taught in a log building on the site of Joel Riblet's residence.

The first religious meeting in the township was held in Benjamin Leveredge's cabin, near the spring. It was a Methodist meeting, at which Russel Bigelow, who organized many churches through this county, in an early day, preached a most eloquent sermon. Though possessing a limited education, Bigelow was very eloquent, and one of the most remarkable of the pioneer preachers.

Galion was laid out September 10, 1831, by Michael and Jacob Ruhl, whose father had entered several quarter-sections of land in the neighborhood. The original plat consisted of thirty-five lots, and extended from the Ristine Block, which covers Lot No. 1, to the alley west of the old frame meeting-house on West Main street.

The first post office was established in 1824, and Horace Hosford was first Postmaster. Mr. Hosford says if they averaged one letter per day, they did well. When this office was established, the inhabitants could not agree upon a name for the town. It had previously been numerously and variously named, but was best known as Goshen, Greensburg, Moccasin and Hardscrabble. The matter was submitted to the Postmaster General, who christened it Galion.

The first store was kept by Horace Hosford, who carried a general stock. At this time, the town was situated at Reisinger's Corners, but buildings were rapidly erected upon higher ground to the eastward, where the new town had been laid out by the Ruhls. The public square became the favorite spot, and the best buildings at the Corners were removed thither. In 1832, Asa Hosford erected upon this square the first frame house in the township. He also erected the first frame barn on what is known as the I. R. Clymer property, west of town, where he had kept the first tavern.

At this time, Jacob Ruhl kept a tavern where the Sponhauer Block stands, and his brother Michael kept the village store in a double log cabin on the Central Hotel corner. The first saw-mill in the township was erected by Jacob Ruhl in 1836, on North Market street, near the bridge.

In the log schoolhouse on Joel Riblet's lot, was organized the first Sabbath school in Galion by Mrs. Sarah Ruhl and Mrs. Dr. Johnson. They were Lutherans, and the first religious services of the Lutherans were held in this building.

In 1839, the first brick block was erected by Davis & Bloomer, in which they carried on the dry-goods business for many years. The building is yet standing on the northeast corner of the public square.

The old red brick church, that stood many years on the corner of North Union and West Church streets, was erected in 1840, by the Lutheran and German Reformed congregations. The Lutherans afterward purchased the Reformed interest. This was the first church, and the Rev. F. J. Ruth, yet living and preaching, officiated at the laying of the corner-stone. The first Pastor was Rev. John Stough.

The same year work was commenced upon the old Methodist Church, yet standing on West Main street, and it was the first fully completed and ready for worship. The ground upon which it stands was donated by Father Fellows, who was an active worker in the church for many years.

Rev. Francis Clymer held the first United Brethren services in 1851, in the old Lutheran Church.

St. Joseph's Catholic Church on East Main street, though no longer used for worship, was erected in 1851. Rev. Peter Kreush of the Shelby settlement was the visiting Pastor.

There are at present, eleven churches in Galion, viz.: the Methodist Episcopal, corner of Columbus and Walnut streets; United Brethren, Walnut street, between South Market and Columbus streets; English Lutheran, Columbus street, between Main and Walnut; Baptist, Walnut street, between South Market and Union; Presbyterian, South Market street; German Reformed, West Main street; German Lutheran, South Market street; German Methodist, corner of South Market and Atwood streets; Episcopal, Union street, between Atwood and Walnut; St. Patrick's Catholic, North Liberty street, and St. Joseph's Catholic, North Washington street.

Galion became an incorporated village about the year 1840. Joel Tod was the first Mayor.

Between 1850 and 1854, two railroads, the Bellefontaine & Indianapolis, and the Cleveland, Columbus & Cincinnati, were completed to Galion. These were afterward consolidated, and have been for years under one management. Their shops were located at Galion, and these, employing a large number of hands, have materially added to the wealth of the place. The Atlantic & Great Western Railroad put in an appearance at Galion in 1863. These three roads with their immense business and shops constitute the life and vitality of the town, which has made some mighty strides since they were completed. Sixty-five per cent of its population, of over five thousand, are railroad employes, and the average monthly sum paid out by these roads, to these employes, is over $40,000.

Many large, fine brick residences, churches and business blocks have been erected in Gal-ion within a few years. In 1854, the brick schoolhouse on the corner of Liberty and Church streets was completed, and the first union schools organized by David Kerr, Superintendent. In 1869, the present large, brick school building was erected, costing over $75,000.

The First National Bank was organized in 1864, and the Citizens' Bank in July, 1866.

The Galion Weekly Times was started in 1855, by John H. Putnam, who moved the office here from Union City, Ind. The first numbers were printed in the building now owned by James Martin, on East Main street. Dr. D. Alger became a partner, and the name was changed to the Galion Weekly Train. It was independent in politics. In a short time, I. V. D. Moore bought out Alger. When the campaign of 1856 opened, Mr. Moore retired and Jacob Riblet became a partner. The paper became Democratic, and was called the Galion District Democrat. In 1857, Andrew Poe purchased Mr. Riblet's interest. Mr. Putnam soon after left it, and it was sold out on execution. In 1864, it was bought by Matthias brothers, and the paper edited by P. Schnur, who was soon succeeded by H. S. Z. Matthias, and the name changed to Galion Democrat. The paper was soon after abandoned, and the office continued as a job office until July 6, 1865, when the Weekly Review was established by Mr. Matthias as an independent sheet. In 1871, it was purchased by John C. Covert, of the Cleveland Leader, who changed it to a Republican paper, and its name to the Galion Democrat. In 1872, it was purchased by G. W. De Camp, and in 1874, passed into the hands of its present proprietors, A. D. Rowe and F. E. Coonrod, and given its present name, Galion Review.

October 31, 1872, the Galion Sun, an independent weekly newspaper, was established by its present editor and owner, George T. Ristine, and was soon enlarged to its present size. Steam power was introduced in December, 1875, making it the first steam printing house in Galion.

CHAPTER LXVI.

VERNON TOWNSHIP.*

ORGANIZATION—TOPOGRAPHY—HUNTING GROUND—FIRST SETTLERS AND SETTLEMENTS—WEST LIBERTY—DE KALB—LIBERTY CHURCH.

VERNON TOWNSHIP was organized March 9, 1825, out of the north half of Sandusky, and was, at this time, six miles square, including part of what is now Sharon Township. It remained in this shape until February 3, 1845 (the date of the erection of Crawford County), when it was reduced to its present dimensions—six miles long from north to south, and three miles wide; belonging since 1845 to Crawford County.

It is an excellent township of farming land, being generally level or gently rolling. In its primitive condition, it was covered with a vigorous growth of hard-wood timber, and the land was generally swampy, but clearing and underdraining have rendered it very productive.

It is well watered by the tributaries of the Sandusky River, one of which—Loss Creek—rises in the southeast part, and, running northwest until near the center of the township, turns southwest, entering Sandusky Township and Sandusky River through Section 19. The general course of its waters indicates a gentle inclination of its surface to the west and north.

*Now in Crawford County, formerly in Richland.

Bear's Marsh Creek waters the northern part, running west into the Sandusky River.

This territory was largely used by the Delawares as a hunting-ground, quite a band of that tribe under the chief Wingenund, having, for many years, a permanent camp on the Sandusky River, near Leesville. The great, dark woods and thick undergrowth formed excellent hiding-places for wild animals.

The township was first settled by white men about 1820, the first settlers generally following the Indian trails across Sharon Township, which soon became public highways. The wave of civilization gradually advanced from Mifflin Township, in the eastern part of the county, in 1809, to Sharon and Vernon, in 1818 and 1820.

The settlers generally came from Western Pennsylvania, but a few were from New England, and, in later years, a large number of European Germans settled in this part of the country.

The first settler was George Byers, in 1820, and the next, so far as known, was George Dickson, in 1822. Dickson was a single man, but returned to Pennsylvania, married, returned here with his wife in 1823 and is yet a resident. The next settlers were Eli Arnold, William McClelland, Jonathan Dickson, Dennis Orton and James Dickson.

In 1826, the township polled ten votes.

Andrew Dickson and William McClelland were the first white children born in the township, February, 1826.

The first assessment was made in 1823, by Adam Aumend, there being at that time only three families in the township, and but two of these had any property subject to assessment.

The first orchard was planted in 1825.

There are two small towns within its limits, West Liberty and De Kalb. The former is located on Loss Creek, on the southeast quarter of Section 17, and was laid out May 28, 1835. It contains at present but one store and a few dwelling-houses.

De Kalb was laid out November 21, 1838, on Section 5, by David Anderson. It is about the size of West Liberty. When the Mansfield, Coldwater & Lake Michigan Railroad passed across the northeastern part of the township, in 1871, a station-house was erected a short distance from De Kalb, called "De Kalb Station." The little business of the place is now generally transacted at this station.

A church called the "Liberty Church," or "Church of God," is located in the northern and eastern part of the township, and was organized in 1850, by Elder William Adams. A few of the first members were Christopher Shade, Daniel Baker and wife, and Joseph Tombleson and wife.

The early meetings of the society were held in the schoolhouse. A frame church building was erected in 1860, at a cost of $800. A few of the early ministers were William Adams, William Shaffer and David Shriner.

The present minister is William Burchard, and the membership is about thirty.

A Sunday school was organized about the time the church was erected. Samuel Dean was the first Superintendent. He was succeeded by Solomon Gross, who was Superintendent many years. This school is yet in successful operation, with a membership of about fifty.

CHAPTER LXVII.

CLEAR CREEK TOWNSHIP.*

ITS FORMATION, BOUNDARIES AND PHYSICAL FEATURES—ANTIQUITIES—EARLY SETTLERS AND SETTLEMENTS—MILLS—CHURCHES—SCHOOLS—SAVANNAH.

PRIOR to June 4, 1816, Mifflin Township was eighteen miles long, from north to south, and six miles wide. At that date, two-thirds of this territory, being the northern part, was organized into a township called Milton. This territory was again divided by a line through the center, east and west, October 15, 1818, and the north half called Clear Creek. Thus Clear Creek was formed out of the north half of Milton, at the date above mentioned, and was originally six miles square. Upon the formation of Ashland County in 1846, Clear Creek was again divided, four tiers of sections on the east being included in Ashland County, the other two tiers remaining in Richland. This last division reduced the township to its present dimensions—four by six miles. That part of it which remained in Richland was enlarged and called Butler. Clear Creek was surveyed and subdivided into sections in 1807, by Maxfield Ludlow, who, with James Hedges, surveyed a large part of the country in this vicinity. Ruggles Township lies immediately north of it, and Orange east. The southern part of the township is described by the surveyor as second rate; other parts, however, as fine farming land. It was originally covered with all the different species of hard wood.

The center of this township forms the dividing ridge between the head-waters of the Mohican and those of the Vermillion Rivers, the latter stream rising in a beautiful little lake that lies near the eastern center of the township, on Sections 13 and 14, called Savannah Lake. The surveyor found this lake bearing northwest and southeast, and two Indian trails leading in the same general direction across the township—one bordering the lake on the south, and the other north of the lake, crossing the northeast corner of the township.

Clear Creek possesses more relics for the archæologist than any township in Ashland County. The nature of the soil in the valleys enabled the Mound-Builders to erect earthworks, the remains of some of which are yet visible. When Mr. John Bryte settled on Section 26, nearly half a century ago, he found an earthwork, in shape a square, very few of this shape being found in Ohio. The east and west sides were about three hundred feet, and the north and south sides two hundred feet long. At that time, the banks were about three feet high, and twenty feet wide at the base; large trees were growing upon them. There was a gateway upon the southwest side, leading to a fine spring. The plow has nearly obliterated the ancient work. Half a century ago, when Mr. Thomas Sprott settled on Section 35, he found a very old and curiously constructed mound. It stands in the midst of a ten-acre field, a large elevation of ancient glacial drift, composed of rounded, well-worn bowlders, gravel, sand and light loam; lifts its head about one hundred and twenty feet above the surrounding valleys. The country around differs from it in soil. The surface on the top, from north to south, is about one hundred and twenty-five feet long, and from east to west, about one hundred feet, and level, with the exception of two mounds about twenty-four feet apart, nearly four feet high and thirty feet at the base, which stood on the top of this hill at the time Mr. Sprott came. Large trees were growing upon and around the mound, which must have been centuries old. For many years after he came, there was yet a small trench around the south of the mound. His curiosity being excited, he at one time dug down about five feet, and came upon a lot of stones curiously piled over a lot of human bones. While removing these, he came upon about a peck of Indian red paint, which he removed and found a large collection of bones in a tolerable state of preservation. He replaced the bones and filled up the grave. This was no doubt an Indian grave, and the paint had been placed there for use in the happy hunting-grounds.

The first permanent settlement in this township occurred in the spring of 1815; a year or more previous to this, however, several of those who afterward settled permanently came and entered their lands. The land office was then located at Canton, Ohio. The majority of them were from Western Pennsylvania, Washington and Westmoreland Counties; a few were from Virginia and a few from Eastern Ohio.

The names, date and place of settlement so far as ascertained are as follows: Rev. James Handy, 1815; entered three quarters of land on Section 11, where the town of Savannah was afterward located; John and Richard Freeborn, 1815, Section 10; John Aton, 1821, Section 26; Abel Bailey, 1818, Section 16; John Bailey, father of Abel, 1818, Section 14; John Bryte, 1819; David Burns, 1815, Section 23; James Burgan, 1826; James Chamberlain, 1823, Section 25; John Cook, 1822, Section 24; Thomas Cook, 1822, Section 3; John Cuppy, 1819, Section 15; Patrick Elliott, 1817, Section 12; Elias Ford, 1819, Section 22; Isaac Harrout, 1819, Section 16; Abraham Huffman, 1815, Section 31; John McWilliams, 1817, Section 26; Daniel Huffman, 1816; Jacob McLain, 1822, Section 11; John McMurray, 1819; Jared N. Slonacker, 1824, Section 23; Thomas Sprott, Sr., 1823, Section 35; Peter Vanostrand, Sr., 1816, Section 35; Thomas Wright, 1823.

Of these early settlers, John Bryte afterward held several offices of trust in the township; was its first Clerk, and was twice Director of the Ohio Lunatic Asylum. David Burns served in Capt. Martin's company of militia, on duty at the block-house at Beam's mill. James Haney was Justice of the Peace, and also, probably, the first clergyman in the township. The wife of Patrick Elliott was the first school teacher. It will be observed that the Rev. James Haney, the two Freeborns, John and Richard, David Burns and Abraham Huffman were the very first settlers, arriving in 1815. The first three mentioned and William Shaw built a keel-boat in Washington County, Penn., where they resided, and, placing their families and household goods thereon, floated down the Ohio and up the Muskingum and its tributaries as far as they could, landing near the present site of Jeromeville, on Jerome Fork, and transporting their goods and families thence to their future homes in the township, through the woods, on pack animals.

The Messrs. Freeborn named the principal creek in the township "Clear Creek," from the beauty of its waters, and after this creek the township was named. These Freeborns also planted the first apple-seeds, from which sprang some of the oldest orchards.

The nearest mills in those early days were Shrimplin's, on Owl Creek, thirty or forty miles south, and Odell's, in Wayne County, about thirty miles distant. In 1822, Thomas Ford erected a "horse-mill," the first in the township. The first saw-mill was erected by Joseph Davis, on Clear Creek, about one and a half miles west of Savannah. It employed one saw, and ran about five months in a year. The first grist-mill run by water-power was erected in 1824, by John Hendricks. It was a primitive affair, but did a large business. It stood on Vermillion River, about a mile northwest of Savannah. A second grist-mill was erected in 1827, by Thomas Haney, on Mulhollen's Run, near town.

For many years the first settlers, though religiously inclined, were not able to erect a church building, meetings being held in private houses. The house of Thomas Ford was a prominent place of public worship for many years; the pioneers — men, women and children — often traveling six or eight miles on foot to attend religious services; lighting their way through the woods with torches of hickory bark. A church was finally erected near Mr. Ford's house, in 1830. It was called "Ford's meeting-house." It was a very good church, and would seat about four hundred people. The first meeting held in it was on the occasion of Thomas Ford's funeral. The sermon was preached by the Rev. Elmer Yocum. Rev. James Haney was the first minister, and for many years a prominent man, serving several terms in the Ohio Legislature. The first religious meeting was held in his house, near the present village of Savannah.

The first school in the township was taught by Mrs. Patrick Elliott in her own house, in the winter of 1817–18. Rev. Haney, William Shaw and John Hendricks were among her pupils. It was many years before any school building was erected, the first one being erected on the site of Savannah about 1818. Another was erected in 1820, in the southern part of the township, on the land of Abraham Huffman. The first teacher here was Robert Nelson, and his scholars were Abraham Huffman, Isaac Van Meter, Peter Vanostrand, Sr., Robert Ralston, Andrew Stevenson, Mrs. Treckle and David McKinney. One of the earliest schoolhouses was also erected near Ford's mill.

The first physician is Dr. Cliff, who came to Vermillion (Savannah) in 1823.

The township was a famous hunting-ground for the Seneca and Wyandot tribes of Indians; they were generally inclined to peace, and did not disturb the settlers.

The first election was held at the house of John Freeborn.

Savannah, the only town, was laid out in 1818, by John Haney, son of Rev. James Haney, on the latter's land. It was first called Vermillion, but more frequently went by the name of "Haneytown," after its founder. Its first settler was Joseph Fast, a carpenter. The first schoolhouse was a log building, erected on the northeast corner of the town plat. Jacob McLain was the first brickmaker and hatter in the town and township; Garnett Whitelock, the first blacksmith. Some of its first settlers were John Downer, a cabinet-maker; Eliphalet Downer, hatter; William Bryan and Joseph Marshall, blacksmiths, and James Duff, weaver; they all lived in log houses. In 1836 or 1837, the names of town and post office was changed to Savannah; and from this time until 1840 the town was at the zenith of its prosperity; there were three stores, two public houses, and a supply of mechanics, all doing a fair business. It was a leading stopping place between the productive country south and the market on the lake, north. Several efforts were made between the years 1830 and 1840, to erect a new county, with Savannah as the county seat; this failing, the town declined for several years. In 1858, an institution of learning called the "Savannah Male and Female Academy" was started, which seemed to put new life into the town.

There are several churches in the town: The Presbyterian, established in 1833, by Rev. Robert Lee; the Free Presbyterian, organized in 1851, by Rev. F. M. Finney; the United Presbyterian, organized in 1858, by Rev. J. Y. Ashenhurst; the Associate Reformed Congregation, organized in 1831, by Rev. James Johnson, and the Disciple, organized in 1830, by Elders David Bryte and Joseph Harvout.

CHAPTER LXVIII.

GREEN TOWNSHIP.*

SURVEY—THE VILLAGE OF GREENTOWN—ORGANIZATION—THE MAN GREEN—ANDREW CRAIG—HENRY MCCART'S FAMILY—REV. JOHN HECKEWELDER—EARLY SETTLERS—WAR OF 1812 AND BLOCK HOUSES—INDIAN TRAILS—SCENERY—WATER COURSES—SITE OF THE OLD INDIAN VILLAGE—DISTILLERIES—MILLS—CHURCHES—PERRYSVILLE—EDUCATION.

THIS township, though now belonging to Ashland County, occupies a conspicuous and important position in the history of "Old Richland," on account of the famous Indian encampment, known as Greentown, established on Black Fork within its limits.

Gen. James Hedges surveyed this township in 1807. No white man's cabin was then standing on its soil, unless it may be some stray French trader or renegade American had built a hut among the Indians at Greentown. Mr. Hedges ran his lines through the dense forest, marking out the little squares that spoke of the coming of the superior race.

In running the south and east boundary, he seems to have been much embarrassed over the variations of the compass. He re-surveyed, but could not determine the cause of the variation. He stumbled upon the Indian village in the forest, upon the wild and pretty Black Fork, and stuck a corner-post in one of their cornfields, while the red men looked on and wondered, but did not disturb the intruders who were thus audaciously measuring off their land. This was an old village; there were old men and women here, but of another race; a race doomed to follow the deer and buffalo into exile and oblivion. The number of Indian families residing in the village is not given, but must have been fifty or sixty. The village was situated on a rolling slope of land extending down to the Black Fork, and the graveyard and village together must have occupied four or five acres. Indian trails, much used, were found along the streams, tending northwest. The land was heavily timbered with hard wood, and is to-day good farming land.

The first organization of this township occurred August 7, 1812, it being then attached te Knox County. Madison Township then included all the territory afterward embraced in Richland County, and out of this Green was created, being first about thirty miles long from north to south, and a little less than twelve miles wide. In this condition it remained two years; meanwhile, Richland County was formed, which included Green and Madison Townships, and new boundaries were immediately established. Green was cut down August 9, 1814, to a territory twelve miles square, in the southeast corner of the county. The following year (1815), it was cut in two by a line running north and south through its center, the east half retaining the name of Green, being then six by twelve miles in extent. In this shape it remained until 1818, when it was divided by a line running east and west through the center, and thus reduced to its present dimensions—six miles square—Hanover being created from the southern half.

The name—Greentown—originated from the fact of the settlement of a Tory—Thomas Green—on the spot, where the Indians assisted in building the village. This man, if he may be considered a settler, was the first white settler in this part of the country. He came here about 1783. He had been engaged with the

* Now in Ashland County, formerly in Richland.

British and Indians at the massacre at Wyoming, and for this crime, was afterward compelled to flee for his life and bury himself in the great forests of Ohio. He can hardly be considered a settler in the proper sense of that word. He was a renegade, and did not come here with the intention of settling in a particular spot, and did not probably remain for any length of time in one place. He was here years before any survey had been made; he could not and did not enter land; he did not, probably, want land, or a permanent home; he resided with the Indians, and probably hunted, fished and traded for a living. He might have planted corn and tilled the soil to a certain extent, but so did the Indians. His name, however, is perpetuated in the village, and, if deserving of any notice whatever, it belongs in the history of this township. He cannot be classed with the Girty and other renegades, as they were nomadic in their lives, while Green appears to have stopped on the Black Fork, at least long enough to establish a permanent village, and had influence enough among his dusky neighbors to give it his name. Green may have been the first white man in the county, but it is not likely, as Girty, McKee and other renegades were through here thirty or forty years before the surveyors came.

Mr. Norton, in his history of Knox County, makes Andrew Craig the first settler in Green Township, and also in Ashland County. He gives this description of Craig: "He was, at a very early day, a sort of frontier character, fond of rough and tumble life, a stout, rugged man, bold and dare-devil in disposition, who took delight in hunting, wrestling and athletic sports; a 'hail fellow, well met' with the Indians then inhabiting the country. He was from the bleak, broken mountainous region of Virginia, and as hardy a pine knot as ever that country produced. He was in this country when Ohio was in its territorial condition, and, when this wilderness was declared to be in the county of Fairfield, the sole denizen of this entire district tabernacled with a woman in a rough-log hut close by the little Indian field, about a half mile east of where Mount Vernon now exists, and at the point where Center Run empties into the Ko-ko-sing. There Andrew Craig lived when Mount Vernon was laid out, in 1805; there he was upon the organization of Knox County, its oldest inhabitant, and there he continued until 1809. Such a harum-scarum fellow could not rest easy when white men got thick around him, so he left and went to the Indian village—Greentown—and from there emigrated further out on the frontier, preferring red men for neighbors."

If the above is a true picture, even Andrew Craig cannot be called the first settler, or a settler at all, as he appeared to be one of those restless border spirits that do not come under the head of "settler." He did not propose to be hampered in his movements by civilization. The first settlement of the township, however, occurred in 1809, as others besides Andrew Craig came in at that time and remained. Henry McCart was in that neighborhood; and Henry Newman says that one peculiarity of McCart was that he dressed his children, of whom he had half a dozen or more, girls and boys, all alike. The dress was buckskin throughout—buckskin pantaloons and long buckskin coat reaching nearly to the knee and confined at the waist with a belt. No one was able to tell his girls and boys apart, as they all lived a good deal out of doors, and there was little difference in their complexion.

The Moravian missionary, Heckewelder, passed through Greentown, with other white men, in 1808. He says: "In the year 1808, while I was riding with a number of gentlemen through Greentown (an Indian town in the State of Ohio), I heard an Indian in his house, who, through a crevice, saw us passing, say in his language to his family:—'See! What a number of people are coming along! What! and among all these not one Long Knife? All Yengess!' Then probably observing me, he said to himself: 'No! one Quakel! (Quaker).'' It is evident that Rev. John Heckewelder and probably other missionaries had been preaching to these Indians many years, for when Mr. James Copus came and settled near them in 1809, and preached to them occasionally, he found many among them who partially understood the English language, and it was evident from their actions and conversation that they were accustomed to the holding of religious meetings. James Cunningham and Samuel Lewis were also here in 1809, and settled in the neighborhood of this village. In 1810, the following settlers were found in that vicinity, in addition to those already mentioned: George Crawford, David Davis, Frederick Zimmer, Jr., Phillip Zimmer, John Lambright, Peter Kinney, Edward Haley, John Davis, a widower, Allen Oliver, Charles and Bazel Tannehill, John Coulter, Melzer Coulter, Archibald Gardner, Calvin Hill, and their families. These did not all settle in Green Township, but a few of them did, and all settled so near each other, along the Black Fork and Rocky Fork, as to become neighbors. They were mostly of German descent, from Western Pennsylvania and Virginia. The war of 1812 stopped the emigration for a year or two, but in 1814–15 the following settlers had been added to those in Green: Trew Peter, William Brown, John Shehan, Ahira Hill, Asa Brown, Lewis, John and Adam Crossen, Stephen Vanscoyoe, Noah Custard, David Hill, Lewis Pierce, William Slater, John Murphy, Henry Naugh, John Pool, William Irvin, Moses Jones and Ebenezer Rice. Mr. Rice came in 1811, and settled on Section 29. From 1815 until 1824, the following additional names appear as settlers in the township: James Byers, Section 23; Conrad Castor, Section 22; Jonathan Coulter, Samuel Graham, Section 17; Andrew Humphrey; William Hunter, Section 26; William Taylor, Section 21; William Wallace, Section 24; John White, Isaac Wolf, Section 25; and many others, whose names are not now recalled. Abraham Baughman and John Davis were among the earliest settlers in this township—perhaps the earliest. They were here when Peter Kinney arrived, in 1810; how long they had been here, or where they came from, does not appear. Baughman, who was a man of family, lived near Greentown, while Davis, who was a widower and kept "bachelor's hall," settled on Section 31. He had been a Revolutionary soldier, and some years subsequent to his settlement in the township, was found dead on the roadside, above Chillicothe, to which place he been to draw his pension. This township settled very rapidly after the war of 1812; Greentown being located on a sort of thoroughfare, over which a majority of emigrants, seeking homes in the West must pass. The consequence was that many who intended going further west and who halted in the settlement for a day or two, remained and became permanent.

When the war of 1812 began this was, of course, a frontier settlement, and having a band of Indians in their very midst, the settlers felt a continual sense of insecurity. They knew not what moment their hitherto friendly red brothers might take a notion to massacre the entire settlement. British agents were in continual correspondence with them, and endeavoring to influence them to take up the hatchet, and put on the war paint. It was not strange, therefore, that when Martin Ruffner and the Zimmer family were murdered, the entire settlement were panic-stricken, and made all haste for the block-houses in the vicinity, and discussed seriously the matter of deserting the country entirely. There were men among them, however, who had cool heads and brave hearts, whose counsels prevailed. A few, however, left the country entirely, going back where they came from, to remain until after the war, and some never to return again to Ohio. About thirty persons from this settlement went to Clinton, Knox County, among whom were Ebenezer Rice, Joseph Jones, Calvin Hill, Abraham Baughman, J. L. Hill, and their families. Peter Kinney, James Cunningham, Andrew Craig, David Davis, William Slater, John Wilson, Peter Zimmerman, Harvy Hill, Henry McCart and Henry Nail, with their families, fled to Lewis' block-house, on the Clear Fork. Most of these families made a temporary stay at the block-house, returning frequently during the fall months, to their cabins, to look after their stock, etc. The next day after the flight to Lewis' block-house, Harvy Hill and John Coulter, who aided the fugitives in driving along most of their cattle, returned, and by the aid of the Tannehills, Olivers, and some others, the roof of Thomas Coulter's cabin was taken off, a second story put on, and it became "Coulter's block-house." This cabin was about sixteen by eighteen feet, and had been erected in 1810. It stood at the base of a bold bluff, on the bank of the Black Fork, half a mile southeast of the village of Perrysville. As soon as this block-house was completed, it was occupied by Thomas Coulter, Allen Oliver, Melzer Tannehill, Jeremiah Conine, George Crawford, and the families of these gentlemen. Thomas Coulter and Harvy Hill then volunteered to go to Wooster, through the forest, at that time a dangerous undertaking as was supposed, to secure soldiers to defend the settlement. They succeeded in obtaining a guard of eleven soldiers under command of Lieut. Wintringer, of the Tuscarawas militia of the army of Gen. Beall, then collecting at Wooster. The guard accompanied them home, and in the daytime scouted through the hills and valleys for Indian signs, and stood guard at the block-house at night. While a resident of the block-house, the wife of Jeremiah Conine died, and was buried in the cemetery at Perrysville. She was the second person interred in that ground; Samuel Hill, who died the preceding June, being the first.

With the removal of the Greentown Indians by the Government, disappeared forever the red men as a tribe from this part of the country. Two of their trails, well marked and much used, passed through the township; one from the direction of Mifflin, down the east side of the Black Fork to Greentown, where it was joined by another from the direction of Lucas; then it passed near the track of the Pittsburgh Railroad, a little north of the present site of Loudonville, continuing down the valley through Holmes County toward the Lake Fork of the Mohican. The other trail kept down the south side of the Black Fork from Greentown to the Walhonding; then to the forks of the Muskingum. These trails were evidently their great highways to the East, over which the war parties of the Wyandots and Delawares frequently passed on their marauding expeditions into the infant settlements of Eastern Ohio and Western Pennsylvania.

It is said that the scenery along the Black Fork and in the vicinity of this Indian village was of unrivaled beauty. The banks of the streams resembled a vast greenhouse, where choice flowers, flowering shrubs, and plants of every variety peculiar to this climate might be seen, growing in wild luxuriance, filling the air of all the country with sweet perfume. In May, when the trees were in full leaf, with an undergrowth of shrubbery, pea-vines, and sedge-grass, intertwined by wild grape-vines, and in the glades, black haw, red haw and plum-trees in abundance; and all echoing with the merry songs of birds and chirp of squirrels leaping from branch to branch, saluting the pioneer or hunter, rendered the scene a veritable paradise.

As may be inferred, Green Township is rich in Indian relics, and archæological specimens. These have been gathered by the hundred, and are now safely deposited in the cabinets of curiosity seekers, or in possession of the inhabitants. The plow continues to turn up a few every year. Ancient earthworks also exist which receive attention in another chapter. The soil was favorable for the erection of these works, being rolling and sandy in places, while streams and springs of water are abundant in every direction. The Black Fork enters the township from its western borders, flowing in a southeastern course until it reaches Loudonville in Hanover Township. Messrs. Coulter, Oliver, Rice and others, in an early day, constructed flat-boats, freighted them with pork, flour and whisky, and ran them to New Orleans. These boats would average about 15 feet in width, 50 feet in length, and would carry 40 or 50 tons. Clear Creek runs about a mile through the southwest corner; and Honey Creek originates in the Quaker Springs, near the southeast line of Vermillion Township, and pursues a southwardly course through Green, terminating in the Black Fork.

Where the village of Greentown stood, there is now, and has been for many years, a cultivated farm, and there is nothing special to mark this historic spot. A monument should be erected here while there are yet those living who can point out the location. It is about two and a half miles up the Black Fork from the town of Perrysville. John Shambaugh has for many years owned the farm upon which the village was located, but has recently sold it.

There were the usual number of distilleries in the township in an early day, before transportation of any kind gave an outlet to produce. Corn was about the only marketable thing the farmer could raise. This would bring the money at the distilleries. These gradually went out of existence, as canals, and finally railroads, made their appearance, and public opinion strengthened against them.

Several mills have been erected, from time to time, in the township. The settlers first went to Mount Vernon for their grinding, and later, to the mill at Newville. The "Darling" mill, on Clear Fork, was erected probably as early as 1818 or 1820. The "Stringer" mill was erected in 1842, on the Black Fork, one mile below Perrysville—now owned by William Endslow. One of the early mills was erected by Isaac Meaner in the northeast corner of the township; it is now operated by a Mr. Wolf. One of the early mills was also located on Honey Creek, three miles northeast of Perrysville; it was erected by Jesse Vanzile—now owned by A. J. Royer. The mill now owned by William Ward, two and a half miles west of Perrysville, is located on a large spring. The first mill in this place was erected by William Clemmens. This was subsequently taken down and the present one erected by Nicholas Swearengen.

Church matters have not been neglected, there being five churches in the town and township. Rev. John Heckewelder was probably the first preacher within its limits, visiting, as has been mentioned, the Greentown Indians as a missionary at a very early day. James Copus, who was killed by these Indians, was also one of the earliest preachers. Outside of the town are two churches—one formerly a Methodist, located in the northeast corner, organized and the house erected about 1837. The society becoming feeble, the church was purchased by Christians of different denominations, and has since been used for general church purposes. The other is the Greentown Baptist Church—first a brick, erected in 1837, two and a half miles northeast of Perrysville; this was pulled down in 1879, and a frame erected at a cost of $1,700.

Perrysville contains three churches at present. The Presbyterian was one of the earliest in the township, the organization dating back to 1818. No building was, however, erected until 1833. In 1865, a new frame was erected costing about $2,500.

The Baptist Church seceded from the old Greentown Baptist Church, organized and erected a frame church building in 1865, at a cost of $2,300. The Methodists for many years had a class in Perrysville, but no building until 1873, when they erected the present frame.

Perrysville was laid out, according to the statement of Mr. Rice and other old settlers, in 1812, though the plat does not appear on the records until three years later. About the time it was laid out, the battle on Lake Erie was fought by Commodore Perry—hence the name of Perrysville. The proprietors were Thomas and Jonathan Coulter and George Crawford. Its first settlers were the Hills, Coulters and Tannehills, the first coming from Vermont and the two latter from Pennsylvania. There are two ancient mounds near the town, and during last year while excavating for gravel (they are constructed principally of gravel), two skeletons were found in an indifferent state of preservation.

The town contains, perhaps, three or four hundred people, and is situated on the Black Fork, and the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad, on a sandy bottom among the hills. It contains three dry-goods stores, which, however, are not confined to dry goods alone; two grocery, one hardware, two drug and one boot and shoe store; two foundries, one hotel, many shops of different kinds, and the usual number of mechanics in the various trades.

Education has not been neglected. The first schoolhouse in the town was erected on Lot No. 36, and was hewed log. The next—a frame—was erected nearly on the site of the first. The third was erected in 1854, in Coulter's Addition—a frame about 24x30 feet. It is yet standing, but is used as a dwelling. The fourth house was also erected in Coulter's Addition. It is a two-story frame, and is yet in use for school purposes. The town is now divided into two districts, the Black Fork being the dividing line.

In 1865, Prof. J. C. Sample started a select school in the Presbyterian Church. This school was a success, and in two or three years a stock company was formed and erected the present academy, at a cost of $4,000. Prof. Sample is yet Principal, and has a houseful of students, many of them from a distance. Perrysville is a quiet, orderly, pleasant village.

CHAPTER LXIX.

HANOVER TOWNSHIP.*

NOTES OF THE SURVEY—ORGANIZATION AND PHYSICAL FEATURES—EARLY SETTLERS—LOUDONVILLE—THE BANK—MILLS—THE BUSINESS OF LOUDONVILLE—SECRET SOCIETIES—THE CHURCHES AND SCHOOLS—THE PRESS—THE MAYORS.

HANOVER TOWNSHIP was surveyed by James Hedges, who commenced March 15, and ended March 25, 1807. In his notes of the survey he says: "The east boundary had much burnt woods. On the fifth mile going south, came to an old Indian boundary line, being, perhaps, the north line of Gelloway Reservation, in Knox County."

The line runs southwest across the township, and passes out nearly in the middle of Section 31. In subdividing the township, between Sections 1 and 2, he touches Armstrong's Creek, 150 links wide, running southwest. This creek is so named from Capt. Thomas Armstrong, an Indian chief, who resided in the village of Greentown, some eight miles higher up the stream. It is also described by other surveyors as the Muddy or Black Fork of Mohican John's Creek, but more popularly known as the Black Fork, or principal head of the Walhonding or White Woman's River. The junction of the Clear Fork and Black Fork is mentioned, the width being 140 links. In running the south boundary going west, he came to an old Indian path or trail leading north and south, perhaps to the Gelloway settlement of the Walhonding. The land of Hanover is described as being rugged and poor, with stunted timber, much burnt on the northeast part of the township.

Hanover was organized October 4, 1818, out of the southern half of Greene. The surface is broken and hilly; some of the lofty and precipitous hills reaching an altitude attaining the real grandeur of mountains. A considerable portion of its surface is not, therefore, adapted to cultivation, though there are many farms in the valleys not surpassed in fertility by any in other townships. A great deal of the land is better adapted to grazing. Clear Fork enters the township near the northwest corner, flowing southeasterly about five miles, when it unites with the Black Fork. As this stream is confined among the hills and the fall is rapid, it furnishes excellent water-power, which is sufficient the year round to run any number of mills. The Black Fork enters the township at Loudonville, and pursues a southwesterly course until it unites with the Clear Fork.

The early settlers of the township were Samuel Garrett, 1825, Section 11; Nathaniel Haskell, 1820; John Hildebrand, 1823; Mark Mapes, 1822; James Loudon Priest, 1810; George Snyder, 1818; Stephen Butler and family, Caleb Chappel and family, 1814.

The township being a little out of the line of travel, and not quite as inviting in appearance as some others, was not settled so early nor so rapidly.

Of these settlers, Mr. Garrett served in the Revolutionary war, in the Life Guard of Gen. Washington, and states that upon his discharge he was paid off in Continental money, which was so worthless that it would not purchase him a single meal. Mr. Haskell was one of the first merchants and millers in the township, and was engaged in freighting to New Orleans by flatboats, shipping pork, flour and whisky. Flour then cost $2.50 to $3 per barrel, and brought in New Orleans $5 and $6. Mr. Priest immortalized his name by laying out the town of Loudonville. He first settled in Lake Township, building the first cabin in that township, and becoming its first Justice of the Peace. During the Indian troubles, he erected a fort upon his premises, for the safety of his family and those of his neighbors.

Mr. Snyder was a soldier of the Revolution, and lived to the age of ninety-three.

The township sustains a lively and flourishing little city, called Loudonville, situated on the line of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad. It was laid out August 6, 1814, by Stephen Butler and James Loudon Priest; the latter gentleman purchasing the northwest quarter of Section 1, upon which Loudonville stands. The first sale of lots was made September 14, 1814.

There was one cabin on the site of Loudonville before it was laid out, owned by Stephen Butler. It had but one room, but was used as a hotel, and therefore the first hotel in the town which was laid out around it. Mr. Caleb Chappel, who settled near the town site in 1814, was Mr. Butler's nearest neighbor, and it appears that the latter was the only citizen of the place during that year. He was at that time a Justice of the Peace. Priest lived five miles east, and Mr. Oliver five miles west.

Loudonville, at one time, like all other towns in the new country, expected to be a place of note, and aspired to become the county seat. The "Walhonding Canal" was the thing that was going to make it a city, and although it excited great expectations, they were of short duration, as the project failed for want of proper financial support. Mr. Butler was the first Justice of the Peace, and the only business man in the township for a number of years. Later, Mr.

Haskell was, perhaps, the most public-spirited citizen. He early laid out an addition to the place. He erected, at his own expense, a brick building known as "Haskell's Academy," employed teachers, and by his influence and energy, kept it going for several years. He started the first bank here in 1868, which after his death was continued by his nephew, George C. Haskell. When the latter died in 1876, the business was continued by the Loudonville Banking Company, consisting of George Schauweker, William Garrett, J. W. Bull, William Campbell, J. L. Quick, J. H. Sanborn and J. W. Stacher. It is not a national bank.

One of the earliest mills in the township was that of Thomas McMacken on Clear Creek, erected in 1834.

A. A. Taylor, of Loudonville, is now the owner of one of the largest mills in that part of the country. It is capable of turning out about two hundred and fifty barrels of flour daily, and is located in one of the best wheat-growing regions in the State. In order to erect this mill, Mr. Taylor was compelled to demolish one of the first mills of the county, which had been erected about 1819, by Alexander Skinner.

Thomas H. Stewart, yet living in Loudonville, was one of the first Associate Judges of Richland County, and his wife, yet living, is the only one of the first pioneers yet remaining in the township. She was the daughter of Caleb Chappel.

The population of Loudonville, at present, is about two thousand. There are four dry-goods stores kept by William Fisher & Co., J. W. Stacher, Adam Ullman, and Frederick Arnold; three clothing stores, by Wise & Co., C. Openheimer, and Steitzel & Co.; five grocery stores, by Jacob Buckheisen, Lewis McMahon, Samuel Hess, Joseph Yuncker and John Redd. There are two hotels, two butter and egg packers, a very extensive tannery by Godfrey Schawaker; two foundries doing a small business; three drug stores, by P. Ullman & Co., Leopold & Co., and M. Clough; two hardware stores by Hartupee & Reed, and Priest & Frankheiser; three stove and tin stores by Henry Pippet, G. G. Leopold and Daniel Prutzman; three boot and shoe establishments by C. Petot, John Long and A. Barker; two newspapers, the Democrat and the Loudonville Advocate.

In addition to the above, there are many other small business institutions of different kinds, and the usual number of mechanics and laborers.

The secret and benevolent institutions are the Hanover Lodge, No. 115, A., F. & A. M., organized in 1843; the I. O. O. F., instituted April 20, 1854; the Knights of Pythias and Knights of Honor. The charter members of the first society mentioned were George H. Stewart, Adolph Clem, A. Haskell, John Ewalt, William Cullen, P. B. Griffith, E. B. Fuller and Jacob Boothe; and of the I. O. O. F., John Taylor, D. E. Stockman, A. P. Mather, C. Hildebrand and A. Yarnell.

There are seven churches in the town.

The Methodist was organized in the spring of 1834 by Rev. Elmore Yocum, in Thomas McMahon's warehouse. The early meetings were held at the houses of Joseph White and James Martin, and in the old Plank Schoolhouse. The first church building was erected in 1836. It was brick and cost about $500. In 1856, a frame was erected at a cost of $1,500.

The Baptist Church was organized in May, 1839. Isaac Wolf and John Neptine were Deacons. Revs. Wilson, Stearns and William Leete were the early Pastors. A frame building was erected in 1843 at a cost of $1,250.

The German Reformed and Lutheran Evangelical denominations erected a church for joint use in Loudonville in 1846. This building was destroyed by fire in 1860. These societies then erected separate frame churches. The Reformed and Lutheran Societies also erected a church in the southern part of the township in 1846. The congregations were organized seven years before the church was erected.

A Catholic society was organized in 1868 in Loudonville, and a brick church erected about the same time.

The Presbyterians had for many years a small society here, but were not able to erect a church until 1873, at which time they erected the present brick edifice.

An English Lutheran Church was organized in 1878, and the present brick building erected in 1879.

But little can be said in favor of the Loudonville schools. Mr. Haskell's academy was, unfortunately, allowed to go down after his death, and there seems to be at present, an opening for the Loudonville people to exercise their public spirit in this direction.

The Loudonville Advocate was started March 20, 1873, being the fourth paper established in Loudonville. It was a stock concern, and edited by J. H. Ruth, formerly of Ashland; continued in that position until December, 1877, when the office was disposed of to Messrs. Stauffer & Miller, of Quakerstown, Bucks Co., Penn. In December, 1869, Mr. Miller retired and Peter H. Stauffer became sole proprietor. The paper is neutral in politics.

The Loudonville Democrat was established in this place by J. G. Herzog, a native of the State of New York, February 28, 1879, and has just closed the first year of its publication. Its circulation is over eight hundred. It is neatly printed, and in a prosperous and healthy condition.

The town was incorporated in 1850, and the following is a list of the Mayors: William Hook, John McCormick (twice re-elected), A. L. Scott, John Strong, Jesse Hayes, A. L. Scott (four times re-elected), William Larwill (re-elected), A. L. Scott, D. Rust (re-elected), A. L. Scott, John Strong, John B. Long, Robert Hill (re-elected), John B. Long (twice re-elected), John W. Bull and C. S. Deyarmond, the present incumbent.

CHAPTER LXX.

MILTON TOWNSHIP.*

ORGANIZATION, BOUNDARIES, ETC.—SPRINGS—SURVEYED—SOIL AND TIMBER—HUNTING-GROUNDS—AN OFFICIAL DOCUMENT—EARLY SETTLERS, ETC.

MILTON TOWNSHIP was organized June 4, 1816, out of Mifflin, being at that date twelve miles long from north to south, and six miles wide. It remained in this shape until October 15, 1818, when Clear Creek was formed out of the north half, leaving Milton six miles square in Richland County. When Ashland County was formed, in 1846, its four tiers of sections on the east were transferred to that county. The two tiers of sections remaining in Richland were enlarged and called Weller, the four in Ashland being called Milton. Its dimensions are, therefore, four by six miles, with Montgomery on the east and Mifflin on the south.

No streams of consequence are found in this township, but there are many beautiful springs, one of the strongest in the county being found near the "Short farm."

It was surveyed in November, 1806, by Gen. James Hedges. Like other townships in the county, it was densely timbered with oak, beech, hickory and other hardwood. The southern part is described as hilly and the soil of inferior quality. The eastern part is generally level and the soil good; over the remainder of the township, the ascents and descents are regular, in places level, the soil generally fair for farming purposes, but clayey. It must have been a good hunting-ground for the Indians, as large quantities of their hunting implements and war weapons are found—stone axes, stone wedges, arrow-points, etc. Some of these evince great skill in workmanship.

* Now in Ashland County, formerly in Richland.

The Atlantic & Great Western Railroad passes diagonally through the township, the direction being northeast and southwest.

The following extract from the official record of the organization of Milton is given as somewhat of a curiosity, being a little out of the usual way of performing that operation:

"Now, it came to pass when men began to multiply on this side of the river westward toward the lake, even the great Lake Erie, and the inhabitants of Milton Township became numerous and strong, that they said one to another, Go to, let us separate ourselves from Mifflin Township, to which we aforetime had been attached; for why should we be oppressed by our brethren, and costs multiplied on us in carrying us before strangers?

"Let us select a goodly number from among our brethren that shall bear rule over us. And they prayed the court at Mansfield, and their request was granted. Milton was formed, and became a free and independent township. This happened in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixteen."

This curious document was signed by Robert Nelson, one of the township pioneers.

The earliest settlers came in 1814, mostly from Pennsylvania. In that year, Mr. Alexander Reed settled on land adjoining the old Hopewell Church, Section 13. His farm contained 80 acres, which he sold, in 1821, to Joseph Marklay for 550 gallons of whisky.

James Andrews came in 1816. He was a man of superior ability and influence, having served in the war of 1812 as Captain in the Ohio militia, and was afterward Justice of the Peace in Milton for twenty-seven years. Abraham Doty also came in 1816; William Lockhart, in 1818; John Woodburn, in 1825. Other early settlers were Peter Brubaker, Joseph Bechtel, Joseph Charles, John Clay, John Hazlett, Henry Keever, John Neal and Michael Smettzer.

This is essentially a farming community, no town existing within its limits. Before it became a part of Ashland County, Olivesburg belonged to it. Its early reminiscences are similar to those of other townships whose history has already been written, and need not be repeated. The same may be said of the struggles and triumph of its early settlers, who came to it a wilderness, and have, after years of toil, hardship and danger, dressed it in the garb of civilization. Its earliest settlers worshiped at the old Hopewell Church, erected in 1819, but organized several years before. This church stood very near the line between Milton and Montgomery. Its history is noticed in the history of the latter township.

MONTGOMERY TOWNSHIP.*

SURVEY—FIRST SETTLERS AND SETTLEMENTS—ESQUIRE NEWELL—CHURCHES—OLD HOPEWELL—ASHLAND—ITS EARLY SETTLERS, ETC.—FIRST CARRIAGE—FRANCIS GRAHAM'S RECOLLECTIONS—POST OFFICE—SCHOOLS—THE ASHLAND COLLEGE—THE CHURCHES OF ASHLAND—THE BUSINESS OF ASHLAND—THE NEWSPAPERS AND OTHER PUBLICATIONS.

SINCE the erection of Ashland County, Montgomery has assumed a position of importance, being near the center of the county geographically, and including the county seat within its limits. It was surveyed in October, 1806, by Maxfield Ludlow. In running the south boundary going west, seventeen chains and twenty links from the third mile stake, he came to a well-marked Indian trail running southeast and northwest. This is the well-known path of the Wyandots, which was followed by Maj. Robert Rogers in 1761, in his route to the forks of the Muskingum, on his return to Fort Du Quesne, as well as by Gen. Beall, on his expedition to Sandusky. This trail passed over the farm known as the late residence of John McCammon, thence across the Ryal farm, in Milton Township, into Richland County, in a northwesterly direction through Blooming Grove Township. The east boundary of the township is noted as flat and marshy, with bottoms subject to overflow; the timber, elm, maple, sugar, swamp-oak and alder bush.

On the third mile going north, a plain, much-traveled Indian trail, leading northwest, was seen. This passed by the old Newell farm, thence to near the covered bridge on the Wooster road, where it divided, one branch leading up the Catataway, and the other near the bridge on the Harrisburg road, by the old residence of Daniel Carter, Sr., subsequently known as the John Mason farm. The lands of Montgomery on the east are described as level and rich; in the middle and west part of the township as rolling and of good quality; the timber, ash, walnut, oak, hickory, cherry, sugar and maple, with considerable undergrowth, and a number of glades. The subdivision into sections was surveyed by Jonathan Cox, in November, 1806. Mr. Cox found an ancient earthwork north of Ashland, which is referred to in another chapter of this work.

Montgomery was organized June 6, 1815, out of the north two-thirds of Vermillion, being then twelve miles long from north to south, and six miles wide. June 3, 1816, this territory was divided, and Orange created out of the north half, leaving Montgomery in its present shape—six miles square.

Montgomery, lying back from the principal streams, was not settled as early as the other parts of the county, no settlers being found within its limits for several years after the settlement at Greentown. Robert Newell was, without doubt, the first settler in the township. He came from White Eyes Plains (Newcomerstown), Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, to Montgomery in 1811, settling on the land afterward occupied by Hugh McGuire. He seems also to be the only settler until the spring of 1812, when Samuel Carter came. April 1, 1814, Henry Baughman, with his wife and one child, settled on Section 3. Samuel Burns also came early in the spring of 1814, from Guernsey County, Ohio, settling on land adjoining that of Mr. Newell. He brought his family by water in a pirogue. He was fourteen days coming up the Muskingum, Walhonding, Mohican and Jerome Fork. Following there were Henry Gamble, March, 1815; Francis Graham, 1821; Jacob Grubb, November, 1823; Sage Kellogg, October, 1818; John Hough, 1823; James Kuykendall, March, 1815, Section 6; Henry Maize, June 23, 1828; Joseph Markley, March, 1815, Section 17; John McNaull, 1815; Christopher Mykrants, April, 1823; Andrew Proudfit, December, 1817; Michael Riddle, spring of 1819, Section 2; Joseph Sheets, November, 1817; William Skilling, June, 1817; Peter Swineford, 1819; Elias Slocumb, 1817; Michael Springer, 1815; Daniel Vantilburg, 1816; Alanson Walker, March, 1822. The following settlers and their families were here in 1814: Jacob Crouse, Daniel Mickey, Widow Treckle, John Carr, Benjamin Cuppy, Daniel Carter, William Montgomery, John Heller, Conrad Kline and John Smith.

Of these settlers, Daniel Carter, one of the earliest, cut the first road in the township, settling one mile northeast of the present town of Ashland. It was January when he arrived, and his shelter, until his cabin could be erected, was an open-ended tent. These pioneers must have had stout hearts to thus settle in the dense woods, in mid-winter, with no shelter from the snow, cold, wolves, bears, etc., but a tent. He cut and hauled the logs for his cabin as quickly as possible, but could not raise it without help, and traveled sixteen miles through the forest to get the fourth man for that purpose. He cut away the timber and planted seven acres of corn that same spring, but when Hull surrendered, fearing a general Indian massacre, Mr. Carter deserted his new home and went to New Philadelphia, Ohio, returning the following year and finding their premises unmolested, save that their corn had been partially taken by the wild animals. When informed of the murders on the Black Fork, by the Indians, the family fled to the block-house.

Mr. Gamble was a soldier of the war of 1812.

The cabin of Robert Newell was burnt by the Indians in 1812. Mr. Newell was a very illiterate man, being unable to read or write, as were many of the pioneers, through no fault of their own perhaps; but Newell was nevertheless a man of integrity, a good citizen, and possessed of good judgment. He was elected by his neighbors Justice of the Peace, and, of course, could not keep a docket or issue a summons. So satisfactorily, however, and with such an even hand, did he dispense justice upon principles of strict equity rather than law, that his official acts were indorsed by a re-election. Eloyd Eddy, his son-in-law, and Jacob Kline, elected as constables, were also equally illiterate. In most cases, Squire Newell would refuse absolutely to issue summons, fixing up and enforcing on summary but equitable terms of settlement issues among his neighbors; but this could not always be done. In one instance, Andrew Clark demanded summons on Martin Mason for balance of pay claimed for constructing a mill-race, and the Squire, after protracted efforts to bring the parties to settlement, was unable longer to defer an issue of summons. Accordingly he called upon Constable Kline, and presenting that functionary with a strong buckeye club, informed him that was his authority for bringing Mason, dead or alive, into "court," to call upon said defendant, and if he showed any symptoms of unwillingness to obey the summons, to make vigorous use of the club. Mason readily obeyed the summons, however, and the litigants appeared before his honor.

The Squire demanded first of the plaintiff, then of the defendant, a full statement of the matter at issue, which demand having been complied with, he rendered judgment as follows: "Mason shall pay to Clark two bushels of corn; Clark being a poor man, and having no horse, you, Mason, shall deliver the corn at his house. Forever after this, you are to be good friends and neighbors, and if either of you shall fail in the least particular to obey this order, I will have the offender before me and whip him within an inch of his life. As for myself, I charge no fees. Not so with Constable Kline, his charge being a quart of whisky, which plaintiff and defendant will see is brought into court as promptly as possible for the use of all present."

The Squire was quite an important man, as he owned 1,000 acres of land, and was considered in other respects in comfortable circumstances.

After the war of 1812, this township, in common with all others in the county, began to fill up quite rapidly, and its pioneer history is not different from that already written of other townships. As soon as the settlers could get a clearing about their cabins, and provide for their immediate wants, they began to think about schools, churches, etc.

The first church erected in this part of the county was "Old Hopewell," called "Old" perhaps from the fact that it was abandoned for another of the same name, afterward erected in Ashland. This church was erected (of logs) one mile west of Ashland in 1819, by the Presbyterians. In the first settlement in this neighborhood were several Presbyterian families, viz., those of Robert Nelson, Abraham Doty, David McKinney, William Huston, David Pollock, Abel Montgomery and others. These formed a society in 1817, which they called "Montgomery." The Montgomerys were prominent among the early settlers, hence the name of this church and the township. Rev. Joshua Beer and Rev. William Mathews were their first ministers. Thirty-four persons constituted the first society; the first Elders were Robert Nelson and Abraham Doty. The congregation worshiped in the cabins of the members until 1819. The old church was a square log, substantial and comfortable for that day. Its name was changed to Hopewell in 1820. One of the earliest ministers in this church was Rev. Robert Lee, from Westmoreland County, Penn. Mr. Lee afterward went further west, and settled in Crawford County, near the little village of Leesville, which was named for him. He was a well-known preacher in that part of the country, and a very excellent man. Old Hopewell was the "mother" of all the Presbyterian churches in this part of the country. In 1833, twenty-one members were dismissed to form a society in Clear Creek Township; on the 5th of August in the same year, nineteen members were dismissed to form a church at Orange, five miles east of Ashland; in April, 1834, thirty-nine members were dismissed to organize a church at Olivesburg. Thus, in less than a year, seventy-nine members were dismissed, showing how wide-spread was the influence of Old Hopewell. People went a long distance to church in those days, but those were not the days of newspapers, telegraphs and railroads. After sending out these three colonies, sixty-five members were yet left in Hopewell. In 1836, the old log church was abandoned for a better one, in the village of Ashland.

In the township outside the town of Ashland, two churches were erected; one, the Evangelical Lutheran, on the east line of the township, in 1838; Rev. Mr. Wolf was first Pastor. The other, the German Baptist, or Brethren, three miles south of town. The latter have three churches, known as the "Ashland District," and the church is better known as the Dunkers, or Dunkards, (properly Tunkers), which name was given them in Germany, and still clings to them in this country, though they repudiate it.

In those early days there did not, however, appear to be any religious sects or political parties. It was emphatically an "era of good-feeling." When it was known that a man was to preach in the neighborhood, everybody, for miles around, came to the meeting; it mattered little what denomination he belonged to, he was welcome. Most of the clergymen visiting this part of the country were, however, Presbyterians and Baptists.

Ashland, the seat of justice for the county, was originally known as Uniontown, and was laid out July 28, 1815, by William Montgomery, who gave it the name of Uniontown in honor of his native town of that name in Pennsylvania. When he laid out the town, it was all woods, and deer, bears and wolves roamed unmolested. There was not a cabin or building of any kind upon its site. Henry Gamble and John Smith were in the neighborhood, and were the nearest settlers. Mr. Montgomery erected the first cabin on the site for his own use. James Kuykendall assisted in its erection. It was of hewed logs, and occupied the lot upon which Treace's tavern was afterward erected. Mr. Montgomery kept tavern in it and entertained the travelers on the road between Wooster and Mansfield. He was also engaged, at this time, in distilling whisky, which was looked upon as a respectable employment in those days. He was also proprietor of a tannery, which he subsequently sold to George Sweineford, and which occupied the premises afterward occupied by David Whiting.

In 1817, Joseph Sheets, William Montgomery, David Markley and John Croft, with their families, constituted the population of the town. Markley was engaged in selling groceries, whisky, etc., and had the first store in the town. It was on the lot where the town hall was afterward erected. Samuel Urie came in shortly afterward and started the first blacksmith-shop. Nicholas Shaffer soon arrived. He was a carpenter by trade, but found nothing to do except hew out door and window frames, as there was no frame houses being erected, and no mills to make lumber. John Antibus manufactured hats. Croft conducted the tannery.

The first vehicle in the form of a carriage made its appearance in the new town in 1821. Its springs were of wood, and, excepting the tires upon the wheels, there had not been twenty pounds of iron used in its manufacture. It was manufactured in Connecticut, and was brought here by Dr. Luther, who was probably the first physician in the place. In 1821, Francis Graham came to Uniontown and brought with him a stock of dry goods and groceries. He says at that time it was a village of fourteen or fifteen families, two distilleries, one sawmill, one small tannery, one wheelwright shop for the manufacture of wheels for flax-spinning; one blacksmith-shop, kept by Samuel Urie, and one physician—Dr. Joel Luther. David Markley, as before mentioned, was the first storekeeper, but he had no more than a one-horse wagon load of goods, and did not replenish his stock, so he soon ran out. Joseph Sheets kept the next store. He brought a small stock of goods from Steubenville, Ohio, in 1819. He did not replenish this stock, and soon sold out. There were so few people, and their wants were so simple, that store-keeping did not pay. Mr. Graham may, therefore, be considered the first store-keeper who carried a general stock and started a permanent store. The other two stores had disappeared, and he rented a room of Mr. Sheets, on Main street, and also engaged board of him at something less than $1 per week. Sheets was keeping a tavern at the time, the second one started in the place. In 1822, John Hull, the wheelwright, opened the third tavern in a small building, which was, some years after, moved back to give place to the Slocum House, where the town hall was afterward erected. Graham found his goods in demand, but no money in the country to pay for them, and was compelled to part with them in exchange for produce of various kinds, for which he found no market. Wheat was worth about 25 cents per bushel, but no one wanted to buy it for family use, and, as there was no market outside the immediate neighborhood, but little was raised. Oats were traded off at 12 to 15 cents per bushel; corn was in better demand, and brought, in goods, from 15 to 20 cents per bushel, and became almost lawful tender, because it could be converted into whisky, which could be freighted to the lake, and found a ready market. Maple sugar was also an important item of trade, and was made in large quantities, bringing from 4 to 6 cents per pound.

In 1822, Mr. Graham petitioned the Postmaster General for a post office at Uniontown. The petition was forwarded to Hon. John Sloan, then Representative to Congress from the Richland and Wayne County District. The Postmaster General declined granting a post office with the name Uniontown, as there were already two Uniontown post offices in the State. Mr. Sloan then made choice of the name of Ashland, there being no post office of that name in Ohio. Mr. Graham became the first Postmaster, and the first contract for carrying the mail was let to a Mr. Bell, who was to make the trip once a week between Wooster and New Haven, Huron County, via Ashland. The mail was carried on horseback about a year, when the Post Office Department discovered it would not pay expenses and withdrew the contract. Mr. Graham then hired the mail carried to Mansfield three years at his own expense and at a loss.

The name Uniontown continued to hang to the place two or three years, when it was changed to Ashland by the Legislature.

The first school in Ashland was taught by Therrygood Smith, and was situated on the lot west of the one afterward occupied by Hugh Davis. This cabin burned down in 1824, taking fire from its lath and clay chimney. The first house erected for school purposes was in 1825, on the lot afterward owned by Sarah Jones. Chandler Foote taught here. The third school was taught in1826, in a cabin owned by Cullen Spaulding, by Mr. Fleming.

In progress, the Ashland schools have kept pace with the growth of the town. At present it is divided into three districts, with excellent buildings in each.

The question of establishing a first-class institution of learning somewhere within the limits of Pennsylvania, Ohio or Indiana, had been freely discussed for many years by the more enterprising members of the Brethren Church, and attempts had been made in each of these States, and in one of them a large sum of money had already been guaranteed for this purpose; but for various reasons all these efforts failed, though the importance and benefit of such an institution became more and more apparent and acknowledged by the church at large. Under these circumstances, repeated offers were made to Elder S. Z. Sharp, then Professor in Maryville College, Tennessee, to take charge of the enterprise and bring it to a successful issue, which, after mature reflection, he accepted, and, in the summer of 1877, made a tour through Ohio in quest of a suitable location. Of the many places proposed, Ashland was selected; and in June, 1877, a meeting was called of all the business men in Ashland; the aims of the founders and the character of the proposed college presented to the crowded assembly in the town hall. Among the prominent features of the institution were mentioned "freedom from vain show and extravagance in dress," assuming that "high intellectual and moral attainments" were the true objects to be placed before the student. The citizens of Ashland at once seconded the proposition to establish such an institution at this place, and raised $10,000 toward the erection of buildings, while agents were at work elsewhere collecting funds.

A corporation was formed, and, on February 22, 1878, a charter obtained by which the institution was placed under the care of the church of the Brethren, and legally on an equality with the best in the State. In the following summer, the main building was erected, 100 feet deep, 100 wide, and four stories high, with ten recitation-rooms, professors' rooms, literary halls, offices, and chapel for the accommodation of 500 students.

During the summer of 1879, another building, 110 feet long and four stories high, was erected as dormitory and boarding hall. The buildings and grounds are valued at $60,000.

On the 17th of September, 1879, the college was formally opened; fifty-nine students registering their names the first day; seventy-five during the first week, and closed December 24 with 112 enrolled.

The charter provides for four departments: First, classical, with the degree of A. B.; second, philosophical, with the degree of Ph. B.; third, normal; fourth, commercial. Students completing either of the last two, will receive suitable certificates of graduation. A department has also been added to prepare those wishing to take a scientific and classical course.

Each course is based on the most natural and philosophic plan by which all the powers of the mind are developed simultaneously and symmetrically, and the time of the student divided among language, mathematics, science and philosophy, while opportunities are offered to study some of the fine arts.

The classical course requires four years to complete, and the studies are arranged as follows:

Freshmen Year—First term, Virgil, Anabasis, geometry, sacred history; second term, Virgil, Anabasis, higher algebra, sacred history; third term, Cicero's De Senectute et Amicitia, Memorabilia, higher algebra completed, botany.

Sophomore Year—First term, Livy, Memorabilia, trigonometry and surveying, chemistry, lectures on Roman history; second term, Horace's Odes and Epodes, Homer's Iliad, trigonometry and navigation, lectures and Greek history; third term, Horace's Satires, political economy, general geometry, zoology.

Junior Year—First term, Tacitus, March's English grammar and Milton, mental philosophy (elective), German, Greek or mathematics; second term, Demosthenes' Corona, mental philosophy, Gonat's Physics (elective), ancient or modern languages; third term, English literature, moral philosophy, physics (elective), ancient or modern languages, mathematics or science.

Senior Year—First term, philosophy, art of discourse, church history, geology and mineralogy, French; second term, history of philosophy, rhetoric, Eusebius, astronomy, New Testament history (elective), modern languages; third term, history of philosophy, evidences of Christianity, natural theology, Greek Testament, Butler's Analogy.

Composition throughout the course.

Philosophical Course—This is designed for those who wish to prepare themselves for some special department in science. The study of Greek and a part of Latin omitted, and an additional number of scientific studies added. Prominence is given to modern languages.

Normal Department—This course is fully as complete as found in other commercial colleges, with a shorter course for farmers, teachers, mechanics, etc.

The preparatory department is similar to those in other first-class colleges.

Among the distinguishing features found in the first circular issued are:

1. It is thoroughly Christian, but not sectarian.

2. Combines the most liberal course of study with the least expense.

3. It inculcates the spirit of plainness and economy in dress; aiming to adorn the mind and character more than the body.

4. Its location is unrivaled in advantages.

The government is mild and firm; the students are taught as much as possible to govern themselves. Tuition, $30 per year in advance. Boarding from $1 to $2 per week. The Faculty, at present, consists of Elder S. J. Sharp, A. M., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science; L. Huber, A. M., Professor of Greek and Modern Languages; J. E. Stubbs, A. M., Professor of Greek Language and Literature; David Bailey, A. M., Professor of Mathematics; Jacob Keino, Ph. B., Professor of Natural Sciences; F. P. Foster, Superintendent of the Commercial Department; J. E. Ewing, Instructor in Music.

At present (February, 1880), 140 students are enrolled.

There are eleven churches in Ashland, viz., Methodist, Presbyterian, English Lutheran, German Lutheran, German Reformed, Disciple, Baptist, United Brethren, Albright, St. Edward's Catholic and Dunkard.

As has been mentioned, the Presbyterians were organized in Hopewell Church, which was transferred to Ashland in 1837; a building of stone having been erected here in 1836. This building stood until 1879, when it was taken away, and the present beautiful brick erected at a cost of $20,000.

The Methodist Church was organized about 1828, and a stone church erected which was afterward purchased by the county and used as a court house until the present buildings were erected on its site. The present brick church, on the corner of Third and Church streets, was commenced in 1848, and completed in 1858; and cost $4,000 or $5,000. Present membership about four hundred.

The English Lutheran was organized about 1835 by Rev. F. J. Ruth, now an aged citizen of Galion, Ohio. The present brick edifice is located on Third street, and cost about $3,000. Present membership, 250. The society contemplates erecting a new church building during the year 1880.

The Baptist Church was organized in 1860, by eleven persons. Its membership is now about thirty. First Pastor was Rev. I. N. Carman. They erected a frame building soon after organization that cost about $1,500.

Disciple Church organized by John Rigdon in 1824. Their frame church building on Orange street was erected in 1842, and cost about $1,500.

German Lutheran organized in 1872, about which time they also erected a brick church on Main street, at a cost of $4,000. Present membership about one hundred.

The German Reformed was organized, and the building erected about the same time (1872). The building is frame, and cost about $2,500. Membership about sixty.

The United Brethren Church was organized about 1872, by Rev. Mr. Moody, and a frame building erected on East Walnut street at a cost of $3,000. Present membership about one hundred.

The Albrights have erected a fine brick church on Third Street, at a cost of $6,000. Present membership about one hundred.

St. Edward's Catholic Church on Cottage street was organized about 1872. The building is brick, and not yet finished.

The Tunkards, or Brethren, as they prefer to be called, organized in 1879, and at present, hold services in the chapel of the college. The membership is about one hundred. S. Z. Sharp, J. A. Worst and S. H. Bashar are the leaders.

Ashland has grown into a town of nearly, or quite, four thousand people, the Atlantic & Great Western Railway contributing not a little to its development.

There are two large flouring-mills; four large dry-goods stores; four clothing, three hardware, four agricultural implement, three stove and tin, ten grocery and three drug stores; three restaurants, two hotels, two banks, one insurance company, three tanneries, two planing-mills and the usual number of people in other business in the same proportion.

The Ashland Mutual Insurance Company was organized in 1851. It is permanent and reliable, its assets aggregating about $600,000. William Osborn is President; L. Jeff Sprengle, Secretary, and J. D. Stubbs, General Agent.

The First National (and only national) Bank was organized first in January, 1852, and reorganized and made a national bank in January, 1864.

The Farmers' Bank was organized July 1, 1874. It is a private institution.

The Ashland Herald was started in 1836, by John C. Gilkison, of Mansfield, who continued its publication about one year, when he sold the press and material to Joshua H. Ruth, now of the Loudonville Democrat. The Herald was Whig in politics, but Ruth changed both its politics and name, calling it the Ohio Globe. It supported Van Buren for the Presidency. In less than a year, Ruth was succeeded by Judge Samuel McCluer, now a leading lawyer of Akron, who changed the name to the Western Phœnix. The politics were again changed to Whig, but the paper only lived about a year.

From 1838 to 1846, Ashland was without a paper; but in the latter year two were started—one the Ashland Democrat, edited and published by Jonathan Maffett (now of Upper Sandusky, Ohio) and William Hunter. The other was the Ashland Standard. The first represented the hard money Democrats, and the last the soft. The Standard was published the last two years by W. T. Jackson. These papers continued about four years, when both concerns sold out to Horace S. Knapp, and in their place appeared the Ohio Union. In 1850, a Whig paper was established called the Ashlander, by W. B. McCarty, now an attorney at Bowling Green, Ohio. It was continued two years. July 14, 1853, the Ashland Times was started by L. Jeff Sprengle (who is authority for this account of the papers) and Judge William Osborn. It was Whig in politics, and continued four years, when Judge Osborn, who had been editor-in-chief, sold his interest to Mr. Sprengle, and was succeeded as editor by Josiah Loche, of the Indianapolis Journal, who continued as editor two years, when he returned to Indianapolis and resumed his place upon the Journal. Mr. Sprengle continued the publication of the Times in the interest of the Republican party until June 1, 1876, when he disposed of his interest to his son-in-law, J. E. Stubbs, who afterward sold a half-interest to his brother, John C. Stubbs. These gentlemen have conducted it until the present time, it being under the editorial and business management of G. W. Stubbs and B. G. Grosscup.

At the Times office, is also published a religious paper called the Gospel Preacher, in the interest of the Brethren, or Tunkards, which has a circulation of 4,000. Its editors and managers are Prof. S. Z. Sharp, S. H. Bashor and John Worst.

In the same office and for the same society, is also published a Sabbath-school paper, called the Young Disciple, which is edited by Prof. S. Z. Sharp, President of the Ashland College, and James Quintor. Its circulation is nearly 10,000.

The jobbing department of the Times office is complete in every respect, and the establishment generally is one of the largest and most complete in this part of the State.

The Ohio Union, above mentioned, continued in charge of Mr. Knapp until 1853, when he sold to John Sheridan, by whom it was continued until November, 1855, its name having, in the mean time, being changed to the Ashland Union. At that date, it was purchased by Collins W. Bushnell. In January, 1857, H. S. Knapp repurchased, and continued the publication of the paper until May 30, 1860, when he disposed of it to J. J. Jacobs. Mr. Jacobs sold, in 1865, to McCord, Nelson & Landis, and in the same year it was transferred to J. M. Landis & Bro. In 1868, the establishment was purchased by George W. Hill, who conducted it until August, 1872, when he sold to Nelson & Gates, who changed the name to the Ashland Press. January 1, 1879, W. H. Gates retired from the firm, and Nelson continued until July 17, when the establishment was purchased by Alberson & Heltman, the present proprietors.

FORMATION—INDIAN TRAIL—INDIANS AND INDIAN RELICS—ANCIENT RELICS—FIRST SETTLERS—FIRST ROAD—MILLS—ORANGE VILLAGE—CHURCHES.

PRIOR to 1816, Montgomery Township, in what is now Ashland County, was twelve miles long from north to south, and six miles wide. June 3, 1816, this territory was divided and the north half called Orange. It was at that time the northeast township of "Old Richland," but became a part of Ashland County in 1846. It was surveyed by Maxfield Ludlow in 1806, when it was yet a wilderness and no white man's cabin within its boundaries. An Indian trail passed through the southwestern part of the township, passing up Jerome Fork, crossing into Clear Creek Township, to Vermillion Lake. This trail was much used by the Wyandots and Ottawas in their passage to and from the eastern part of the State. About the year 1816, this trail was surveyed by Rev. James Haney, of Savannah, a practical surveyor, to Rowsburg, and from there to Wooster. It was opened as a road and used as a common highway by the early settlers of Orange and Clear Creek Townships.

The evidences of Indian occupation in many parts of Orange Township were numerous. The aborigines, it seems, were accustomed to assemble annually in the spring, in large numbers, upon the lands subsequently owned by Isaac Mason, Jacob Young, Jacob Heifner and Peter Biddinger, to make sugar and hunt, which custom they kept up until as late as 1815 or 1816. Mr. Biddinger, being a gunsmith, was often visited by them for repairs to injured or broken flint-locks.

The soil and timber of Orange do not differ materially from others around it, already described. The land is generally level, or with gentle ascents and descents; the township is generally well watered by Jerome Fork of the Mohican and its tributaries, this stream having its rise here.

A few interesting relics of a former age have been found in the township. A few human skeletons were once unearthed on the bank of the creek, while a party of workmen were improving the before-mentioned trail, one of which appeared to be more than seven feet in height. It may be imagined that this was an Indian chief, who once headed his file of dusky warriors along the dark paths and ravines and beautiful streams of the country. If he wielded authority in proportion to his physical dimensions, he must have more than rivaled Pipe, Logan or Tecumseh. Col. John Murray, who discovered the remains, had no difficulty in passing the lower jaw over his face. The cranium and other bones showed that the skeleton belonged to a man of unusual size and power.

About one-fourth of a mile southwest of the village of Orange is to be found an ancient mound. It was examined by Dr. Deming and others, who found well-preserved human bones, remnants of pottery, etc.

The first settlers were as follows: John Bishop, February, 1814, Section 21; Vachel Metcalf, 1814; James Campbell; James Clark, 1818, Section 2; Robert Culbertson, 1825; Phillip Biddinger, 1823; Christian Fast, Sr., 1815, Section 18; Jacob Fast, 1817, Section 21; Nicholas Fast, 1815; Phillip Fluke, 1816; Jacob Hiffner, Jr., 1817, Section 14; James Medowell, November, 1823, Section 26; Edward Murray, 1820; Patrick Murray, 1815; John Stull, 1820; William Patterson, 1818, Section 7; Christopher Rickett, 1822; Daniel Summers, 1818, Section 10; Solomon Urie, 1814, Section 34; Jacob Young, 1814; Amos Norris, 1814.

It will be observed from this list that five families (these settlers nearly all brought their families) settled in the township in 1814; they were, as was usually the case, mostly from Western Pennsylvania, and many of them came as early as 1813 to select their lands.

The reminiscences of these early settlers are intensely interesting to the present generation, but, however interesting, they cannot all be preserved in print. A few of the best are retained, which convey a truthful picture of pioneer life.

Among the earliest settlers in this township was Christian Fast, Sr., whose captivity among the Indians in this part of the State, is given in the chapter entitled "First White Men in the County." It is only necessary to refer to it here, as it is fully given there. It is a narrative of thrilling interest, and shows in a striking manner the privations of frontier days in the West. Mr. Fast returned in 1815 and settled in this township, where he lived many years.

Vachel Metcalf and Amos Norris were the first to move into the township with their families. They came early in the spring of 1814; Jacob Young and Jacob Crouse, however, came the same spring, and the former built his cabin on the Ashland and Orange road, a few rods from where the bridge crosses the Jerome Fork of the Mohican.

Another of these pioneers, Solomon Urie, relates many interesting adventures. His brother, Thomas, was killed in Eastern Ohio, by the Indians, while he and Solomon were out hunting. The latter barely escaped, on this occasion, by leaping from a high bluff. The Indians dared not follow. Solomon and his son, Samuel, served with credit in the war of 1812. He was with Williamson in his campaign against the Moravian villages in 1782, and witnessed the massacre and burning of the villages. Williamson was his brother-in-law, and on this account he was induced to accompany the expedition. He always disapproved the barbarous act, and often stated to his sons, that Williamson yielded a reluctant consent to the perpetration of that dreadful tragedy, being unable to control the violence of his soldiers, who were border volunteers and had suffered much from Indian raids and depredations. In the winter of 1815, he erected a blacksmith-shop on his land, being the first one in Orange Township, he being a blacksmith and gunsmith by trade. The first winter after his arrival, he killed forty deer, eight large black bears, a great number of coons and other game.

An Ashland paper of April 9, 1862, has this item: "Jacob Young, an old citizen of this township, died on the 3d instant, at the advanced age of eighty-nine years and three months. He was born in Hardy County, Va. January 1, 1773; emigrated to Ohio in 1804, and to this county in 1814. He lived with his companion, who still survives him, sixty-eight years. He was the father of twelve children; and when he died, had one hundred and seventeen grandchildren; one hundred and seventy-six great-grandchildren, and five great-great-grandchildren."

No road had been surveyed in the township at the date of its first settlement. John Bishop carried the chain for the surveyors when they established the first road which led from Sheet's saw-mill, on the east line of Montgomery Township, via Jacob Young's and Leidigh's mill to Savannah, though no mills or towns were then in existence. Mr. Bishop was made Constable at the first election held in the township.

On the site of this Leidigh mill, two miles west of the present village of Orange, was erect- the first mill in the township, in 1815, by Martin Mason. The stones were "hard-heads," and would grind sixty bushels per day. The mill commenced operations in March, 1816. That the settlers in Orange and adjacent townships appreciated the advantages of the mill, may be understood when it is stated that prior to its erection, the nearest mill was that of Stibbs, one mile east of Wooster. In 1814–15, no corn could be obtained nearer than Wooster and along Apple and Short Creeks—price, $1.25 per bushel. Wheat could not be obtained nearer than Massillon, at $2 per bushel.

Previous to the erection of this mill, corn was prepared for use on hominy blocks, and nearly every cabin had one. Mr. Mason constructed a hand-mill before this first water-mill was built. He had a couple of hard-heads made into mill-stones. This hand-mill (a good one of its kind) would, by the aid of six persons, produce half a bushel of meal in two hours.

What was called "sick wheat" was often produced in the early attempts at cultivation. The berry would be as plump and attractive in appearance as the best quality ever grown, and the flour as white as the best specimens now produced. When made into bread, it would be palatable, except that it would have a sweet taste; but when eaten by man or beast, it produced a distressing sickness, and only remained upon the stomach a few moments. This was, however, the only disease that attacked the wheat, neither weevil, rust nor smut being then known.

Milling was sometimes done at Beam's, on Black Fork, and down on the White Woman; the trip to the latter being made in canoes, and occupying about two weeks. For a long time Beam's mill ground only corn.

Orange, the only town in the township, was laid out April 22, 1828, by Amos Norris and J. C. Chilcoat. It is located in the midst of a fine farming region, but long ago arrived at maturity—a village of one or two hundred people. The post office is Nankin.

The religious sentiment is well developed, a number of churches having been organized in the town and township. One of the earliest is the German Reformed, organized about 1832. The Methodist Episcopal Church of Orange is probably the oldest, having been organized some years before 1830, at which date the church building was erected. The Evangelical Lutheran was organized in 1861; the North Orange Methodist Episcopal about 1848; the Canaan Church was erected in 1850; the German Reformed and Methodist Episcopal about 1840; the Old School Presbyterian of Orange in 1834, by Russell Bigelow, the famous missionary; the United Brethren Church building was erected in 1850, and the St. Jacob's German Reformed in 1853.

VERMILLION TOWNSHIP.*

FORMATION—SURVEY—INDIAN TRAILS—TIMBER—EARLY SETTLERS—INDIANS—GEN. BEALL AND THE BATTLE OF COWPENS—FIRST ROADS—MILLS AND DISTILLERIES—FIRST JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—EDUCATION—CHURCHES—INFIRMARY—HAYESVILLE—WHISKY AS A MOTOR.

AUGUST 9, 1814, Vermillion Township was formed. It occupied in the northeast corner of "Old Richland," a territory which has since been divided into six townships, being then eighteen miles from north to south, and twelve east and west. Within the same year, however, this territory was again divided by a line through the center north and south, the east half retaining the name of Vermillion. In 1815, Vermillion was reduced to its present dimensions, six miles square, in the southern part of the territory. It was then on the east line of Richland, but became a part of Ashland County in 1846. It was surveyed by Jonathan Cox in 1807. James Hedges ran the southern line, and found great difficulty in getting it correct. He went over it three times, and on the third survey says: "I find the chaining correct. I am much perplexed to know the cause of my westing, or inclining south. The variation must operate very partial, or my compass must have been unluckly altered." He then re-surveyed the west boundary, and, coming to the southwest corner, observes: "Here I experience troubles of a new kind; having already spent two days and a half waiting on an Indian chief, who appeared hostile to our business; also laboring under the difficulty of a hand being absent thirteen days, on a tour for provisions; in the mean time having lived eight days upon boiled and parched corn, I now find my camp robbed of some necessary articles, and two hands that I left to keep the same, revolted and run away. My range and town lines not being finished, and expecting shortly other surveyors after me to subdivide; all these difficulties conspire to make me unhappy. No alternative remains but to proceed to Owl Creek and get hands and provisions, this being the 20th of October, 1806." This suspended operations until April, 1807, when Jonathan Cox proceeded to subdivide the township into sections. In running along the east boundary, Mr. Cox came upon Indian trails, much traveled, running northeast. All these trails in this part of the country bore northeast toward Sandusky, and southeast in the direction of Fort Pitt, Wheeling or Mingo Bottom, near the present site of Steubenville. The trails mentioned here doubtless passed over to Greentown, along what is known as the old Portage road, and lead from Mohican John's town. About one mile south of the northeast corner, he found a trail much traveled. Along the west boundary, in the southwest corner, were also trails much traveled. The land is described as fertile, the ascents and descents sloping and gentle; the timber—oak, hickory, ash, sugar maple, with some black walnut and chestnut.

The following names comprise a partial list of the earliest settlers in this township. Sterling G. Bushnell, 1821; Thomas D. Roe, 1815; Rev. John Cox, 1823; Joseph Duncan, 1824,

*Now in Ashland County, formerly in Richland.

Section 36; John Farver, 1817, Section 2; Robert Finley, 1811, Section 12; William Harper, 1815, Section 10; Richard Jackman, 1823, Section 23; William Karnahan, 1815, Section 23; William Lemon, 1818; George Marshall, 1822; Andrew Newman, 1825; Jonathan Palmer, 1811, Section 12; Gilbert Purdy, 1817; William Reed, 1814; William Ryland, 1815; John Scott, 1819; Michael Sigler, 1820; Joseph Workman, 1815, Section 26; Stephen Smith, Section 33; George Eckley, 1811; Uriah and John Johnston, and George King. The wave of emigration had barely reached this point in the wilderness, when the war with Great Britain began, and checked it. But two or three settlers came in 1811, and these were compelled the following year to seek safety in blockhouses. Sterling G. Bushnell was the father of a large family, among whom was Dr. William Bushnell, of Mansfield, whose history appears in this work.

It appears that George Eckley was the first to make a permanent settlement, in the spring of 1811; he was followed about two weeks later by Robert Finley, the second settler. The Eckley family were prominent in the later as well as earlier history of the township. E. R. Eckley, son of Ephraim Eckley, was a Colonel in the army during the late war, and since, a member of Congress. Jonathan Palmer came in 1810, and entered his land, as did probably others; but he did not bring his family until 1811, and then only a portion of it. When the war began, he returned to Jefferson County, his former residence, and remained until 1814. Upon his return, he found Robert Finley, Lemuel Boulter, Samuel Hutchings, William Black, George Eckley and Daniel Harlan the only residents of the township beside himself. There was not a physician in the township or county to his knowledge—not even in Mansfield or Wooster. A physician would have been as much of a curiosity in those days, as would an Indian among the people now. "Grandmother" Palmer officiated in that capacity to the entire satisfaction of all the neighborhood. She gave her services and herb tea gladly, and received thanks for her pay. Their coarse, wholesome food and active lives secured health, and physicians were not needed. Gilbert Purdy tells of buying wheat at 10 cents per bushel, which he paid in blacksmithing, hauling it to Portland (Sandusky City), and selling it for 60 cents. William Reed served in the war of 1812, and Lemuel Boulter and George King were Revolutionary soldiers. Indians, though plenty, do not seem to have disturbed the people of this township; in fact, no Indian tragedies of consequence occurred anywhere in the county after the war. The red men felt that the whites were too numerous and powerful for them, and remained quiet until they were removed from the country.

Gen. Beall and his army passed across the northeast corner of the township on their march to the theater of war, and probably cut the first road. They camped about two weeks within the limits of the township, and while in this camp an incident occurred, which has been facetiously termed the "battle of Cowpens." One dark, rainy night, when the army was wrapt in slumber, and not dreaming of war, but, no doubt, sleeping with a sense of surrounding danger from Indians, the crack of a rifle was heard in the direction of a distant picket-post. The army was aroused; the sentinels came rushing in with the report that the enemy was upon them; the host was marshaled; the ground trembled with the dull tread of tramping squadrons; the line was formed, and a heavy fire opened, whether with or without orders; the lurid glare of battle dispelled the inky blackness of the night; the crash of the musketry, the shouting of the officers and men, the charging of the cavalry upon the stumps and logs in the direction of the supposed enemy, all combined to give Vermillion a taste of genuine battle.

It was discovered in the morning that the drove of cattle belonging to the army had broken loose from their corral, and were roaming at will. It is said several of them were killed. The General was satisfied, however, as the troops had shown their willingness to fight.

Gen. Beall left a broad trail through the wilderness, and cleared off some ground in the neighborhood of his camp. The first road, however, for the use of the public was that from Wooster to Mansfield, which passed through near the center of the township, and was made in 1815. Settlements grew rapidly along this road, and the first hotel and post office was established on this road at Hayes Cross Roads, now Hayesville.

Vermillion is well watered by the tributaries of Black Fork and Jerome Fork, lying as it does between these streams. Mills and distilleries were erected along these tributaries; the latter, especially, growing very numerous. Having no market for their corn, they were compelled to make whisky out of it, and this found a ready sale. It was hauled to the lake, and found its way to the Indians and soldiers, by whom the larger share of it was consumed, though the settlers themselves used a large quantity of whisky. It was not poisoned in those days, and was considered a healthy drink. The first mill was erected by Constance Lake, in the fall of 1817, on Goady's Run, in the southeastern part of the township. Prior to this, the settlers had recourse to their hand-mills or hominy-blocks, and to Shrimplin's, on Owl Creek, and Stibb's, near Wooster. The trip to these mills was generally made with four horses and a wagon, by one of the settlers, who carried the grists of all his neighbors; and it occupied about a week of time. The farm upon which Constance Lake erected his mill, had previously been occupied by Baptiste Jerome, a Frenchman, and the first white settler in this part of the country. He lived for a long time on the site of Jeromeville (which received its name from this fact), among the Indians. The mill soon afterward passed into the hands of Lake & Larwill, and then Lake & Bentley.

James Wallace and Robert Newell were elected Justices of the Peace, in the township, in 1814; Ephraim Eckley and James Walters also occupied this office before 1815. Joseph Workman succeeded Wallace, in 1817.

Education has received the attention of the the people of Vermillion ever since it was a wilderness. The children of the pioneers were taught the rudimentary part of their education at home, and many select schools were taught in private houses before any schoolhouse was erected. One of the first buildings used for a schoolhouse was the old Baptist Church, in 1821, in the Bushnell District, and probably the first public school was taught in that house, by Miss Sedelia Bushnell. William Irwin was also a teacher in 1823. Since then, comfortable schoolhouses have been erected in place of the old log ones, and, about 1840, a disposition was shown to have a place for higher education. A high school was accordingly established in Hayesville in 1843, and in 1845, the Vermillion Institute was chartered and authorized to confer degrees. It originated through the efforts of Rev. Lewis Granger, J. L. McLain and the citizens of the town. It is handsomely situated, and has had a career of varied success. Like all other institutions of learning, even though not attended with the highest success, it gives to the people around it a higher civilization and better society than is enjoyed outside the circle of its influence.

The first church was erected in the northeast part of the township, in 1817, and was known as "Eckley's Church." It was free to all Protestant ministers, but was chiefly used by the Methodists. "Old Hopewell," erected by the Presbyterians, one mile west of Ashland, and Eckley's, formed the nucleus from which Presbyterianism and Methodism radiated in Ashland County. Mr. Constance Lake, who built the first mill, was buried in the first graveyard, which was laid out near Eckley's Church.

"Hammond's Meeting-house," in the southern part of the township, was erected by the Methodists in 1852.

The German Evangelical, in the "Risser settlement," was organized in 1860. The house was built in 1847 by the Mennonites, a denomination that embraced about fifteen families. Rev. John Risser was the first Pastor, and the officers Christian Herschler and John Latschar. After a time, a half-interest in the house was sold to the German Lutheran society.

The Church of God, better known as the Winebrenarian, was organized in 1835, with about twenty members. Rev. Thomas Hickornell and Rev. Jacob Keller were the first Pastors. Michael Stevens and Archibald McGrew were the first Elders. It was erected near the eastern line of the township.

In Hayesville, the Old School Presbyterian Church was organized in the fall of 1846, and had as the first minister Rev. Benjamin T. Lowe. An Associate Church was organized in Hayesville at an early day. It was called the "Associate Congregation of Hayesville," and in 1858, upon the union of the Associate and Associate Reformed, became the United Presbyterian.

The first Methodist Church in Hayesville was organized in 1828, at the house of Richard Jackman. About two years after Hayesville was laid out, the society erected a house for worship, 28x35 feet, the membership at this time amounting to thirty. In 1855, another building was erected, at a cost of $1,400. It is 38x50 feet in size. Mr. Palmer, one of the earliest settlers, says the first clergymen in the township were Presbyterian missionaries, who in traveling to and from the missions among the Senecas and Wyandots made it a practice for many years to preach at the house of Mr. Palmer and others. Eckley's Church was quite a large one, made of unhewn logs, in which the Methodist quarterly meetings were generally held, and to which the settlers came from a great distance, bringing their provisions, and camping out about the church—sometimes using its capacious fire-place for cooking purposes.

In 1849, Sylvester Alger and George W. Urie, architects, constructed the Ashland County Infirmary in this township. It cost about $4,000.

Hayesville was laid out October 26, 1830, by John Cox and Linus Hayes, on the land first entered by Lemuel Boulter. The year before this, an effort had been made to start a town two miles west of where Hayesville was afterward located. They gave it the name of Williamsburg, but it never became a town. The inhabitants in that part of the county felt, however, that a town must be started somewhere near them, along that main road from Wooster to Mansfield. There was also, by this time, an important road passing north and south, upon which teams and men were frequently passing, engaged in the business of transporting their grain and produce from the older and richer counties of Knox and Licking to the markets at the lakeside. A stopping-place was needed for the travelers on both these roads, and the cabin of Linus Hayes, standing at the intersection of these roads, was converted into a tavern. After awhile, it occurred to Mr. Hayes that a town could be built up here, and thus Hayesville was laid out. Probably two-thirds of the early towns in the county came into existence under about the same circumstances. A blacksmith-shop and one or two cabins were built at the cross roads before the town was laid out. John Cox built a cabin on the northwest corner of the principal streets and started the first store. This gentleman undertook to sell the first lots in the town at auction, and on the day named for the sale quite a number of pioneers attended. The business opened in the morning, and the auctioneer, John Shriver, expended a wonderful amount of breath, but could get no bids whatever. At noon, Mr. Cox despaired of being the founder of a town, and offered his farm for $300, apparently disgusted with the non-success of the undertaking. No one, however, would buy his farm, even at that money. In this extremity, some one hinted to Mr. Cox a matter that gentleman had overlooked, and which had been the cause of all his trouble. It was the absence of whisky. A jug of the beverage was immediately obtained, a few berries put in, and it was called cherry bounce. After partaking freely of this, the selling of lots again commenced, with better success. The services of John Shriver were dispensed with, and T. J. Bull, of Loudonville, mounted a chestnut stump, which stood about the place now occupied by the town fountain. The first lot was bid off by David Richmond, a shoemaker, for $75. At the close of the day, a mere fraction of the land which at noon had been offered for $300, had been sold for more than twice that amount. Mr. Cox should have understood pioneer nature better than to have attempted anything in those days without the aid of whisky. As evidence of this, Dr. William Bushnell says they attempted once to raise a log barn without whisky, but it could not be done; and the Doctor, then a boy, was sent to the distillery near Uniontown (Ashland) for a jug of the precious beverage. On this trip, the Doctor became lost in the woods, and was compelled to lay out over night, with the wolves for companions.

The post office at Hayes Cross Roads was established in January, 1827. Mr. Cox was Postmaster, and held the office until 1841. John Wilson was the first mail-carrier.

Hayesville is now a pleasant village of three or four hundred people. There are several good stores, and the society is excellent.

CHAPTER LXXIV.

CONGRESS TOWNSHIP.*

BOUNDARIES AND PHYSICAL FEATURES — EARLY SETTLEMENTS — VILLAGE OF WILLIAMSPORT — SCHOOLHOUSES — POST OFFICE — UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH — PIONEERS — FIRST MILL — MT. TABOR CHAPEL — GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH — CHRISTIAN CHURCH — SCHOOLS, ETC.

THIS territory was formerly embraced in the limits of Perry Township. June 6, 1825, Perry was divided, setting off a tract six miles square from the west end, and was organized and named Congress. This township has maintained its original form, excepting in the southwest corner, where a few sections have been set off into Gilead Township for political purposes. Congress Township, in its general appearance and character, resembles Bloomfield, being rather level, yet gently undulating in some portions. The land is generally tillable and the soil fertile. There are several streams coursing through this region, affording stock water and drainage. The early settlements gravitated about two points, Williamsport and West Point. The village of Williamsport is located on the northeast quarter of Section 11. The town site was laid out by William Daken, September 12, 1836. It was surveyed by John Stewart. The village stands upon an elevation, and is easily accessible from either side.

The first building erected upon the town site was a small frame, about twenty feet long by eighteen feet wide, and occupied by B. P. Truax as a store. On the opposite corner, diagonally across the street, was soon erected a log cabin, and occupied by Enoch Hart. This lot is now occupied by the residence of Mr. McGowan. The next building probably was the hotel which occupies the southeast corner. This was erected by John Cook in 1848, and was used by him as a tavern for a term of years, after which it several times changed owners.

The first schoolhouse was built of logs in 1835, and was afterward succeeded by a frame. The present house is a frame, two stories high, but the school consists of only one department. The post office was first established a mile east of the village about 1847, and named Andrews in honor of the first Postmaster. It still retains the same name. John Cook was the second Postmaster, and has held the position the most of the time since. The route in those early days extended from Mansfield to Delaware, over which the stage coach ran regularly, carrying the mail and passengers.

The United Brethren Church is the only religious institution of this community. The edifice stands in the northwest extremity of the town. It is commodious, well finished and furnished, and crowned with a good bell. The society was organized about 1850, and held services for a time in the schoolhouse; they were soon driven to a private house by persecution, where they continued to assemble until the meeting-house was built. Among the ministers were Revs. Hiskey, Tabler, Slaughter and Father George. The original members were Messrs. Kleinfelter, Miller, Silver, Davis, Lane, Clymer and various others. There are at present about sixty-five members. The village affords two physicians, J. A. Thoman and J. L. Graves. Nearly all the early settlers of this region have passed from the arena of conflict to the place of rest, and their posterity remain to fill the vacant places. Among these is John Cook, who is previously mentioned as a prominent citizen. He was born in the township on his father's farm. He came to Williamsport in 1847, having married Miss Mitchell the previous year, and has been identified with the interests of the village ever since. His father, John Cook, Sr., was born in Pennsylvania in 1790, and removed to Richland County in 1811, locating on the farm three miles south of Williamsport, now known as the Cook farm. He raised a large family. Several sons still live in Congress. He died in 1844. William Andrews was one of the early pioneers. He came to Congress in 1835. He was the first Postmaster, and kept store several years in the village, and finally removed to the West about 1850. Peggy Mitchell, an aged and much respected pioneer, lives near the village; she has been in the vicinity since 1830. Her husband, Dan Mitchell, who died in 1879, was a very prominent man. He held the office of Justice of the Peace for a number of years. This couple were blessed with ten children, and Mrs. Mitchell, who is now about ninety years old, retains her vigor of body and mind in a remarkable degree. William Lavering settled on Owl Creek in the early days. He built a horse grist-mill, which was the only thing practicable then, and the settlers for miles around brought their little grists of wheat and corn on horseback, hitched in their horse, ground their own grain, then mounted and returned home. Mr. Lavering built the first saw and grist mill in the township about 1815, on Owl Creek. Enoch Hart was among the first pioneers. He entered the piece of land embracing the town site, and afterward sold it to Mr. Daken. He died in 1877. About two and a half miles northwest is Mount Tabor chapel, the property of the Methodist Episcopal Church. An attractive edifice occupies a considerable elevation, surrounded by a beautiful cemetery. This society was organized many years ago, and for a time flourished, but suffered a serious decline so that for ten or twelve years the place was not supplied with preaching. In 1875, there was a revival which resulted in the building of the present commodious house of worship, the original house having been demolished. There are at present about forty members. Some of the ministers were C. C. Ball, G. Walker, W. W. Smith, Seymour and E. Buxton. A few miles northeast from Mount Tabor is a German Reformed Church. Services are held in both languages, English and German. The church is attended by a number of settlers of German tongue who are from Pennsylvania and other German communities. A few miles north of the German Reformed Church, and about three miles east of West Point, is another chapel, belonging to the Christian Church. This society has been organized some thirty years. There is a membership of about eighty. The building, a nice frame, comfortably furnished, was erected about 1855. The ministers have been Rev. William Gass, Rev. Burns, Revs. Reed, McVey, Van Voorhies, William Dowling and a few others. Congress Township is well supplied with good schoolhouses, mostly built of brick. The numerous schools and churches and other civilizing influences certainly point toward true prosperity. The material resources of this township and its industrious, intelligent citizens promise a bright future.

CHAPTER LXXV.

BOUNDARIES—SURFACE—SETTLERS—VILLAGE OF BLOOMING GROVE—CHURCHES—STORES, SHOPS, ETC.—VILLAGE OF WESTPOINT—EARLY SETTLERS—CHURCHES—SCHOOL.

THIS township joins Troy on the west. It was embraced in the limits of the latter, which was then twelve miles long from east to west, and six miles wide. March 4, 1823, a tract six miles square was set off from the west and named North Bloomfield. The surface of this township is quite smooth, and the soil is free from stones. The early settlements clustered about two points, located in the extreme northeast and southwest portions of the township, West Point and Blooming Grove. The oldest pioneer now living in the vicinity of the latter place is probably Hiram Stevens, who was born in Vermont in 1800. He came to this township in 1823, when there were only eleven voters within its limits. He settled on a piece of land just south of the village, where he remained until recently, when he moved to the town. Four sons and two daughters are the surviving members of his family. James Appleman, another old and honored pioneer, lives just east of the village. He came to Bloomfield in early days, entered a quarter-section of land, embracing a portion of Sections 10 and 11, and cleared it mostly by his own labor. William Harris came to this region in 1820, and settled on the land now owned by Mr. Appleman. He removed to Indiana about 1841. Stephen Borham, who settled about four miles south of the village, came to this vicinity before 1820. His daughter, Mrs. Eckler, was perhaps the first white child born in this township. At a later period, about 1833, quite a tide of immigration visited this portion of the county, bringing Samuel Bishop and family, all of whom are now dead except Mrs. Moore; also John McCool, who settled about two miles south of the village. Thomas Chambers and several other prominent men belong to this period. A few years later, about 1840, Samuel Cummins, John Berger, George Keeler and a few others settled southwest of Blooming Grove. Prominent among the settlers who are identified with the history of the village are J. C. Johnston and Solomon Harding. The former was born in Beaver County, Penn., in 1818, and came to Ohio in 1821, locating near Perrysville with his father. He came to Blooming Grove in 1836. He married Miss Logan in 1838, and built the first dwelling in the village, and has been engaged in business there ever since. He joined the Baptist Church in 1842, and has been an active member through a period of nearly forty years. Solomon Harding, the proprietor of the town site, came to Bloomfield about 1834. He laid out the town, and sold some of the lots, and removed to Galion in 1864, where he died in 1872. His family consisted of seven sons and two daughters. One son resided here till 1859.

* Now in Morrow County, formerly in Richland.

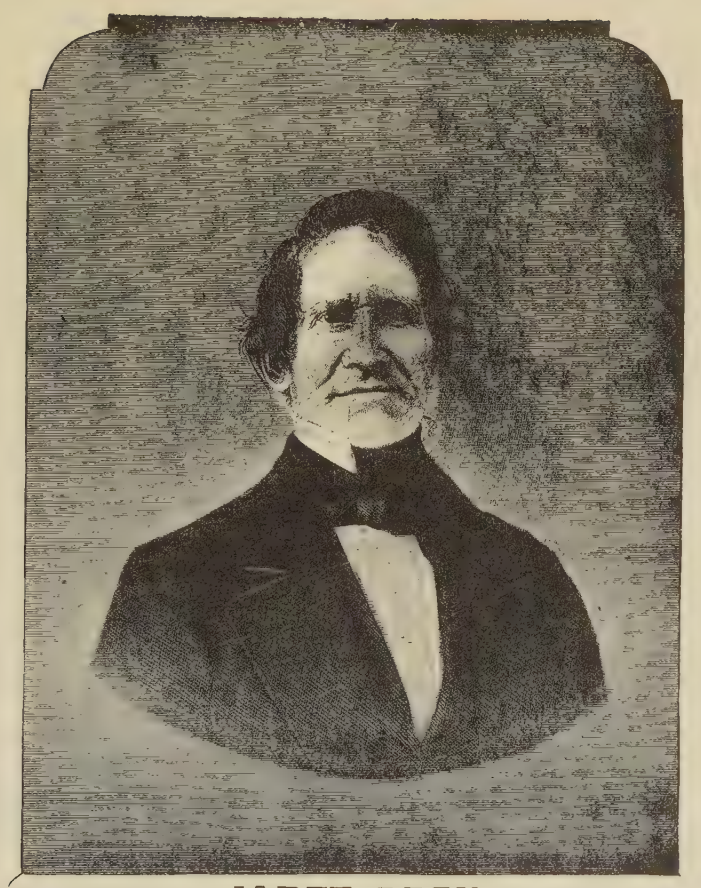
The town site of the village of Blooming Grove was laid out in 1835. It was surveyed by John Steward and acknowledged before David Kilgore, who was then Justice of the Peace. This occurred March 5. The location is a very pleasant one. The town stands upon a little eminence, the ground descending to the east and west. As already stated, the first building was a small, humble dwelling, erected by Mr. Johnston. He also built a blacksmith-shop about the same time. The house stood on Lot No. 8. The post office was established in 1845, with U. G. Baker as Postmaster. The route has often been changed, and at present they have a tri-weekly mail from Galion to Fredericktown and return. The village embraces about one hundred souls. The village school is a common district school of a single department. There are three churches in the village—Baptist, Methodist and Adventist. The Baptist Church was organized October 23, 1843, by Rev. Frederick Freeman. There were fifty-three members at the time of organization, while at present only thirty are enrolled. The meeting-house was erected in 1840. It is a frame house, forty-four feet long and thirty feet wide, costing about $400. This building was replaced, in 1870, with a substantial brick, forty-five feet long and thirty-four feet wide. Its cost was near $2,500. The ministers have been Dr. Newton, Revs. Freeman, Neff, Pearson, Mothland, Morrison and Hall. A good Sunday school of thirty or forty members is sustained. The annual contributions are about $300.



The Advent Church is a neat, frame building in the southern portion of the town. A series of meetings were held during the winter of 1878–79, which resulted in a permanent organization, consisting of twenty-seven members. An effort was soon made to build a church, and resulted in the erection of a commodious chapel, forty-six feet long and twenty-eight feet wide. It is nicely painted, furnished and inclosed by a good board fence. The building cost about $1,600. The society was organized March 16, 1879, by Rev. A. O. Berrill.

The Methodist Episcopal Church was organized in early days, and has varied in numerical and moral strength. The church edifice stands just opposite the Advent, and is a brick structure. The village affords two stores, three blacksmith-shops, one physician—Dr. McFarland—and a few artisans. A beautiful cemetery lies just west of the village. It was laid out in 1840. The first grave was made in 1823. In 1836, only three graves had been made, but at present, about four hundred and thirty bodies rest in the quiet retreat.

The village of West Point is located on the adjacent corners of Sections 31 and 32, in Bloomfield Township, and Sections 5 and 6, in Congress Township. It embraces an area of eight acres, two acres from each section. It was laid out by Mathew Boben in 1848, who sold goods a few years in the village, but was soon thereafter elected Recorder of Morrow County, and removed to Mount Gilead. Many pieces of land were entered, and various settlements made before the town was laid out. The Government patents of various parcels of land joining the town, are in the possession of the present owner—Mr. Rule. These several parcels were entered August 6, 1836, by Isaac Barns, James Sharrock and Samuel Fryman. These patents are signed by Andrew Jackson, President, and Elijah Haywood, Commissioner of the General Land Office. Most of the early pioneers of this region have gone to their rest. Samuel Fryman, who entered the northwest part of the town site, was from Belmont County, Ohio. After making some improvements, he sold to Mr. Rule and went to Missouri. Jacob Heney, who died a few years ago at the age of ninety years, came to Bloomfield in early days, from Pennsylvania. He entered the southeast quarter of Section 23, and lived on the spot up to his death. Henry Bortner entered the northwest quarter of Section 34. He was born in York County, Penn, in 1784. He came to Ohio in 1837, and reared a family of thirteen children, of whom eleven still survive. John Warner settled on the northeast quarter of Section 33, which he entered about 1834. He also was from York County, Penn. He was born in 1807, and died on his homestead in 1874. A large family remain to honor his memory. Mr. Kennon located on the southeast quarter of Section 29. He was a native of the Isle of Man. He was of Scotch descent, and a man of more than ordinary merit. He was a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church and possessed considerable talent. His family consisted of five sons and two daughters, and all were highly respected and appreciated by their neighbors. The father died some twenty years ago; soon the mother followed, and, in consequence, the family was soon scattered. Several other families who are connected with the early history of this region, have long since passed away, but have left a numerous progeny to prolong their memory and their name. The village of West Point is so located that the south half lies in Congress Township, and the north half in Bloomfield Township. In the north quarter of the village lives Isaac Rule, one of the most prominent, yet not earliest, of the settlers. He came to the county with his father in 1828, and located near Woodbury. In 1851, he bought out Mr. Roben, who was selling goods in West Point, and moved to the village. Through his industry and business tact, he has secured about six hundred acres of the best land in this region. He is now about fifty-five years of age. His wife is also an early settler of the county. The village contains one store, several shops and offices. The schoolhouse is a neat brick of one room and a single department. A neat frame church belonging to the Baptist denomination graces the southern quarter of the town. This society was organized before 1840. Some of the original members were Daniel Eastman and Mr. Cash. The present enrollment of members reaches about sixty. Among the Pastors were Rev. T. W. Dye, who died but recently, and had served the congregation some seven years, and Rev. Mothland, of Galion, who has been the late minister. The original meeting-house was a log building and stood about a mile and a half south of the village. About 1856, the present building was erected. It is about forty feet long by thirty-six feet wide. Dr. Frank Rule, a young man of brief experience, but of good parts, practices the healing art. This section of country presents the evidences of real prosperity. It is inhabited largely by industrious, energetic and hardy people, who came from Pennsylvania, Maryland and other Middle States.

CITY OF MANSFIELD.

ACKERMAN, HENRY, barber; he was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, in the town of Neidermodau, Germany, July 11, 1845, and came to this country in 1865; he learned his trade in the Fatherland, and, after coming to this country, he worked for a short time in Crestline, Ohio; he removed to Mansfield in 1866 and commenced business in this city, at which he has continued to date. He was married in Mansfield, July 12, 1867, to Christina Hartman; they have six children—four sons and two daughters.

ANDERSON, J. C., Surgeon; he was born in Butler Co., Ohio; removed to Richland Co. in 1850; he was educated at Ganges and Cleveland; commenced the study of medicine at Ganges in 1863; graduated at the Cleveland Homœopathic Hospital College in 1872; received a commission as Surgeon of the 12th O. V. I. (1878); he is now engaged in the practice of medicine in Mansfield. He was married to Anna M. Wherry, of Shelby; they have one child, 3 years old—Reed Wherry.

AUNGST, JOHN E., farmer; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in Jefferson Township Sept. 3, 1854; he came to Mansfield in 1863, where he has since resided. He was married in this city, in 1876, to Miss Lillie Bell; one daughter, Allie, by this marriage, resides with her parents in this city.

AUGUSTINE, CHARLES, leather merchant; he was born at Sugar Creek Falls, Ohio, Oct. 27, 1831, and came to Mansfield in 1850, where he was employed for a time as clerk in the dry-goods house of Amos Townsend, now Member of Congress from the Cleveland District. May 25, 1858, he was married to Miss Louisa Ritter, daughter of the late Joseph Ritter, to whom have been born six children. In the year 1865, Mr. Augustine joined the Masonic Order, since which time he has been an active Mason and has held a number of subordinate offices. He is a member of the leather firm of Ritter & Sons, in which business he is now engaged, and is considered one of the representative business men of Mansfield.

BAKER, GEORGE, stonemason, and grocery and provision merchant; he was born in Prussia June 9, 1816; learned the trade of stonemason; came to Mansfield Aug. 29, 1848. Married in the old country, Feb. 10, 1842, to Mary Nips, with whom he has raised six children—Peter, born in Germany Sept. 18, 1842; Lizzie, born in Germany Feb. 6, 1847; Bena, born in Mansfield Aug. 2, 1849; George, born in Mansfield Feb. 8, 1856; William, July 3, 1858; Emma Louisa, March 12, 1861. Mr. Baker has resided in Mansfield thirty-two years, and is one of the representative German citizens; has been a member of the German Secret Relief Society since Nov. 16, 1850.

BARTLEY, MORDECAI, deceased, thirteenth Governor elected by the people of Ohio, was born in Fayette Co., Penn., Dec. 16, 1783. In 1804, he married Miss Welles, and five years afterward removed to Jefferson Co., Ohio, where, upon the bank of that river, near the mouth of Cross Creek, he purchased a farm and engaged in the business of agriculture. Here his peaceful labors were interrupted by the declaration of the war of 1812, when, in a few weeks, he enlisted a company of volunteers, who elected him their Captain, and took the field under Gen. Harrison. At the close of the war, he removed to the almost unbroken wilderness of Richland Co., when Mansfield was the principal settlement; west of that place he secured a sufficiently large space to satisfy him, and there, with his ax, he opened a clearing in the forest, and erected his home. Upon this farm, he worked diligently and successfully several years, and then, removing to Mansfield with the savings of his long years of farm labor, he entered into mercantile business. He early developed a character that won the confidence of those that knew him best, for, in 1817, he was elected to the State Senate, and appointed by the State Legislature to the then important position of Register of the Land Office. This gave him charge of the Virginia military district school lands. In 1823, he was elected to Congress, and served four terms, when he declined re-election. In Congress, he was the first to propose the conversion of the land grants of Ohio into a permanent fund for the support of the common school, and secured an appropriation for the harbors of Cleveland, Sandusky City, Huron and Vermillion. In 1844, having retired from Congress, and engaged in mercantile and agricultural business, he was elected Governor of Ohio on the Whig ticket. Both parties have testified to the ability of his administration. In 1846, the war with Mexico was strongly opposed by the antislavery people of Ohio, they regarding its proclamation in the interest of slavery extension, and, in response to the call for troops, they were not in favor of Ohio filling her quota, but Gov Bartley mentioned that Ohio, in common with every other State, was constitutionally bound to respect the requisitions of the National Government. He therefore adopted the proper measures, and the necessary number of volunteers were enlisted, and transferred to the authorities under his personal supervision. The messages he wrote during his administration were papers of ability, and plainly made apparent his thorough knowledge of the rather complex system of United State Government. He declined a second nomination, though strongly urged to accept, and, returning to his home, at Mansfield, he passed the evening of his life in the retirement of his family, dividing his attention between the practice of his profession as a lawyer, and in the management of his farm near that city. He died Oct. 10, 1870.

BAUGHMAN, ELIZABETH C., MRS., daughter of James and Hannah Cunningham, was born near Black Hand, Licking Co., Ohio, March 8, 1805; her mother dying when she was only 6 months old, she was raised by her grandfather, Michael Statler, a farmer near Black Hand. After her father's second marriage, he removed to this (Richland) county, where he figured prominently in the early history of this section of Ohio. In 1819, the subject of this sketch joined her father's family in this county, they residing at that time in the Clear Fork Valley, below Newville, near what is now known as St. John's Church. The change from her grandfather Statler's—a wealthy farmer in a more civilized county—to the hardships and privations of pioneer life here was not a pleasant transition, and was made only because of her father's request. Her grandfather, she says, was one of the kindest and best of men, but she, then in her 16th year, with a deep sense of filial duty, left a home of wealth, comfort and ease, for a cabin in the rude wilderness, where property and life were alike insecure from the savages and wild beasts of the forest. The journey from Black Hand to St. John's was made in a sled, in the month of January, 1819, in two days, stopping over night near Mount Vernon.

Sept. 27, 1825, she was married to Jacob Baughman, who had succeeded to his father's farm, now known as the Dome farm, near Walnut Hall Schoolhouse, in Monroe Township, this county. Soon afterward, her husband sold the Dome farm and bought eighty acres of land, situated between the Lowrey (now Welty), and the Stoul farms, where he erected a cabin and they commenced housekeeping. He afterward sold and bought a number of farms, living at different intervals, in Monroe, Worthington and Jefferson Townships, but returned to Monroe, where he died, March 20, 1855, aged 63 years; he was buried at Perrysville. Mrs. Baughman then removed to Bellville, where she resided until 1869, when she removed to Mansfield, where she has since resided. She is the mother of five children—Mary C. (wife of Abraham Lash), Hannah L. (wife of David Herring), deceased; Margaret C., deceased (wife of Freeman Carlile); Abraham J. Baughman and Sade E. Baughman; the two latter, remaining single, have always lived with their mother. Mrs. Baughman possesses an organization of wonderful tenacity, and is of that wiry physical constition, well-knit and close-fibered, that accompanies a character of great ambition, high spirit and wonderful endurance. While mild and persuasive, yet she always possessed that degree of positive energy that would not give up or back down, no matter what obstacles were in her way. She worked hard, suffered much, and accomplished much. But she has seen the shadows of life's adversities succeeded by the sunshine of prosperity, and has lived to realize the full fruition of the glorious promise, "Your children shall rise up and call you blessed."

She is of a hopeful disposition and her great strength has consisted in being able to look at the bright side of things. Her mirthfulness gives her power of sarcasm and considerable pungency of speech. She is no fox in character, but frank and outspoken, and would never toady to any one. Although not schooled in physiognomy, she could always read faces almost unerringly. She has the mental temperament of the intellectual organization. Is patient, systematic and industrious, and, believing that application will accomplish almost anything, she never had patience with the idle and fickle. Without trying, she always made friends wherever she went, and the tones of her voice would alone win her way anywhere. She united with the Disciple Church in June, 1838, of which organization she has ever since been a worthy and consistent member. Her sympathies are warm, and in sickness she is tender and attentive. In the home circle, as a mother, her children say she is without a peer. Mrs. Baughman is five feet and one inch in height, weighs 105 pounds, erect in poise and symmetrical in build.

March 8, 1880, upon the occasion of her attaining her 75th year, a pioneer birthday party was given her at the family residence, No. 100 South Main st., Mansfield, which was the first pioneer social party ever held in Richland Co.; about fifty guests were present, one of whom, Mrs. Solomon Gladden, was a cotemporaneous pioneer with Mrs Baughman, and was present at her wedding fifty-five years ago; the exercises commenced at 6 o'clock, with music; the ballad, "We Meet To-day," composed and set to music by Prof. Pontius, was sung by Miss Kate Eichelberger, Prof. Pontius at the organ; after which a pioneer sketch, written by a pioneer's daughter, Mrs. Dr. Patterson, daughter of Solomon Gladden (who performed the marriage ceremony for Mr. and Mrs. Baughman), was read by Mrs. Richard, wife of Prof. J. Fraise Richard, of the Normal College, on account of the unavoidable absence of Mrs. Patterson; music was furnished by Prof. Will H. Pontius, Miss Kate Eichelberger and Mrs. W. L. Gaston; other fine selections were rendered by the trio; later in the evening, Miss Mary Cox sang and played. Gen. Brinkerhoff being the patron saint of the pioneers of Richland Co., was first called upon for an address "appropriate to the occasion." He responded in a neat little speech complimentary to the pioneers and "their times," as follows:

"The occasion which has called us together this evening, is one of more than usual interest; birthday celebrations are always pleasant occasions, and we are happy to meet and greet our friends at their recurrence, but yet some birthdays are more interesting than others, and this is one of them. The lady in whose honor we meet to-night, and whom we are glad to find upon her 75th birthday cheerful and happy, not in the winter of life, but in the golden autumn time, is one of the living witnesses of the childhood of our city. Seventy-five years, when we look forward, seems a long time, but looking backward it is not so long, and I have no doubt the incidents recalled by Mrs. Patterson, when Elizabeth Cunningham was a girl, seem to Mrs. Baughman but recent memories. In fact, with us all, it is our early recollections that last the longest. In our sleep we do not locate our dreams amid recent surroundings; but we go back to the homes of our childhood. Mrs. Baughman's father, Capt. James Cunningham, was among the first settlers of Mansfield, and, in the year 1809, when Mansfield first had a habitation and a name, he lived in its first cabin on the Sturges corner. Mrs. Baughman at that time was with her grandfather in Licking Co., but ten years later she removed to Richland Co. where she has since been a resident. Since then, Mansfield has become a populous city, and a massive block of brick and stone occupies the site of the little log cabin on Sturges' corner; and instead of the drum of the pheasant and the hoot of the owl in the leafy woodlands, we have for music the whistle of the locomotive and the clangor of machinery in the huge and smoky factories. We have churches and schools, busy mills, and all the pride, pomp and panoply of wealth and position and fame; and yet, I doubt very much if we have the wisdom, or patriotism, or sincerity, or happiness of those among whom Mrs. Baughman passed the early years of life. Thirty years ago, when I came to Mansfield, very many of the early pioneers were still living, and they seemed to me men of larger mold and broader sympathies than those of this later generation. It was this fact that led me to seek to preserve some record of their lives, and I very soon commenced to gather some of their history, and, after twenty-five years of waiting, a man who has a genius for writing history has come to complete the work, and we hope very soon to put into print an enduring record of the giants of those early days, who founded the civilization of Richland Co. Mr. Graham is with us to-night and I doubt not he will bear out my estimate of the worth of our early pioneers. Mrs. Baughman's father was one of them, and Mrs. Patterson's father was another. I do not remember to have met Capt. Cunningham, but I knew Solomon Gladden very well, and he was a typical pioneer, massive in body and massive in mind. Reuben Evarts, who is here to-night and whom I present to you as a sample of the early pioneers, knew all of these men in their prime, and I hope he will tell us something about them. However, years have come and years have gone, and as the great globe swung in its mighty orbit around the sun, these mighty men of valor passed out into the infinite, and of those who knew them and were among them, of them about the only one who remains in Mansfield now is Mrs. Baughman, whose birthday we celebrate to-night. She is happy in having lived to see the result of their labors, and we are happy in seeking to contribute to the enjoyment of this hour."

After supper, the presents on the occasion were formally presented by Hon. M. May in a brief, but appropriated speech. Among the numerous presents we mention specially a beautiful China tea-set from Elder G. M. Kemp, Gen. R. Brinkerhoff, Hon. M. May, S. E. Jenner, H. W. Albach, Capt. A. C. Cummins and J. Fraise Richard; Elder Kemp, Mrs Baughman's Pastor, followed, responding to Mr. May, accepting the presents in her behalf, in a speech brief, appropriate and touching in its pathos; Reuben Evarts, a real and well-preserved representative pioneer, being called on, made some pleasing allusions to pioneer life and character, and presented an appropriate preamble and resolutions, which were adopted.

BAUGHMAN FAMILY, THE. The ancestor of the Baughman family came from Germany, and located in Pennsylvania. The only knowledge the writer has of his family is of two sons—George and Abraham; and one daughter, married to Joseph Charles. George emigrated to Ohio in 1805, and settled in Mifflin Township, Franklin Co., where he spent the remainder of his life; he died at a ripe old age, and is buried at Gahanna; he was the father of the late Hon. Jesse Baughman, the founder of Gahanna, and one of the originators of the Franklin County Pioneer Association. Abraham was born on the Atlantic Ocean when his parents were en route for America. He married Mary Catharine Deeds, and removed from Cumberland to Washington Co., Penn., and afterward to Richland Co., Ohio, settling in Monroe Township in 1811; they had five sons and three daughters—Adam, John, Abraham, Jacob and George, and Catharine, Elizabeth and Lovace; Catharine married a Mr. Black, of Tuscarawas Co.; Elizabeth married a Mr. Stewart, and removed to Tennessee, and Lovace married a Mr. Gayman, of Pittsburgh; Adam married a Miss Huffman, and removed to Plain Township, Franklin Co., Ohio, and he and his wife are both interred on the Baughman farm there, where they lived and where they died; John married Elizabeth Wyandt, and settled in Wayne Co., Ohio, and the township in which he lived was named for him; Abraham married Susan Wyandt, and settled in Monroe Township, Richland Co., Ohio, where he died in 1848; his children were Margaret, wife of John Wolfe; David, married to Rebecca Wolfe; John, married to Catharine Castator; Aaron, married to Catherine Schrack; Peter, married to Eliza Wyandt; George, married to Minerva Merrell; Elizabeth, wife of Simon McDanel; William, married to Rachel Slater; Abraham, married to Eliza Wrigton; Susanna; Simon, married to Susan Mercer. Jacob Baughman married Elizabeth Cunningham; his life was principally passed in Monroe Township, Richland Co., where he died March 20, 1855, aged 63 years. They had five children—Mary C., married to Abraham Lash; Hannah L., married to David Herring; Margaret A., married to Freeman Carlile; Abraham J. and Sarah E.; the two latter remain single and live with their mother; they are printers, and publish the Mansfield Call; they have also published the Cleveland Temple Visitor, Mansfield (Ohio) Liberal, Canal Fulton Herald and Medina Democrat. George Baughman never married, and died in 1850.

BERNO, PETER, merchant, Mansfield, Ohio; he was born in Rhein Pfaltz, a province of the Kingdom of Bavaria, Germany, and came to this country, with his parents, June 10, 1851, and to Mansfield, Ohio, June 16, 1851; his father's name was Jacob Berno, and his mother's Fredricka Profit. His grandfather, on his father's side, was a soldier in the French army during the French Revolution, and, during the invasion of Germany by the French, was taken prisoner. He subsequently remained and became a citizen of that country. The name was originally spelled "Bernoux." The subject of this sketch was married to Christiana Bohm, whose parents were of German origin, and residents of Mansfield since 1850.

BIGELOW, PERKINS, druggist; he was born in Marlboro, N. H., Nov. 11, 1814; here we find him a farmer boy, alternately attending school during the winter months, and working on his father's farm during the remainder of the year, until 18 years of age. The school being situated in a remote part of the district, young Bigelow was compelled to traverse several miles daily, in that bleak, winter climate, in order to gain that knowledge which has been so useful to him in his after life. Directly after leaving school, he was employed in dry goods, as clerk, for five years previous to his removal to Ohio; arriving at Newark, he continued as a salesman in dry goods for three years, where, joining a colony for Texas in 1841, he accompanied them as far as Arkansas, then up the White River until near the boundary of the Cherokee Nation, undergoing the hardships incident to such a trip at that time. While there, he assisted in building the first log cabins of the colony, but soon after was compelled, by reason of sickness, to return to Newark, Ohio, where he entered a drug store, reading medicine at the same time; then to Mansfield, in the year 1847, on the same block in which he has continued in that business up to the present time, ranking now as the oldest living merchant in continuous business in Mansfield. During Dr. Bigelow's long and useful life in Mansfield, he has been prominently connected with all enterprises undertaken in the improvement of the city and the welfare of its inhabitants, and has frequently been called by them to positions of honor and and trust. Elected as Mayor of the city in 1852, he was re-elected in 1853. For twenty years, he has been a useful member of the Cemetery Association, the plans and improvements of which have been, in a great measure, due to his judgment and skill. For fifteen years, he held the position of Worshipful Master of the Mansfield Masonic Lodge, and at present is a member of the Richland Mutual Insurance Co. Perkins Bigelow was married in Zanesville, Ohio, in 1846, to Miss Anna Maria Palmer; they have two children—one son and one daughter.

BIRD, SHARPLESS E., long connected with the St. James Hotel, in Mansfield, was born on the 20th of December, 1844; his father and mother, William and and Jane (Sharpless) Bird are residents of this city. S. E. Bird was married July 4, 1869, in Mansfield, to Lizzie Vonhof, a daughter of Louis Vonhof, proprietor of the St. James building; to them have been born four children, three of whom are dead and one living. Mr. Bird, though a young man, has aided in years past in giving Mansfield a high position by his skill in conducting one of the best hotels in the State; he is now engaged in the mercantile business.

BLACK, JOSEPH H., dealer in staple dry goods, corner of Fourth and Main streets; was born in 1833, at Ballgreen County, Donegal, Ireland; emigrated in 1851 to McConnelsville, Morgan Co., Ohio; engaged as salesman with Thomas W. Simpson, in dry goods. Came to Mansfield in August, 1859; entered in partnership with Moses Black, under the firm name of M. & J. H. Black, dry goods; continued in partnership for sixteen years; dissolved in 1875, then resumed business in his own name; continues to do the largest exclusive dry-goods trade in the city. He is a very hard and earnest worker in the mercantile business; by his long experience and close application, is thoroughly posted on all matters connected with the dry-goods business, as he has been almost raised in a dry-goods store; he is a solid, practical, bnsiness man, and an excellent financier. Was married in 1866 to Miss Alice G. Graham, daughter of Francis Graham, of Ashland, Ohio; their children are Mary, Augusta F., Joseph H., Jr., and William G. Black. Residence on Mulberry street, No. 45.

BLOSER, S. P., retired; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., in 1824; he came to Ohio in 1850. He was married in 1852 to Elizabeth Snyder, who was born in Lockport, N. Y.; they have one daughter—Minnie, who is married to Henry Uhlich.

BOLLMAN, JERRY S., Recorder; was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., Jan. 20, 1834, and removed with his parents to Richland Co., where they settled in Franklin Township in 1849. Mr. Bollman came to Mansfield and began the trade of cabinet-making in 1852 with Capt. Reinaker, and served his full apprenticeship of three years, when he entered the store of John H. Wigle, where he remained for some time; then into Remy & Co.'s dry-goods store, Scattergood & Penrose, Robinson & Vance, C. L. Avery's and Black's. In the year 1877, Mr. Bollman was elected Recorder of Richland Co., on the Democratic ticket, and took possession of the office on the 7th of January, 1878, and now fills that position with credit to himself and to the satisfaction of both political parties; the abstract office, in connection with the one which he fills, is a model of convenience, and reflects great credit on him, to whom it personally belongs. Mr. Bollman was married to Miss Lydia A. Dill in Mansfield July 7, 1858; they have four children, all living—Barton T., now a telegraph operator in Mansfield; Curtis J., a druggist; Milton F., and Roy J. Mr. Bollman is at present a resident of the Third Ward, Mansfield, and enjoys the confidence of the entire community.

BOSSLER, HENRY, woodworkman in the Mansfield Machine Works; he was born in Madison Township, Richland Co., Jan. 14, 1839. Married, Sept. 27, 1863, Josephine McIlvain, who was born in Mansfield May 22, 1843; they have one son—William T., born March 17, 1865. Mr. Bossler has been engaged with the Mansfield Machine Works over two years, and has won the entire confidence of his employers through his industry and frugality, and is recognized as one of our substantial and active citizens.

BRINKERHOEF, HON. JACOB, was born in the town of Niles, Cayuga Co., N. Y., Aug. 31, 1810. His father, Henry I. Brinkerhoff, was a native of Pennsylvania, having been born near the town of Gettysburg; his grandfather, however, was from Hackensack, N. J., and belonged to the old Dutch family of

New York, the progenitor of which came from Drentland, in Holland, in the year 1638. His mother, nee Rachel Bevier, was of Huguenot descent, and came from Ulster Co , N. Y. After a thorough English education, obtained at the public schools and at the academy at Prattsburgh, Steuben Co., N. Y., he entered the law office of Messrs. Howell & Brother, in Bath, Steuben Co., in 1834. Here he regularly prosecuted his studies two years, and in the spring of 1836, removed to Mansfield, Ohio, where, in May, 1837, he was admitted to the bar of the Supreme Court of the State, and immediately entered upon the practice of his profession. He soon acquired reputation as a lawyer of more than average ability, and in the course of a year or two was elected Prosecuting Attorney for Richland County, the duties of which he performed successfully for four years; at the expiration of his office, in the fall of 1843, he was elected to Congress, on the Democratic ticket; while serving as a member of this body, he became affiliated with the Free-Soil party, and drew up the famous resolution introduced by David Wilmot, of Pennsylvania, and since known as the Wilmot Proviso; the original draft of this resolution, in his own handwriting, is still in his possession. Several copies of this resolution were made and distributed among the Free-Soil members of Congress, with the understanding that whoever among them should catch the Speaker's eye and get the floor should introduce it; Wilmot was the fortunate man, and thereby his name was attached to the resolution, and it has gone into history as the "Wilmot Proviso," instead of the Brinkerhoff Proviso, as it should have been. At the close of his Congressional career, he resumed the practice of law, at Mansfield, in which he successfully labored until he was elevated to the Supreme Bench, his first term commencing Jan. 9, 1856; in this highly honorable position, he was retained for three successive terms, covering a period of fifteen years, and it is but justice to mention that a fourth term was offered him, but he declined a renomination. The Ohio State Reports contain many of his opinions, delivered during his term upon the Supreme Bench, and they are everywhere very highly regarded by the profession. He was married, Oct. 4, 1837, to Caroline Campbell, of Lodi, Seneca Co., N. Y., who died at that place while on a visit, Nov. 18, 1839. His present wife was Marion Titus, of Detroit, Mich , by whom he has four children now living, two sons and two daughters, viz.: Malvina, George, Roelof and Gertrude. The Judge has retired from his profession, and still resides at Mansfield, but in feeble health.

BRINKERHOFF, GEN. ROELIFF, was born in Owasco, Cayuga Co., N. Y., June 28, 1828. The Brinkerhoffs of America are all descended from Joris Dericksen Brinckerhoff, who came from Drentland, Holland, in 1638, with his wife Susannah, and settled in Brooklyn, N. Y., then New Netherlands. The members of the family are now numerous, and for the most part are settled upon Long Island, and in the valley of the Hudson, but still a few families of the name can be found in almost every Western State. The Western Brinkerhoffs are mostly descendants of Hendrick, son of Joris, who settled in New Jersey, and who dropped the letter c from his name. Gen. Brinkerhoff is of the seventh generation in America; his father, George R., was born near Gettysburg, Penn., but his grandfather, Roeliff, came from Hackensack, N. J.; his ancestors on his mother's side (the Bouviers), and on his grandmother's (the Demarests), were French Huguenots, fleeing from religious persecution, who found safety and a home among the tolerant Dutchmen of the New Netherlands. Roeliff, the subject of this sketch, at the age of 16 was a school teacher in his native town; at 18, he was in charge of a school near Hendersonville, Tenn.; at 19, he was a tutor in the family of Andrew Jackson, Jr., at the Hermitage, and remained there until 1850, when he came North and entered as a law student in the office of his kinsman, the Hon. Jacob Brinkerhoff, at Mansfield, Ohio; in 1852, he was admitted to the bar, and entered the practice, and remained in the profession until the war of the rebellion; during that time, June, 1855 to 1859, he was one of the editors and proprietors of the Mansfield Herald. In September, 1861, he entered the military service as First Lieutenant and Regimental Quartermaster of the 64th O. V. I.; in November of the same year, he was promoted to the position of Captain and Assistant Quartermaster, and during the winter was on duty at Bardstown, Ky; after the capture of Nashville, he was placed in charge of transportation, land and river, in that city; after the battle of Pittsburg Landing, he was ordered to the front, and placed in charge of the field transportation of the Army of the Ohio; after the capture of Corinth, he went home on sick furlough, and was thence ordered to Maine as Chief Quartermaster in that State; subsequently, he was transferred to Pittsburgh, Penn., in charge of transportation and army stores, and thence to Washington City as Post Quartermaster, and remained on that duty until June, 1865, when he was made a Colonel and Inspector of the Quartermaster's Department; he was then retained on duty at the War Office, with Secretary Stanton, until November, when he was ordered to Cincinnati as Chief Quartermaster of that Department; in September, 1866, he was breveted a Brigadier General of Volunteers; he was also tendered a commission in the regular army, but declined; on the 1st of October, at his own request, he was mustered out of service, having completed five years of continuous service in the army. Gen. Brinkerhoff is the author of the book entitled "The Volunteer Quartermaster," which is still the standard guide for the officers and employes of the Quartermaster's Department. After his retirement from the army, he returned to the practice of his profession, at Mansfield. In 1873, upon the organization of the Mansfield Savings Bank, he became its executive officer as cashier, and has since retained that position; he is also a member of the Board of State Charities, and President of the National Conference of Charities. Gen. Brinkerhoff, Feb. 3, 1852, married Mary Lake Bentley, of Mansfield, daughter of Baldwin Bentley, and grand-daughter of Gen. Robert Bentley, by whom he has a family of four children, two sons and two daughters—Robert Bentley, Addie Horton, Mary and Roeliff, all now living at Mansfield.

BRINLEY, SAMUEL G. (deceased); was born in Mifflin Township Sept. 10, 1831; his father, John Brinley, is a resident of La Grange Co., Ind. Samuel G. was the first child. When 16 years of age, he commenced clerking in a dry-goods store in Petersburg, where he lived four years; soon after, he removed to this city, and was engaged in the dry-goods store of James Weldon, where he remained ten years. For several years during the war, he held the position of Deputy Provost Marshal and United States Marshal, and was a clerk in the Treasurer's office of this county under T. J. Robinson. He was married, Oct. 30, 1853, in Mansfield, to Miss Elzina S. Grubaugh; they are the parents of seven children. Charles Oscar was born Aug. 7, 1854; John Allen was born Aug. 1, 1857; Joseph Franklin was born March 27, 1860; Harry S. was born July 16, 1864; Elzina S. was born Dec. 15, 1866, and died April 15, 1868; Aden was born June 25, 1870, and Lee was born Feb. 19, 1872. Mr. Brinley died in this city Dec. 26, 1876; he was, for a number of years before his death, a successful contractor and builder, and had the confidence and esteem of the community. He was a member of the I. O. O. F. for a number of years, and of the Methodist Church for twenty-five years. Mrs Elzina Brinley was born near Loudenville, Ashland Co., Nov. 19, 1833; she is now a resident of West Bloom street.

BRISTOR, T. G., dentist; he was born in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., in 1837; he came to Steubenville, Ohio, in 1844, where he studied dentistry; he came to Mansfield in 1858, and engaged in the practice of dentistry. In 1865, he went to St. Louis, Mo., and practiced dentistry until 1872, when he returned to Mansfield; he has been engaged here since. He is the oldest dentist in the city. He has branch offices at Shelby, Shiloh, Bellville and Hayesville, which places he visits once each month—Mondays and Tuesdays.

BRISTOR, JAMES R., dentist, Mansfield; he was born in Washington, Washington Co., Penn., Jan. 28, 1834, and emigrated to Steubenville, Ohio, April 1, 1845, with his father and mother; in 1857, he connected himself with the dental profession and moved to Mansfield, in 1860, and located. He was married, Jan. 6, 1873, to Hannah M. Duncan, widow of Alex. Critchfield, of Millersburg, Ohio; she was born at Bloomfield, Coshocton Co., Ohio, Feb. 26, 1840, and moved with her father and mother to Millersburg, Ohio, in the fall of 1852, and to Mansfield in January, 1873; they have three children—John Henry, born April 25, 1874; Harriet Louisa, Sept. 14, 1875; Laura Virginia, April 20, 1878. In 1876, Mr. Bristor was elected from the Fourth Ward as one of the city Councilmen, and, in 1879, he was chosen to preside as President of Council of the city of Mansfield. James R. Bristor was born of Henry M. Bristor and Minerva Ruple Bristor, his wife, both of whom were born in Washington Co., Penn. Henry M. Bristor was born of Thomas Bristor and Elizabeth Dubany Bristor, his wife, both of whom were born near the James River, in Eastern Virginia; their parents lived within hearing distance of the cannon at the surrender of Cornwallis at Yorktown, Va. Minerva Ruple Bristor was born of James Ruple and Dina G. Ruple, in Washington Co., Penn. Hannah Duncan Bristor was born of John Duncan and Nancy Casey Duncan; her father emigrated from Washington, Penn., to Ohio, and her mother from Harper's Ferry, W. Va.

BRONSON, S. A., D. D., Pastor Protestant Episcopal Church; Dr. Bronson is a lineal descendant of Abraham Bronson, one of the two Bronsons who, in 1673, petitioned the court for the privilege of settling on a plantation in what is now the town of Waterbury, Conn.; Dr. Bronson's father, Bela Bronson, emigrated from Connecticut to Ohio and settled in what is now Columbia, Lorain Co., in 1807; the Doctor was then in his infancy, and was carried in his mother's arms across the Cuyahoga, with the first team that crossed in the tide of Western emigration; he was taken to church by his mother and was baptized in Waterbury, his native place; the first minister of the Gospel he remembers to have seen was when he was about 9 years old; his mother and the church service, read by laymen, were his only teachers; at the age of 16, he traveled on horseback about seventy miles in the fruitless search for a Latin dictionary; he afterward attended school at Kenyon College, where he graduated in 1838; two years after, he was ordained to the ministry; from 1845 to 1850, he was President of Kenyon College; in 1867, he was Professor of Ecclesiastical History in the same institution; in 1872, he came to Mansfield to accept the pastorate of the church here; he had, however, filled the pulpit a year and a half before coming.

BURNS, BARNABAS, attorney at law. The parents of Mr. Burns, Andrew and Sarah (Caldwell) Burns, were Irish Catholics, and emigrated to America about the year 1800; they had a family of five children, three sons and two daughters. Mr. B., the youngest of five children, was born in Fayette Co., Penn., June 29, 1817; he emigrated with his parents to Milton Township, Ashland Co., settling there June 20, 1820; Mr. Burns remained on a farm until he was of age; he received a common-school education, and also spent a short time in the Ashland and Mansfield schools. He came to Mansfield April 9, 1838, where he has resided ever since. He was Deputy Clerk of the Courts, from 1839 to 1846; he studied law in the offices of Hon. Thomas W. Bartley and Hon. Samuel J. Kirkwood, and was admitted to practice in the summer of 1848, and has practiced law in Mansfield from that date to the present time. In the fall of 1847, Mr. Burns was elected to the Ohio State Senate, and re-elected in the fall of 1849; he was Presidential Elector for the State at large, on the Democratic ticket, in 1852; he served as Colonel of the 86th O. V. I. in the war of the rebellion, doing excellent service there; after his return, he again began the practice of his profession. In 1873, he was elected a member of the Constitutional Convention, and the same year was nominated on the Democratic ticket as Lieutenant Governor; out of a vote of nearly 600,000, he was defeated by only about five hundred votes; in 1876, Col. Burns was one of the Ohio Commissioners at the Centennial Exposition, filling that office, like all others, in a manner satisfactory to all the interests concerned therein; Col. B. has served several terms as one of the Trustees of the Ohio Soldiers' Orphans' Home; he is now, although 63 years old, actively engaged in the practice of his profession, being one of the oldest members of the Mansfield bar now in practice; he has always been an active and consistent Democrat. Col. Burns was married, Sept. 16, 1841, to Miss Urath Gore; Mr. and Mrs. B. became the parents of seven children, two of whom died in infancy; three sons and two daughters yet survive—

Mary (wife of Dr. Geo. Mitchell), John Caldwell, Kate, Jerrie H. and Barna G.

BUSHNELL, WILLIAM, physician. The family from which Dr. Bushnell descends dates back, in America, to early in the sixteenth century. Sometime in that period, Francis Bushnell came from England to America, and located in Guilford, Hartford Co., Conn.; he died in 1646, as the records show, his death being the first authentic date in possession of the family. He left five sons—Francis, William, John, Richard and Isaac. The second son, William, married and settled in Connecticut, and, at his death, left four children, the second of whom, Ephraim, also lived in Connecticut, and raised a family of seven children. His third child, James, was born March 12, 1716, and, about the year 1736, married a Miss Dudley. He was a seafaring man, and, soon after his marriage, went to sea on one of his voyages, and was never afterward heard from. It is supposed his vessel was lost at sea. After his departure to sea, his only son, Alexander, was born June 2, 1737. Feb. 12, 1761, he married Chloe Waite, a member of the Waite family of Lyme, Conn. (Chief Justice Waite, of Ohio, is a descendant of the same family). Miss Waite was born June 20, 1738. She lived to be 94 years old, dying Oct. 28, 1832. She became the mother of eleven children. The sixth child, Sterling G., the father of Dr. Bushnell, was born in Hartford Co., Conn., in 1781. The exact date is not known, as the record has been lost. Mr. Bushnell came to Trumbull Co., Ohio, in 1805, and to Vermillion Township, Ashland Co., May 20, 1820. His family then consisted of eleven children—Betsey, Lury, William, Collins, Sedelia, Jotham, Huldah, Roselia, Horner, Olive and Thomas. Of these, six are now living—Betsey, William, Sedelia, Huldah, Rosella and Thomas. Mr. Bushnell lived in this township until August, 1847, when his death occurred. He was 76 years of age. His wife lived several years after her husband's death, dying in the old homestead; she lives with her son Thomas, who is there yet. Mr. Bushnell was a man of scholarly attainments, and great force of character. He was a surveyor, and surveyed parts of the Reserve in the counties of Ashtabula, Medina and Lorain; while living in Trumbull Co., he surveyed a good deal of its territory there. William B. remained at home in Vermillion Township, teaching school about one year, assisted in opening the farm, and studying medicine; he then went to Trumbull Co. to study medicine; in 1825, he went to the old Ohio Medical College, at Cincinnati, where he remained about one year at the medical school; at the end of the time, he went to New Orleans, and settled at Point Coupee, where he practiced medicine one year; while there, he taught in an academy seven months; from there he returned to this county, and located in Mansfield; this was in July, 1828. The Doctor has since lived here, engaged in the practice of medicine. When Dr. Bushnell was a boy, he took a small part in the war of 1812. He was quite ambitious of military life then, as were all boys of the day, and enjoyed at least one adventure. After Hull's surrender, when in his 12th year, the 1st Regiment of the 3d Brigade, and the 4th Division of the Ohio Militia, on its way to the frontier, halted and took dinner at the residence of his father, who was Adjutant of that regiment. William, believing he was old enough to go with the troops, pleaded his cause so earnestly to accompany the regiment, that he was allowed to do so, and marched with it to the vicinity of Cleveland, where the troops were encamped. A battle being imminent with the Indians, his father told him he must go back home. He obeyed very reluctantly, as he desired to take a hand in the fighting. He retraced his steps alone through the dense wilderness, guided only by the trail left by the regiment.

April 5, 1836, Dr. Bushnell married Mary, only daughter of Gen Robert Bentley, a man of much ability, who resided in this county. Of their children only one is living—Martin B., a resident of Mansfield. During his long and successful career as a physician, Dr. Bushnell has also devoted himself to public business, and held several places of responsibility. Many of the internal improvements in the northern portion of the State were either projected by him, or owe their existence to his energy and influence. He was one of the Directors of the Alantic & Great Western Railway, not only during its construction, but for some years after its completion. In 1849, Dr. Bushnell was elected a member of the Ohio House of Representatives, and subsequently re-elected, and served several terms in that legislative body. After the establishment of the Cleveland Medical College, he was connected with it as a Censor for about fifteen years. He is a member of the American Medical Association, and also of the Ohio Medical Association; and, as a physician and surgeon, he ranks with the most eminent in the State. Possessed of a remarkably vigorous constitution, he has been enabled to perform an unusual amount of work. In the early days of his practice, with almost impassable roads to travel long distances, it required the constant exercise of those virtues. He is possessed of an exceedingly dignified and pleasant appearance, and commands the respect of the community where he has lived so long, and with satisfaction to his constituents, whom he has represented. In June, 1878, he was appointed by Gov. Bishop the Delegate of Ohio to the International Congress on prison reform, called by and under the auspices of Sweden, to take place in Stockholm on the 29th of June. The Doctor took passage on the Inman steamer City of Chester, to attend to the duties of his delegation, and at the same time enjoy a European tour. Since his return, he has been quietly living in the city, enjoying the fruits of a long and busy life.

CAIRNS, ROBERT, was born on the McFall corner, in Mansfield, Feb. 3, 1815; at the age of 3 years, his parents removed to the opposite corner, now occupied by M. L. Miller; he has always resided in the city and county. He was married, in 1835, to Elizabeth Gordon, by Rev. James Johnson, the first minister of the U. P. Church in Mansfield. Mr. and Mrs. Cairns are the parents of nine children—four boys and five girls—all living. Mr. C. comes of a family remarkable for longevity, size and activity; they were all prominent actors in the history of this county. His father, Joseph Cairns, came to this county from Muskingum County directly after Hull's surrender; he acted as a Captain in a regiment in the early part of the war of 1812. Mr. C. is of Irish parentage, rugged, hardy and active, and bids fair to live many years to relate the incidents of pioneer times; no one has a better and more accurate memory than he, and no one enjoys telling of old times more than Robert Cairns.

CAKE, HIRAM, employe of A. & G. W. R. R.; he was born in Canton, Stark Co., Ohio, Aug. 23, 1823; he came to Richland Co. May 2, 1840, and immediately engaged as a clerk in the dry-goods house of the late William McNulty, which was then situated on the northwest corner of Main and Fourth streets: he remained with him until 1846, when he enlisted in the United States Army and joined the company from this county as private, under Capt. William McLaughlin, in the war with Mexico; after the expiration of his term of service, he returned to Mansfield and soon after engaged in the employ of Isaac Smith, a dry-goods merchant of Monroeville, Ohio; after several months' residence there, he went to New York City, where he was employed in the wholesale dry-goods house of Marsh & Trear, with whom he remained four years, when he returned to Mansfield and again engaged in the employ of William McNulty for one year, taking charge of the business during McNulty's absence in California. He then was employed by W. L. Strong in the same business for some time, when he went to California, in 1852; after an absence of fourteen months, he came back to Mansfield and was employed by the Penn. R. R. Co., as book-keeper, for several years, since which time he has been constantly engaged in the railroad business, in different capacities, until the present time. At the age of 21, he joined the Masonic Order and became a member of the Mansfield Lodge, No. 35, in which he is yet a member; during his long membership in this order, he was repeatedly elected as its Secretary, and has been, and now is (1880), Secretary of Mansfield Chapter of Royal Arch Masons and the Mansfield Council of Royal and Select Masters; he now holds the position of Recorder of the Mansfield Commandery, No. 21, Knights Templar. He was married in Mansfield, in June, 1850, to Miss Maria L. McCullough, oldest daughter of Judge David McCullough; they were the parents of eight children, six of whom are living. Mrs. Maria Cake died in this city in 1869.

CANTWELL, WILLIAM (deceased), was born in August, 1786, in Brooke Co., Va. He married Ann Williams, and afterward removed to Jefferson Co., Ohio, where they remained until 1820, when they removed to Richland Co. and settled on a farm two miles from Mansfield, on the Spring Mill road, where they resided almost continuously up to the time of the death of the wife of Mr. Cantwell, which occurred in January, 1850; he survived his companion, with whom he had lived over fifty years, but died in 1857. William and Anne Cantwell will be remembered by the pioneers, who still survive, very favorably and kindly, and Mrs. Cantwell will be remembered as one of extraordinary intellectual acquirements for one in the period of pioneer life in which she lived; they raised a family of twelve children, eleven of whom grew up to be men and women. Thomas, the oldest, located on a farm near Olivesburg, in Richland Co., about 1820, and remained there till his death in 1868; William was accidentally killed by the fall of a tree; Martha married Jacob George; Margaret married David Jacques; Rachel married William Williams; Elizabeth married John Cary; Jane married John Scott; Col. James married Sarah S. Ferguson; Nancy married Samuel H. Davis; John F. married Matilda Casebeer, and J. Y. married Mrs. J. C. Curtis; they were all at one time residents of Richland Co. Only three of the family survive—Margaret Jacques, Jane Scott and J. Y. Cantwell. James Cantwell was born in December, 1810, and hence was 10 years old when he came with his father to Richland Co.; in 1845, he responded to the call of the Government and volunteered in the military service for one year during the Mexican war; he was elected and served as First Lieutenant of the company of which McLaughlin was Captain; after the war, he represented Richland Co. two terms in the Ohio Legislature, and the district of which Richland forms a part, one term in the Ohio Senate. In 1859, he removed to Kenton, Hardin Co., and, at the breaking-out of the rebellion, he raised a company the second day after Fort Sumter was fired upon, and went to Columbus April 16, 1861, when his company was assigned to the 4th O. V. I., and he was elected Lieutenant Colonel of the regiment, Louis Andrews being Colonel. In October following, he was tendered a commission as Colonel of the 82d O. V. I., which he accepted, and recruited and organized in less time than any other three-years regiment was organized. In January, 1862, the regiment was ordered to West Virginia, and from the first was one of the most active regiments in the field; it took part with Schenck and Milroy at the battle of Bull Pasture Mountain in May, 1862; then marched with Fremont and Seigel across the Shenandoah Mountains and took part in the memorable campaign of Jackson and Banks in Shenandoah Valley; was at the battle of Cross Keys; then marched over the Blue Ridge and joined the Army of the Potomac; was at the battle of Cedar Mountain. It was one of four regiments connected with Milroy's brigade, the advance guard of Pope's army in its march toward the enemy, and the rear guard on its retreat, and hence for ten successive days prior to the second battle of Bull Run the regiment was continually under fire; it was engaged actively and in the foremost of the second Bull Run battle on the 30th of August, 1862, and while gallantly leading his regiment on a charge, Col. Cantwell was instantly killed, the ball passing in just below the left eye and out at the back part of the head. Thus fell one of the bravest of men, beloved by all the soldiers, and leaving many friends behind him; but he died as a true soldier would choose to die, upon the field of battle, and his widow and family, who reside still in Kenton, Ohio, appreciate the sentiment inscribed by an officer upon the board that marked his temporary grave upon the battle-field:

> "How sleep the brave who sink to rest
> By all their country's wishes blest."

His family and friends revere his memory as a true and faithful husband and father, noble man and soldier, and a firm friend. J. Y. Cantwell was born in December, 1824, within two miles of Mansfield; he grew up to manhood in this locality; read medicine with J. W. Chandler, in Mansfield; graduated in the spring of 1847, and practiced medicine in his native town successfully until the breaking-out of the rebellion, and entered the service of the Medical Department on the 15th of April, 1861; was first connected with the 4th O. V. I., but was afterward appointed Surgeon of the 82d O. V. I., Col. Cantwell's regiment, and was in active duty in the field till December, 1863, filling the position of Brigade, Division and Corps Surgeon, as official orders will show; he participated in more than twenty battles, in all of which he occupied the position of Operating Surgeon. In January, 1864, he was commissioned by President Lincoln Surgeon of the U. S. Volunteers, and assigned to duty by the Surgeon General as Inspector of Hospitals, with Washington as headquarters; in this capacity, he visited all the principal cities, inspecting hospitals, discharging, etc.; returning to duty, he was transferred to the Veteran Reserve Corps, where he remained till April, 1865, when he was assigned to duty at Columbus, Ohio, as Superintendent of Hospitals, where he remained till the Government property was disposed of and the hospitals closed in October following, when he was mustered out of service, but, by recommendation of the Surgeon General of the U. S. Army, for meritorious services, he was breveted Lieutenant Colonel, and he now holds a commission, signed by Andrew Johnson and Edwin M. Stanton, conferring upon him that rank. After the war, he went to Alabama and engaged in the planting interests as well as his profession, but has now returned to his native city, where he expects to spend the greater portion of his time during the balance of his life.

CAREY, F. C., proprietor of soap factory; was born in Ashland Co. (formerly Richland), Perry Township; came to Mansfield recently, and purchased the soap factory, which was established in 1868 and has been one of the leading enterprises of this city; the company have the capacity to manufacture 40,000 pounds per month; they manufacture the following varieties of soap: laundry, toilet, castile, barbers', tar, and also the celebrated coldwater soap; they are introducing and extending the sale of their soap in a number of States. They exchange soap for grease, also pay the highest market price for tallow.

CARPENTER, GEORGE F., attorney; was born Aug. 8, 1820, in Worthington Township. Was married, July 2, 1852, to Jennette L. Reid, of Mansfield; their children are Reid, Frank, John, Nettie, Dan and Lizzie. Mr. Carpenter came to Mansfield in the fall of 1842, studied law with James Purdy; was admitted to the bar in February, 1845, in New Lisbon, Ohio; entered in partnership with James Purdy; continued till 1847, then formed a partnership with Gen. William McLaughlin; continued till 1852, then resumed the practice of law alone for several years, after which he formed a partnership with Col. Isaac Gass. Was in the army from April 6, 1863, till Nov. 12, 1865; appointed Paymaster of the Army of the Cumberland; returned to Mansfield and resumed the practice of law; in 1874, entered in partnership with H. P. Davis, which continues up to the present time; office in the Carpenter Block, corner of Third and Main streets.

CARPENTER, W. B., tanner; he was born Sept. 15, 1825, in Worthington Township; he served as an apprentice at the tanner's trade for three years in Newville, with T. F. Simmons; at the expiration of this time, he went to Buffalo, N. Y., and completed his trade; he then returned to Newville and superintended the tannery for his father; he afterward formed a partnership with G. F. Carpenter, and remained six years; in 1852, he dissolved partnership, but he continued the business, making twenty-seven years' continuous work in a tannery. He was married, Sept. 15, 1846, to Emeline Grove, who was born in 1828, in Montgomery Co., Penn.; they had the following family—Alfred George (married to Alice Boyd), and resides in Cleveland, engaged in the practice of law; Clara L. (married to Joseph Charlton); Electa (married to T. Y. Smiley), and resides in Ashland; Alice E. (married to Albert Seiler); Eugene is attending the Ohio University at Delaware; Ada E., Otto W. and Jennie are still at home with their parents; one daughter—Lucy, is dead. Mr. Carpenter has been a member of the M. E. Church since 16 years of age. Donn A. Carpenter, brother of W. B., was born in 1830; he was in the Mexican war; he was elected State Senator from Jones Co., Iowa, in 1863, and also in the late war; he died in January, 1864. Mr. Carpenter can trace back his ancestry to 1638; they landed at Boston Mass., in early American days, and from there spread over the United States; Mr. C.'s father came to Ohio in 1818.

CARROTHERS, SAMUEL (deceased), was born in Washington Co., Penn., in 1780, and was the only son of George and Jane Workman Carrothers, who were old residents of that county, and came to this country before the Revolutionary war. He was married in Washington Co., in the year 1802, to Miss Mary Dye, who was born in 1781; they removed to this county in 1815, and were the parents of five children—Susan Lake Carrothers was born in the year 1807, and is now a resident of Linn Co., Iowa; Elizabeth Grant was born Jan. 24, 1809, and is a resident of this city; Jane Workman Hoffman was born in 1811, is a resident of Olney, Ill.; Rebecca D. McCollough was born in 1813, and is now living in Olney, Ill.; George W. was born in January, 1815; Mary Carrothers Ridgeway was born in 1817; Samuel Leet Carrothers, the youngest son, was born in 1819; he lives in the city, and is a builder and contractor; Elizabeth Carrothers was married in Mansfield, to Edwin Grant, in 1834; he was born in Fairfield, Conn., in 1797, and came to Richland Co. in 1819; for many years he carried on a tannery, near the corner of First and Main streets, in this city, in which he was quite successful; he died in 1845, in Mount Carmel, Ill.; after his death Mrs. Grant returned to this city, where she has since remained; they were the parents of one child, Esther Ann, the wife of Robert Ray Smith, the well-known painter of this city. They were married March 9, 1858, and are the parents of four children.

CARTER, MERCHANT, County Treasurer; was born in Springfield Township, Richland Co., Oct. 15, 1832. Married Nov. 22, 1859, to E. U. Gass. Was elected County Treasurer in 1877, re-elected in 1879.

CHANDLER, J. M. (deceased), was born in Jeromeville, now in Ashland Co., Ohio, Oct. 15, 1815, and there received a good common-school education; afterward studied medicine, and passed through the regular course; at the early age of 21 years, Mr. Chandler graduated with honor at the Ohio Medical College at Cincinnati; in the year 1842, he removed to Mansfield and commenced practice, which he continued until the time of his death, which occurred Jan. 18, 1863; the Doctor was buried at Mansfield on the 20th of January, 1863; during his residence in Mansfield, he was engaged in a large practice, and was reputed by his brothers in the profession as one of the best-read physicians and counselors, in this part of the State; for a number of years, he was in partnership with the late Dr. G. F. Mitchell, and their business extended throughout the adjoining counties. Dr. J. M. Chandler was married, Aug. 12, 1845, to Miss S. A. Mount, who died Aug. 10, 1847; Frank, a son by this marriage, died May 4, 1855; on Dec. 30, 1852, the Doctor was married to Miss R. E. Mount, who still survives; three children, two girls and one boy, by this marriage, now live in Mansfield—Charles M., at present is telegraph operator in the Western Union office in Mansfield.

After marriage, located in Wayne Co, engaged in farming; thence to Lucas; from there to Newville, engaged in tannery; in 1879, he went to Mansfield; since then has been engaged as foreman in the Carpenter tannery. Enlisted in the army during the late rebellion in the 32d O. V. I.; served his time of enlistment; was wounded twice during battles.

CLABERG, ISAAC N., attorney; he was born Oct. 6, 1847, in Butler Township; son of Jacob Claberg; he attended the Savannah Academy and also the Smithville Academy, and graduated at the Law Department of the Indiana State University; afterward read law with Manuel May, and was admitted to the bar at Bucyrus, Ohio, in March, 1878; now engaged in the practice of law in Mansfield.

CLAPP, EMILIUS, wine merchant; Emelius Clapp is the descendant, in the seventh generation, of Roger Clapp, who came to this country from England in 1630, settling in Dorchester, Mass.; here he married Miss Joanna Ford, daughter of Thomas Ford, of Dorchester, England, who, with her parents, came over in the ship with himself. Roger Clapp was appointed by the General Court, in August, 1665, Captain of the Castle (the principal fortress in the province), which position he held for twenty years, and was universally respected and honored; he also held various other offices, both civil and military; in 1686, he removed to Boston, where he died in 1691, in the 82d year of his age; his wife died in 1695, in her 78th year; by this union there were fourteen children, one of whom, Preserved, was born Nov. 23, 1643, who married Sarah Newberry, of Windsor, and settled in Northampton; he was Captain of the Town, a representative in the General Court, and Ruling Elder in the church, and died from the effects of a gunshot wound received from an Indian; he had seven children, one of whom, Roger, was the father of Maj. Jonathan, one of the first settlers in Easthampton; he had three sons and eight daughters; the youngest son, Benjamin, was born in 1738, and was a soldier in the Revolutionary war, and died in 1815; his wife died in 1847, at the advanced age of 97 years; there were born to them fifteen children. The eighth was Solomon, the father of Emelius Clapp, who was born in Easthampton, Sept. 2, 1782, and died Nov. 25, 1827; he married Miss Paulina Avery, of Wallingford, Conn.; there were ten children by this marriage, of whom Emelius is the first son, born Dec. 5, 1808; he received his education at the public schools and Amherst Academy; after his father's death, he remained at home until the spring of 1832, then removed to Ohio, where he lived until the following fall when he returned to Massachusetts, where he married Lydia Hutchinson April 15, 1833; the same year, he again came to Ohio, and settled in Chester, Geauga Co., where he remained until 1836, when he removed to Mentor, Lake Co., and there lived one year; then commenced the manufacture of candy at Painesville, which business he followed in connection with the manufacture of silk; specimens of his handiwork are now in possession of the family and show him to have been an expert workman; he resided in Painesville until the spring of 1844, then to Elyria, where he continued the manufacture of candy until September, 1850, when he came to Mansfield; during his residence in this city, he was constantly engaged, in partnership with his son-in-law and alone, in the manufacture of candy, and the grocery trade, for many years. Nov. 20, 1865, the firm of E. Clapp & Co. sold their stock to Remy, Hedges & Co.; since 1855, he has been extensively engaged in the manufacture of wine from grapes grown at his vineyard on Kelly's Island. Emelius and Lydia Hutchinson Clapp are the parents of four children, one son and three daughters; James Birney died in Elyria, aged 5 years; Francis H. died in infancy; two daughters are now living—Ellen Mariette (wife of Mr. G. C. Wise), of this city, and Mary Paulina (wife of Joseph H. McKee), of Grand Rapids, Mich. Mrs. Lydia Clapp died in Mansfield Feb. 20, 1870; his present wife was Miss Carrie Beardsley, of Garrettsville, Portage Co., whom he married May 30, 1872.

CLARKE, W. P., merchant. This gentleman entered the store of Arnold Constable, of New York, as clerk, in the spring of 1857; he commenced business for himself in the fall of 1859, having purchased the stock of the late firm of E. & C. Hedges, of Mansfield; he occupied the old stand, 15 Public Square; he now occupies the entire building, and is at present crowded for room to accommodate his increasing business, which is now the most extensive in the city; he employs five clerks, and wholesales and retails staple and fancy dry goods, carpets, oil-cloths and mattings, together with ribbons, laces, hosiery, gloves, and fancy goods of all kinds; his stock is at all times very large, and one of the most complete of the kind in Mansfield; Mr. Clarke has, by his affability and courtesy to customers, contributed very much to his business, and is to-day recognized as the leading dry-goods merchant in the city; Mr. Clarke occupies several places of trust and responsibility; he is Director of Mansfield Savings Bank, a Director in the Mansfield Fire Insurance Company, Director and Treasurer of the Mansfield Loan and Building Association.

CLUGSTON, GEORGE A., banker; he was born Oct. 5, 1842, in Franklin Co., Penn.; came to Ashland Co., Ohio, in 1849; he received a liberal education, and engaged in teaching, in all three years; came to Mansfield in March, 1863; read law with Henry Hedges; was in Provost Marshal's office fourteen months, also Deputy Clerk in office of Probate Judge; he was admitted to the bar in 1865, by District Court held at Bucyrus, and in United States Court in 1867, at Cleveland; continued in practice till October, 1873, when he was appointed Cashier of the Farmers' National Bank, and continues to hold that position; held the office of City Clerk of city of Mansfield in 1872–73. He was married, Jan. 1, 1867, to Sarah M. Larimer, who was born in Mansfield, Ohio, where she has always lived.

COOK, JABEZ (deceased). Mr. Cook was a resident of Mansfield and Madison Townships for sixty years, an honest, upright citizen, well informed and possessed of social qualities of a high order; he was born in Washington Co., Penn., July 11, 1792; came to Ohio in 1814, and settled in Madison Township in 1815, and on what has since been known as the Cook homestead, on which he remained about forty years. He was married in March, 1815, to Miss Hannah Pierson, of Washington Co., Penn.; nine children were born to them, seven of whom are living; James Hervey and Thomas McCurdy, the one a resident of Mansfield and the other of Sandusky City, are twins and the first children of Jabez Cook; they were born in September, 1816; Alice, the third child, is a resident of Mansfield; Emily, of Morrow Co., Ohio; Elizabeth, of Iowa City; Mortimer and Lydia Jane, in Santa Barbara, Cal.; Abbie Ellen and Willis M., are dead. Mr. Cook removed to Mansfield in 1854, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred Feb. 6, 1875.

COOK, JAMES HERVEY, was born in Madison Township, two and a half miles south of Mansfield, in September, 1816; he received his elementary education at what is now known as the Sandy Hill Schoolhouse, and afterward at Granville, Ohio, when he returned home and worked on the farm and taught school several winters; he came to Mansfield in the winter of 1840–41, and taught a school on the corner of Fourth and Mulberry streets in the little red schoolhouse, which the older residents will remember. He was married, March 27, 1842, to Miss Mary Ann Wiler, of this city, with whom he has raised four children; until the year 1849, Mr. Cook was alternately engaged in teaching school, farming and buying produce; in the spring of that year, he took possession of the Wiler House, in which business he was engaged without interruption ten years, and again in 1864 until 1869; he has always been considered one of Mansfield's best citizens, and interested in all public improvements; he is now connected with the Richland Mutual Insurance Company as one of its officers.

COLWELL, SAMUEL B. (deceased). He was born in Southampton Township, Cumberland Co., Penn., June 12, 1810, where he worked at his trade of blacksmithing, until his removal West in 1836; he came to Richland Co. in May, 1837, and settled in Troy Township, where he took charge of a grist-mill with a brother; he continued at this business for some time before removing to his farm west of Lexington, on which he lived until 1862, when he returned to Lexington and thence removed to Iowa and entered land; returning to Ohio, he bought a farm south of Lexington, which he soon after exchanged for the mill property; for five years previous to his death, he was a resident of Missouri; he died in Mansfield June 23, 1879, respected for his many good qualities of head and heart. Mr. Colwell was married in Troy Township to Miss Mary McIntire, by whom he had nine children, six of whom are living, three sons and three daughters; James is in the employ of the Aultman & Taylor Co., and Samuel in the wholesale house of Joseph Miller.

CRAIG, J. W., M. D., physician. Dr. Craig's father, Samuel Carson Craig, was born in Beaver Co., Penn., in 1783. He was married to Jane Woods, and came to Belmont Co., Ohio, where Dr. Craig was born; not long after, his parents came to this county, where they resided during the remainder of their lives; his father dying Feb. 7, 1862; his mother, Sept. 18, 1875. When J. W. Craig was about 9 years of age, he went back to Belmont Co., where he lived with an uncle, a lawyer, and attended school and read Blackstone, his uncle desiring he should prepare for the profession of law; J. W. did not fancy Blackstone to any great degree, and often read medical works, evincing a desire in that direction; when near 17 years of age, he went to Harrison, near Cincinnati, where he continued to read medicine, and also taught school two years; he afterward went to this county, and, with Dr. Bricker, read medicine in the office of Dr. John Mack, of Shelby; from there, he went to the Cleveland Medical College, where he graduated in 1851; April 7 of that year, he located in Ontario, where he remained in practice nineteen years; at the end of that time, 1870, he removed to Mansfield, where he still resides. Dr. Craig was married, Jan. 24, 1854, to Eliza McConnell, whose father, Hugh McConnell, was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., July 11, 1802; one of his sisters, born July 14, 1800, is now living, in good health, in Mansfield. He was married to Mary J. McCommon May 24, 1827; she was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., Aug. 26, 1803; five years after their marriage, they came to Mansfield, and soon after bought a farm in Richland Co., where they now reside; Dr. and Mrs. Craig are the parents of four children—Wilda, James H., Maggie and May.

COPE, FRANKLIN E., was born in Winchester, Frederick Co., Va., April 4, 1807; immigrated to Columbiana Co., Ohio, June 10, 1810, remained there till 1832. He was married, Nov. 12, 1833, to Jane Sweney, she was born in Washington Co., Penn., July, 1808; Mr. Cope was engaged in the hatter business in Mansfield for fifteen years, also farming; he was among the early settlers who bore a part of the heat and burden of the severe trials of a pioneer life.

CRAIGHEAD, JAMES, Mayor of the city of Mansfield; he was born in 1833, in Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn.; came to Mansfield in 1837. Was married in 1859 to Susan White, daughter of Jonathan S. White, of Franklin Township; they have the following children: Septimus, born in 1860, engaged in reading law with Manuel May, in Mansfield, and Charlie, born in 1864 (deceased); Mr. Craighead was elected Mayor of Mansfield in the spring of 1879.

CREIGH, DAVID M. (deceased). The man whose name stands at the head of this biography died and was laid to rest in the Mansfield Cemetery, Sept. 26, 1861, aged 61 years; although years have come and gone, his name is still familiar to the living, and his memory cherished by those who knew and honored him. He was born in the city of Pittsburgh, Penn., Dec. 5, 1799; he came to Ohio in 1822 with his parents, who settled in the northern part of Madison Township; he remained here for a number of years working on the farm with his father, Samuel H. Creigh. On the 19th day of February, 1845, he was married to Miss Attillia Barr, daughter of Col. Jacob Barr, one of the early settlers of this county, who resided a few miles west of Mansfield, the Rev. D. J. Swinney officiating; in this neighborhood he soon after purchased land, and continued in farm life until his death; during their residence in Madison Township they raised a family of three children; the eldest, Jennie, afterward the wife of James R. Pollock, died Nov. 11, 1877, aged 30 years 10 months and 29 days; one son by this marriage still survives her; a loving daughter, sister and mother, kind and affectionate to all; her death was universally regretted; John T. Creigh was born Jan. 10, 1847; he received a good common-school education, and soon after his father's death came to Mansfield, and was employed for some years in the hardware trade, acquiring a thorough knowledge of that business, which has been so useful to him in his present occupation; he is at present a partner in the widely known and prosperous firm of Patterson & Creigh, carriage manufacturers; he was married in November, 1871, to Miss Emma Williams, of this county, and resides on West Bloom street; Franc Creigh, the youngest and surviving daughter, was born June 9, 1848, and, like her sister and brother, received a good education, residing with her mother, who removed to Mansfield soon after her husband's death; she was married Sept. 7, 1869, to D. W. Kendig, in Mansfield; they have three children —Carl, the eldest, was born March 24, 1871; Lee Creigh Kendig, born Feb. 9, 1873; Kittie Kendig, born Sept. 28, 1876; Mrs. Franc E. Kendig resides on West Market with her mother and father's sister, with her little family around her. She and husband are members of the Congregational Church.

CRALL, WILLIAM, was born in Ireland about the year 1794, the exact date not known; he emigrated with his parents to this country, and settled in Washington Co., Penn.; his father died shortly after coming to the country, and he being at that time but 12 years of age, and the eldest of the family, the support of the family mainly devolved upon him; he learned the carpenter trade with a Mr. Enos, who afterward removed from Pennsylvania to Richland Co., and settled in Mifflin Township; during the war of 1812, William enlisted in a Pennsylvania regiment, and, with his command, marched to the West, against the Indians and British; when the command arrived on its march at Cadiz, Harrison Co., they received the news that peace was declared, and the war was at an end. The command was shortly afterward disbanded, and William with other discharged soldiers came to Mansfield, which at that time was nothing more than a wilderness; remaining here a short time, he went back to his home in Pennsylvania, and afterward returned here with his old employer, with whom he worked at the carpenter trade. The first house in this city furnished with a shingled roof and "plowed and grooved" floor, was erected by him at the southeast corner of Fourth and East Diamond streets, on the lot now owned by Minor Howe; at this time he was 21 years of age. In 1817, Oct. 12, he was married to Mary Westfall, by whom he had eight children, four of whom died at an early age; John Crall, the eldest, died in 1862; Abram died in California in 1852, and Susan and James are still living; Mary Westfall was born at Beverly, Randolph Co. Va., Oct. 31, 1797; her brother, Harvey Westfall, had come to Richland Co. during the war of 1812, and settled at Mansfield; at the close of the war, she came to Ohio, and landed at Newark, where she had an aunt living; she made the entire distance on horseback; after remaining in Newark for a time, she came on to Mansfield to reside with her brother Harvey; after her marriage, her sister Sidney came to Mansfield from Virginia, and lived with her until her marriage with Franklin Carmichael; Mr. and Mrs. Carmichael settled near Shiloh, in this county, where their children who are living still reside. Harvey Westfall removed from Mansfield to Plymouth, near which place he died about twelve years ago; William Crall, after residing in Mansfield for several years, removed with his family to Plymouth, at which place he, in company with Abraham Trux, erected a flouring-mill, which is still standing; he remained at Plymouth but a few years, when he returned to Mansfield, where he resided until his death, which occurred Sept. 11, 1851; his wife survived him until July 21, 1872; previous to going to Plymouth, Mr. Crall kept tavern in the old frame building which stood on the northwest corner of Fourth and Main streets. His parents were Scotch-Irish, and he was raised in the Presbyterian faith; his wife joined the Presbyterian Church in this city, under the ministration of Rev. James Rowland, and remained a member of that church until the time of her death. She always took a great interest in the political affairs of the country, and for a woman was remarkably well posted in political matters. She was fond of reading political speeches, and when able, often attended political meetings of both parties. The career of all leading political men was narrowly watched by her, and their speeches eagerly read.

Mrs. Crall's ancestors on her mother's side were Welsh, and on her father's, Low Dutch or Hollanders; her grand-parents assisted in settling up Virginia, and her grand-fathers, Pugh and Westfall, both fought in the early Indian wars in Virginia, and her father and uncles in the war of the Revolution; of the children of William Crall, as we have said, but two are now living; Abraham immigrated to California during the gold fever, and died there in 1852; John enlisted in Capt. McLaughlin's company, 3d O. V. I., and served during the term of service of that regiment in the war with Mexico. After his return home, he was married to Susan Snyder, who lived but a year or two after her marriage; she left one child, a daughter, who was married to Anthony I. Piero, and is now living at Plymouth; although quite a politician, John never sought office, and never held but one official position, that of Constable, which office he held at the time of his death, which occurred in July, 1863. James S. Crall enlisted in the 82d O. V. I. during the war of the rebellion, and was appointed a Second Lieutenant to recruit a company for that regiment; upon the organization of the regiment, he was elected Captain of the company; upon the death of Col. Cantwell, at the second battle of Manassas Plains or Bull Run, he was promoted to Major of the regiment, and afterward was made Lieutenant Colonel of the regiment, which position he held at the close of the war and the muster-out of the regiment; the 82d Regiment belonged to the 11th Corps, and took past with that corps in all the battles in which it was engaged while in the Army of the Potomac; after the battle of Chickamauga, the 11th and 12th Corps were transferred to the army of Gen. Thomas; the two corps were consolidated and were afterward known as the 20th; with this corps under command of Gen. Hooker, the 82d Regiment took part in all the skirmishes and battles preceding the taking of Atlanta, in the march from Atlanta to Savannah, and from Savannah to Raleigh, North Carolina; the regiment was on the march from Raleigh to Richmond, when Lee surrendered to Grant; a few days thereafter, Johnston surrendered to Sherman, and the war was over. Since his return home, James S. Crall has served as member and President of the City Council, two terms as Justice of the Peace and is at present Deputy Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas; his sister, Susan Larimore, is living, and with her children resides with him in this city.

CRAWFORD & ZELLERS, cracker manufacturers, located at the corner of Walnut and Bloom streets, in a brick building 56x100. The business was originally started in 1872, by H. H. Colby, who continued it for one year, when the firm that now has it took charge, Sept. 7, 1874; Messrs. Crawford & Zellers were formerly engaged in the manufacture of crackers at Richmond, Ind., and when they purchased the property, they possessed not only ample capital, but a complete knowledge of their business; the first building was a frame, to which Crawford & Zellers added some additions; soon after the improvements had been made, the frame portion of the structure was destroyed by fire; nothing daunted, the proprietors at once rebuilt in a much finer style, so that the works they now have is a model institution of its kind, and considered by all to be one of the most complete in the State; all the machinery used is of the best and most improved make, enabling this house to successfully compete with any other engaged in a similar business; an engine of thirty-horse power is used, and the bakery has a capacity of turning out 500 barrels of crackers every 24 hours; 25 to 30 hands are employed, and a business maintained that will exceed $150,000; the crackers here produced are noted for their first-class quality and the universal satisfaction they give; a goodly trade is not only had by this firm in Ohio, but the same has extended into the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, West Virginia and Indiana. The firm is composed of B. F. Crawford, D. K. and J. G. Zellers; Mr. Crawford has withdrawn his interest from the firm of Zellers & Co., at Richmond, Ind., and now gives his undivided attention to the business which he has and is so satisfactorily conducting, and of which he is principal owner.

DAILY, JOHN B. (deceased), was born in New Lisbon, Columbiana Co., Ohio, April, 1827; while yet a poor boy, he, unexpectedly to his relatives, came to Mansfield, and was at once placed at the desk in the hardware store of A. J. Endly, where he soon showed that aptness for book-keeping which was so serviceable to him in after years; here he was constantly employed for fourteen years, gaining a thorough knowledge of the trade; in the year 1864, he was appointed Deputy Revenue Assessor, which position he held until the coming-in of the new administration; Mr. Daily was a member oi the German Lodge, I. O. O. F., which order he joined in the year 1864, and in which he has held a number of offices; Mr. Daily was long and favorably known as one of Mansfield's business men, being engaged largely at one time in real estate and other enterprises. John B. Daily was married July 3, 1865, to Miss Emma C———, of New Lisbon; there have been born to them four children—Laura E., William C., John E. and Emma M.; John B. Daily died Aug. 6, 1876, in Mansfield.

DAY, AMOS (deceased), son of Joseph and Eleanor Day; was born in Washington Co., Penn., Jan. 12, 1806, and removed to this county with his father's family in 1815, thus having lived sixty-five years continuously in Richland Co. He was married in November, 1834, to Martha Smith, daughter of Jedediah Smith, of Washington Township, by whom he had eight children, five of whom are still living, being Joseph B. and Harrison W. Day, of Washington Township; Mrs. W. S. Bradford and Miss Kate E. Day, of Mansfield; Mrs. J. F. Bowers, of Bellville. He learned the mason trade when quite a young man, and built or helped to build many of the old structures of Mansfield, among which was the Congregational Church, the old Sturges Block, Tracy's Block, and others, which have since been replaced by more modern and imposing edifices; also many of those still standing, among them the McFall Block, built nearly half a century ago, the old North American, southeast of the Park, and the Union Church. He moved to his farm in Washington Township in 1835, where he battled with the sturdy monarchs of the forest during the best years of his life, making them give place to fruitful and productive fields and abundant harvests; he removed to Mansfield to spend the declining years of his life, where he died of typhoid fever on the 21st day of April, 1880. He was a man of great force of character, always adhering firmly and strictly to principles of virtue and honesty; he was a kind father and a good husband, and his memory will be cherished and revered by those who knew him best; companionable and sociable with his friends and acquaintances, his cheerful and pleasant greetings will not soon be forgotten by those with whom he mingled for more than half a century. By rigid economy and industrious habits he acquired a competency, which he used carefully and rationally, often expressing a desire to leave his wife and children in comfortable circumstances rather than to enjoy the luxuries of life himself; despising display and pretension, and of a retiring and unassuming disposition, his good deeds were not heralded to the world, but he was ever ready to lend a helping hand to the poor and the distressed. He united with the Congregational Church of Mansfield in 1836, soon after its organization, and, although of late years not an active member, he was a firm believer in the Christian religion, a faithful and rigid observer of the Sabbath Day, and a careful and constant reader of the Scriptures; and, possessing a wonderfully retentive memory, its great and grand truths were treasured up in his mind, and often adverted to, to the edification of his family and friends. His mind dwelt much during the later months of his life on the uncertainty of earthly existence: and, upon his dying bed, although cut down by a malignant and ruthless disease, and although his mind often wandered, yet in his lucid intervals, his conversation showed to those who watched by his bedside that his thoughts were at such times fixed upon immortal things. In one of those moments, while reason for a short space returned to her throne, he seemed much moved, and spoke of going home: and when asked if he meant Heaven, he replied, "Yes," and at another time he requested that a hymn be sung. He bore his sufferings with patience and resignation; not a word of complaint or murmuring escaped his lips during the progress of his fell disease. His mother, Eleanor Day, came from her home in Indiana to attend the funeral of the first-born of her twelve children; she and her twin sister, who is also living, lack only seven years of being a century old; their descendants number 250; their maiden name was Thomas; they are full sisters of the father of Gen. Thomas. Mrs. Eleanor Day was the mother of twelve children, eleven of whom attained to manhood and womanhood, and nine of them are still living, being Marcus, Clemens and Cyrus Day, of this county; Harrison Day, of DeKalb Co., Ill.; Mrs. Hon. Robert M. Lockhart and Mrs. Louisa Ensley, of De Kalb Co., Ind.; Mrs. Hon. John Young and Mrs. Jacob Henry, of Sauk Co , Wis., and Mrs. Joshua Martin, of Barry Co., Mich. The old lady is still in the enjoyment of all her faculties unimpaired; but says that "This world has no charms for her," and she is only waiting to be called up higher, and receive the reward of a well spent life.

DE CAMP, MOSES (deceased); was born in Washington Co., Penn., Oct. 10, 1816, and was of French-Protestant descent. The American family from whom he sprung were among the earliest settlers of New Jersey; some of the descendants afterward settled in Western Pennsylvania. In the fall of 1827, his father moved with his family into Ohio and located in Morrow Co , where, with the little opportunities then afforded, he soon by diligence acquired sufficient knowledge to teach while continuing his studies, and the fall of 1842 found him in charge of what was then known as the Preparatory Department of Delaware University, which embraced almost every branch, except the dead languages; while there, greater inducements were held out to him to continue his chosen vocation, which he reluctantly declined on account of poor health. He afterward removed to Mt. Vernon, Ohio, where he married Miss Almena H Winters in the fall of 1844, by whom he had four children—Gilbert Winters, Alphonse Lemartine, Herbert Cantwell and Luella Almena; all residents of Mansfield, except the second son, who is a dentist of note, in Paris, France; Dr. M. DeCamp commenced the practice of dentistry in this city in the fall of 1851, and continued to practice until a few months before his death, which occurred April 17, 1876; during his residence in Mansfield, he was known as a trustworthy Christian man; for a number of years President of the American Bible Society, of this county, and of the State Dental Association, in which he held high rank on account of his professional ability; at the time of his death, he was a member of the State Board of Dental Examiners, and a prominent Mason in the Mansfield Lodge. He was a member of the Congregational Church in Mansfield, and for several years acted as one of its Deacons.

DICKSON, V. M., grocer; was born in Millsborough, Springfield Township, June 22, 1844; while living in that township he worked on a farm until 18 years of age, then removed to Oil City, Penn., where he remained two years; in 1865, he was employed in the firm of Dickson & Byrd, grocers, in Mansfield; in 1867, the firm name was changed to J. and V. M. Dickson—Mr. Byrd retiring; this partnership continued until Oct. 21, 1878, when he entered into partnership with Mr. Wm. Adrain, Oct. 31, same year, under the firm name of Dickson & Adrain, now doing business on the corner of Main and Market streets, Mansfield. Mr. D. was married, April 10, 1872, to Miss Anna W. Sayles, of New York, now residents of West Third street, Mansfield.

DILL, THOMAS T., Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas. Born in Wayne Co., Ohio, May 2, 1842; came to Mansfield in 1853; at the beginning of the war, enlisted in the army under the first call for troops; being for three months in the 16th O. V. I.; served his time in that organization in West Virginia, was mustered out at the expiration of the term, and immediately enlisted again in the 16th O. V. I., as organized for three years, served through Kentucky, Tennessee, Virginia, and all the Southern States; was taken prisoner at Tazewell, Tenn.; served under Gen. Grant in several campaigns, including the siege of Vicksburg; served in the Department of the Gulf, in the States of Louisiana and Texas; was under Gen. Banks on his Red River expedition; participated in a great many battles during his term of service in the 16th O. V. I.; was discharged in November, 1864, by reason of expiration of term of enlistment, and immediately re-enlisted in the 1st Regiment, 1st Army Corps, an organization made up of veterans who had seen not less than two years' service; this corps was called "Hancock's Corps," and was commanded by Gen. W. S. Hancock; Mr. Dill was commissioned a First Lieutenant by Gen. Hancock; whilst in this command did service in Virginia, and was in several engagements; when the war closed, he was retained in the service by Gen. Hancock until the 2d day of May, 1866, at which date he was mustered out, making a little more than five years' service in the army; since his return from the army, he has resided in Mansfield, and was employed as a mechanic for eight years by the Aultman Taylor Co; was elected Clerk of Court in October, 1876, for three years, served faithfully and was re-elected in October, 1879, for another term.

DOLL, MICHAEL R., harness-maker. The subject of this sketch was born in Green Township, Richland Co., as it originally existed, Oct. 25, 1839; came to Mansfield in 1845 with his parents, who soon after removed to an adjoining county, where he was placed in school until of sufficient age to begin his trade of harness-making, at which he worked until the breaking-out of the civil war, when he entered the army, enlisting as an artificer in the 11th O. B., afterward assigned to the Western Department 17th Army Corps; Mr. Doll served his full term of enlistment, taking an active part and doing his duty as a soldier in the many engagements in which that battery and corps were engaged; among the more noted and terrible battles in which he took part, were the siege of Vicksburg, Island No. 10, Corinth and the battle of Iuka, Miss. During Mr. Doll's career as a soldier, he passed through many dangers unharmed, when others have fallen—not escaping altogether, as he was slightly wounded at the battle of Vicksburg, and in the great railroad collision at Crestline in April, 1861, severely injured, having a knee joint dislocated and being otherwise bruised; but it was not until long after the close of the war in January, 1877, that, after escaping the bullets of the enemy, and working at his vocation in Mansfield, he received a pistol-shot wound through the gross carelessness of a friend that almost proved fatal, from the effects of which he still suffers, and will carry the marks to his grave. An upright and good citizen, he is now continuing steadily at his trade, enjoying the entire respect of all the citizens.

DOOLITTELL, COLUMBUS S., was born near Frederickstown, Knox Co., Oct. 24, 1819. His mother having died when he was quite a small child, he lived with his grandfather, Thomas Doolittell, during his minority; soon after he was 21 years of age, he taught school one year; in the summer of 1842 he attended the commencement of Kenyon College, when President Hayes graduated; his speech so influenced Mr. D. that he determined to fulfill a long-cherished hope, and take a thorough classical course; in May, 1843, he entered the preparatory class in Kenyon College, and by persistent application he entered the freshman class of '44, with W. K. Rogers, now Private Secretary to the President. Among his other classmates, who became prominent, were W. G. LeDuc, now Commissioner of Agriculture, and Dr. J. W. Scott, a distinguished Professor in the Cleveland Medical College. His resources being somewhat limited, he supported himself by teaching private classes. By diligent use of his time, and close study, he maintained a high standard of scholarship, and graduated with the highest honors in 1848. In September of that year, he accepted the position of assistant teacher in Mrs. Schenck's Seminary, in Columbus; in the fall of 1849, he was chosen a tutor in Kenyon College, and at the same time became a member of the Theological Seminary; in 1852, he was ordained Deacon, and took charge of St. Stephen's Church in Canfield. In January, 1853, he was married to Miss P. A. Lindley, of Frederickstown. In 1856, he accepted a call to St. Luke's Church, Granville, and at the same time became associate principal of the Granville Female Seminary; in 1861, in company with Mr. J. Lindley, he moved the school to Mansfield, where he was engaged about ten years. In 1876, Mr. D. became the associate editor of the Ohio Liberal, then an independent paper, but retired from the paper when it became Democratic. In January, 1877, he became the associate editor of the Mansfield Herald, a position he now occupies.

DOUGLAS, THOMAS E., Postmaster. He was born six miles west of Mansfield June 21, 1829; he received a very fair education in the common schools, and in the academies of Hayesville and Berea; he studied law in the office of L. B. Matson, and, in July, 1860, was admitted to the bar, and in October formed a partnership with M. W. Worden, with whom he began the practice of his profession; when the war broke out in the spring of 1861, Mr. Douglas enlisted, April 16, in Maj. McLaughlin's company in the 1st Regiment, and remained with it during its term of service, participating in the battle of Bull Run, July 21; returning home, he enlisted in the 15th, three-years' service, in which regiment he was commissioned First Lieutenant of Co. G, Sept. 9; that regiment was in the battle of Shiloh, April 7, 1862, after which Lieut. D. was promoted Captain, and, in the battle of Stone River, Dec. 31; in this latter engagement, Capt. Douglas was so severely wounded in the right lung, that he was obliged to return home. While here, he was married to Francis H. Rowland, daughter of Rev. James Rowland, May 12, 1863. June 24, he was appointed Captain in the Veteran Reserve Corps, in which capacity he served until he was mustered out while at Baltimore, Aug. 29, 1866; he then returned home and resumed the practice of law, following it until he was appointed Postmaster, March 12, 1873; he took charge of the office May 12. Mrs. Douglas died Aug. 1, 1879, leaving four children.

DOUGLAS, M. E., Secretary of the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Mutual Insurance Company. He was born in Richland Co., where he has always resided.

DOW, W, contractor and stonemason, Mansfield. He was born near Edinburgh, Scotland, Oct. 6, 1847; he was the first son of John and Jenett Dow, who were of an old and respectable family in that country; he emigrated to this country in May, 1869, and came to Mansfield in July, 1870; directly after his arrival here, he was employed by the contractors of the court house, which was then being built; he was likewise employed in building the stonework of the Congregational Church in this city, and in the spring of 1873 the firm of Hancock & Dow were the contractors and builders of the stonework of the Mansfield Savings Bank; in 1874, they finished their contract for the same work on the Plymouth and Shelby Schoolhouses; in 1875, they built the freight house of the C., C. & I. R. R. at Columbus, and the passenger stone depot at Berea; among the public and larger buildings for which they were the contractors and masons, since that date, were the Marysville High School in 1876, and the city hall, in the same place, and the Masonic Hall of Marion in 1877; in 1878, they they did the mason work on the Marion County Jail; in addition to those already mentioned in this city, was the work on the Jenner, Keith & Scattergood Building and the frontage of the Swigart Building; the firm is at present the contractors for the same work on the new county jail, now in process of erection.

DYSERT, D. M., M. D., homœopathist. He was born in Wayne Co., in 1852, educated in Wayne and Medina Cos.; he graduated at Pulte Medical College, Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1876; he was engaged in the practice of medicine at Independence, this county, for three years, where he had a very extensive practice; his health became impaired in the fall of 1879, and he went to Florida to spend the winter; he returned to this county and located in Mansfield, opened an office at the southwest corner of the park. He is prepared to attend to all calls in his profession promptly.

EARNEST, D. H., dealer in furniture. He was born, July 24, 1844, in Cumberland Co., Penn.; immigrated to Richland Co. in the fall of 1858; engaged with Cyrus Hersheiser and learned the carpenter trade; worked at that trade eight years, then engaged with Aultman & Taylor machine-shops for ten years and four months; Jan. 22, 1879, he formed a partnership with J. K. Johnson in furniture store, which they still continue. He was married, April 7, 1868, to Iva Jane Pocock; she was born in Wayne Co., Oct. 16, 1841; they have the following family: Mary Bell (deceased), Rosa Ellen, born Aug. 18, 1871; David Milton Georgia, Nov. 17, 1874; reside at No. 118 East Market street.

EDGINGTON, JESSE (deceased). He was born in Virginia, and in an early day removed to Jefferson Co. this State, where he resided for several years, when he came to this county and settled in Springfield Township in 1814, where he was one of the largest land-owners during his life. The first Presbyterian Church built in that township, of which he was a member and one of the founders, was erected on his land; he died in 1821, at an advanced age, leaving five children by his marriage to Miss Margaret Palmer. Thomas, the eldest son, was born in Virginia in 1781, and removed with his parents to Jefferson Co., Ohio, where he lived until 1815, when he came to this county and settled in Springfield Township. He was married in Jefferson Co., Ohio, to Miss Mary Alban in 1802; they were the parents of ten children, of whom Margaret was the oldest; she was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, Aug. 30, 1803, and died in Columbia City, Ind., Aug. 30, 1872; Thomas Edgington died in Springfield Township in 1856; Margaret was married in Springfield Township to William Douglas in 1823; they were the parents of five children—William Douglass was born in Washington Co., Penn., in 1798; his father, Michael Douglas, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland. He was married in that country to Lydia Pollock in 1795, and emigrated to America in the fall of 1796, and settled in Pennsylvania, where he continued to reside until 1820, when he removed to Ohio, and settled in Springfield Township, Richland Co.; William Douglas died in 1857 in that township.

ELLIOTT, H. C., book-binder. He is prepared to do all kinds of blank-book and magazine binding in the best and latest styles, also re-bind and re-model old books; all orders by mail promptly attended to; parties desiring binding will find it to their advantage to examine his samples; prices to suit the times, corner Main and Fourth streets.

ERWIN, A. J., physician, surgeon and oculist; he was born in Concord, Penn.; he was educated at the University of Nashville, where he graduated in medicine in 1864. Immediately afterward, he entered into partnership with the eminent surgeon, Dr. J. W. Daily, of Fort Wayne, Ind., at which place he remained until 1870, when he removed to Mansfield. He was married, in 1867, to Miss Mary C. Johnson, of Mansfield, who died in 1874. He is a member of the American Medical Association and the American Public Health Association. In 1874, he was elected by the American Medical Association as a delegate to foreign associations, in which capacity he visited Europe, and while there he took a course in eye diseases in the Royal London Ophthalmic College. In 1878, he was elected to the chair of orthopedic surgery in the Cleveland Medical College, which chair he filled by occasional visits without removing from Mansfield. He is surgeon of the P., Ft. W. & C., M. & C. and the B. & O. R.R.'s. He is now in active practice.

ETTINGER, JACOB, groceryman. The subject of this sketch is the oldest of eight children born to Daniel and Catherine Ettinger, an old York Co. (Penn.) family, who came to Ohio in 1837 and settled near what was then known as Lower Sandusky—now Fremont. The father located in Scott Township, Sandusky Co., where he remained two years, and then removed to Lexington, this county, where he resided for many years, enjoying the confidence and esteem of the entire community. For many years, he was engaged in teaching school, and was accounted a more than ordinary mathematician. For nine years, he served as Assessor of Troy Township. Communicative and intelligent, he was always a favorite with those who desired any information that he could give. He died in Ogle Co., Ill., and was buried near Lexington, Ohio. Jacob Ettinger was born in York Co., Penn., April 16, 1823; in his youth, he received a good common-school education, and, after his parents removed to this county, he taught school for about four years, when, removing to Mansfield, he was appointed a conductor on the old S. M. & N. R. R., which position he held for seven years, and was accounted a careful and faithful officer. He was married in Mt. Gilead, Ohio, on the 10th of April, 1846; they have had four children, two living and two dead. For fourteen years, Mr. Ettinger has been engaged in mercantile pursuits in Mansfield, and is accounted a shrewd and successful business man.

ETTINGER, BENJAMIN, harness-maker; he was born in York Co., Penn., June 7, 1828, and came to Ohio in 1836, and to Richland Co. in 1837, where he received his elementary education, his father being a teacher and mathematician of some note in Troy Township. When 18 years of age, he commenced the trade of harness-making, which occupation he continues to follow in Mansfield, where he is known as a good workman. Mr. Ettinger was married, Sept. 6, 1854, to Miss Elizabeth Brooks, who died Oct. 16, 1860, and again married to Mary Emma Lake, his present wife; they have one son.

FARMER, J. S., attorney at law. He was born in Mansfield June 28, 1844, and received his elementary education in Washington Township. John and Susan (Stewart) Farmer, his parents, were old residents of the county and resided in Washington Township many years. In 1864, he began teaching school in this county, and was so engaged for ten winter terms; during the summer months he worked on a farm, while he continued a course of reading preparatory to the study of law; in April, 1870, he came to Mansfield and continued his studies under the instruction of Matson & Dirlam, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1872.

Mr. Farmer was married, Oct. 8, 1874, to Barbara A. Hannan, by whom he has three children.

FAUS, HENRY, traveling agent. He was born in Columbia Co., Penn., March 31, 1837; came to Ohio in 1852. Was married April 14, 1863, to Lodema C. Zent; she was born Sept. 3, 1841, in Richland Co.; they have the following family: Lorena F., born June 8, 1864; Della B., Oct. 8, 1865; Charlie J., Sept. 8, 1866; Wardie B., Sept. 8, 1867.

FINFROCK, J. H., physician; was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio; came to Richland Co. in 1836; read medicine with Dr. John Blecker, of Van Wert, Ohio; graduated at Cincinnati in the Medical College. Enlisted during the war; was promoted Captain of Co. F, 6th O. V. I.; served in that position till he was appointed Assistant Surgeon of the 11th O. V. C.; was stationed in Dakota Territory. After his service in the army, he located in Laramie City, Wyoming Territory, where he is engaged in the practice of medicine.

FINFROCK, M. V. B., druggist; son of Jonathan Finfrock; was born in 1838 in Madison Township. Was married in 1864 to Lydia E. Keller; they have three children—Ira Elmer, Emma May and Grace Maud. Mr. Finfrock was engaged in teaching school for some years; then located in Mansfield in the drug business; has been very successful, and is now leading off in this department; has also been taking a very active part as Councilman for two years; he is now a member and Treasurer of the School Board of the city of Mansfield, and doing all he can to raise the standard of education.

FISHER, JOHN, sewing-machine agent; was born March 27, 1849, in Cumberland, Md. His father and mother are now and have been old residents of that locality, dating back fifty-three years. Mr. Fisher came to Mansfield Dec. 24, 1879, and is now engaged in active business. He was married Feb. 10, 1872, in Cumberland, Md., to Anna M. Wolf; they have three children—two boys and one girl. Charles Fisher emigrated from Germany and settled in Cumberland, Md., about the year 1827. John Fisher was the eighth son. About thirteen years previous to his arrival in Mansfield, he was employed on railroads in different positions; at present a resident of the Fourth Ward.

FLANNERY, B., keeper of boarding-house; he was born in Ireland, in the year 1838, the first son of Mathew and Margaret Flannery; he emigrated to America in May, 1863, and landed in New York City, where he was employed in a tea and coffee house for three years, when he removed to the oil regions of Pennsylvania, where he remained two years before coming to Mansfield. He was married in this city, Dec. 16, 1868, to Miss Mary Hogan. During his residence here, he has been prominent in local politics, and has been a delegate to a number of important conventions, and is one of our active citizens. Mr. Flannery comes from a respectable family in the old country, where they held high offices in Church and State.

FORD, JOHN, deceased; he was born in Harrison Co., Ohio, in 1816. His parents removed to this county when he was quite young, and settled in Clear Creek Township, now in Ashland Co., where he assisted in clearing the land and worked on the farm until his removal to Washington Township with a brother; he there cleared the land since known as the Hunter farm, and afterward purchased the farm south of Washington Village, where he lived for many years, well known by the citizens of the county and respected for his many good qualities of head and heart. He was married to Miss Harriet Barnes, of Washington Township, Aug. 16, 1838; they were the parents of eight children—four sons and four daughters; three sons and one daughter reside in Mansfield; one son is a farmer in Washington Township; Mary Ellen Ford, born Aug. 21, 1839, died Feb. 28, 1863; Phebe, born July 23, 1849, died Aug. 11, 1851; Ada, born April 27, 1860, died Sept. 26, 1874. Mr. Ford removed to Mansfield in May, 1872, where he was engaged in business with his sons, and resided until his death, which occurred Feb. 25, 1876. Mrs. Harriet Barnes Ford died in Mansfield Oct. 27, 1874.

FORD, THOMAS H. (deceased). Ex-Gov. Ford was born in Rockingham Co., Va. Aug. 23, 1814. His parents soon after removed to Harrison Co. Ohio, where they lived a few years, removing to Clear Creek Township, Ashland Co., then a part of this county; here Mr. Ford died, leaving a large family, some of whom were grown. Thomas Ford grew to maturity here, getting little if any education in the district schools, obtaining the principal part by the light of a burning stump or the fire-place. After reaching his majority, he married a Miss Hall, and for some time was engaged on a farm; this pursuit, however, did not favor him, and consequently he did not make a success; his wife died here, as well as all her children—the latter while in their infancy. Mr. Ford was again married to Mary Ann Andrews, and not long after gave up farming and came to Mansfield to engage in the study of law, entering the office of James Purdy, Esq.; while here, in 1851, his second wife died, leaving him three boys—Thomas H. who died in 1873, in the city; P. P. H., who is yet a resident of Mansfield, and W. A. who, when his mother died, was 18 months old, and who was given by her to Mrs. John Bright (sister of Mr. Ford) to raise; he is now in California. Mr. Ford was married the third time to Harriet M. Pantlind, who became the mother of one child, Ada, who is married and living in Washington City, and with whom her mother now lives. After Mr. Ford completed a law course, he was admitted to practice, and, at different times, was partner of P. P. Hull, Oliver P. Gray, William Longbridge, William Tidball, H. P. Davis, R. C. Smith, —— Boales, Judge Dirlam and others. When the Republican party came into existence, he was one of its most eloquent exponents, and, while engaged in politics, delivered at Philadelphia, a speech that made his name famous; it was one of those speeches given impromptu, (he never studied a speech) which the occasion calls out, and is rarely repeated; it gained him the Lieutenant Governor's place under Gov. Chase, and brought him prominently forward in after life; at the expiration of his term of office, he returned to Mansfield to the practice of law, though he was always active in politics. When the war with Mexico broke out, he enlisted, and raised a company which saw one year's service; its history is given elsewhere; while in this war, he was wounded; when the last war broke out, ex-Gov. Ford raised the 32d O. V. I. and was its Colonel; the unfortunate affair at Harper's Ferry cost him his dismissal, though he and his personal friends always insist he was made a "scape goat" for a higher officer's blunders. President Lincoln re-instated him, though he did not again enter the service; he went to Washington City, where he built up a lucrative practice in the law, and where he held for a while, the office of Superintendent of Public Printing; about the year 1866, he connected himself prominently with the temperance movement in the District, and was considered one of its ablest and most eloquent advocates; he died Feb. 29, 1868, at the age of 54 years; all the city papers referred to his loss, and all published commendatory notices of his life and death, that were widely copied; the various temperance orders buried him with every show of respect, in one of the city vaults, from which his remains were subsequently removed to the cemetery in Mansfield where they now repose.

FORD, E. C., merchant. He was born in Washington Township, June 8, 1856, where he resided until his removal to Mansfield in the spring of 1872, where he commenced the tinner's trade, which completing, he entered into partnership with his father (the late John Ford), and a brother, under the firm name of Ford & Sons, doing a large business in stoves and tinware; since his father's death, which occurred Feb. 25, 1876, the firm name has been Ford Brothers. He was married in Mansfield, June 19, 1878, to Miss Ella J. Hershiser, daughter of Cyrus Hershiser, a well known contractor and builder in this city.

FORD, P. P., merchant. He was born in Mansfield, Nov. 20, 1846; his father being the late Col. Thomas H. Ford; he received his education principally at the Monroe Seminary and at Lexington, Ohio; during the late war, he enlisted in the 32d O. V. I., in which he remained until the close of the war, participating in all the battles in which that regiment engaged; afterward resided in Washington City for some time, then returned to Richland Co., Ohio, where he has since lived. In Aug. 13, 1868, he was married to Miss Mary C. Stone, of Washington Township, by whom he has had five children—Jessie Ada, Edwin Davis, Charles Thomas (deceased), Mary H. and Emma Virda; in the fall of 1869, Mr. Ford removed to Mansfield, where he now lives and engaged in mercantile business.

FORD, S. N., Secretary of the Mansfield Building and Lumber Company. He was born in Washington Township, Richland Co., Feb. 6, 1847; his elementary education he received principally at the Lexington Seminary, which he attended for several years; at the age of 18, he commenced business for himself, and in February, 1870, was employed by the Mansfield Building and Lumber Association, and was elected agent of the same in the fall of 1872, which position he held until October, 1876, when he was elected its Secretary. Mr. Ford was married in Lexington, Dec. 28, 1868, to Miss Lizzie Cook, of that place, with whom he has raised two children, one son and one daughter—Hoyt and Ada.

FORD, THOMAS W., merchant. He was born in Washington Township Jan. 12, 1844; he is a son of the late Mr. John Ford, who resided in that township over forty years; in 1862, he enlisted in Co. E, 32d O. V. I., and served until the close of the war, after which he returned to Richland Co., and was engaged in farming and teaching school for seven years previous to his removal to Mansfield. He was married in September, 1868, to Miss Leah Garber, of Washington Township; they have one son, G. G. Ford, who was born June 27, 1869; after his removal to Mansfield, he was employed in the wholesale house of E. P. Sturges & Co. four years, then a partner in the stove and tin store of Ford & Sons, now Ford Brothers; one of the best-conducted houses in that branch of business in Mansfield.

FRANZ, J. B., proprietor St. James Hotel. The subject of this sketch, the well-known landlord of the St. James Hotel in Mansfield, was born in Leesville, Crawford Co., Ohio, June 24, 1841; although comparatively a young man, he has already acquired an enviable reputation in his special line of business, and is classed among our enterprising citizens. He was married in Delaware, Ohio, June 3, 1874, to Miss Nellie Sampsell, daughter of one of the old citizens of that place.

FRENCH, D. H., Rev., D. D., Pastor U. P. Church, Dayton, Ohio. Dr. French, who for over twelve years was Pastor of the United Presbyterian Church in this city, is a son of Rev. David French, who was Pastor forty-four years of the Associate Congregations of North and South Buffalo, in Washington Co., Penn. Dr. French was born in that county; he received his collegiate education at the Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Penn., where he graduated in 1857; he attended the Theological Seminary at Xenia, Ohio, and, six months after graduating there, received calls from three congregations to become their Pastor; he accepted the call from Cannonsburg, Penn., and entered upon the discharge of his duties in March, 1861; after a pastorate of five years, he was obliged to resign on account of a threatened attack of lung disease; about a year after his release from this charge, he was called by the congregation in Mansfield, which call he accepted, and for twelve and one-half years labored faithfully among the people here; late in 1879, he received a call from the U. P. Church, Dayton, Ohio, which he accepted, and early in January, 1880, went to that city, where he now resides; he received the honorary title of Doctor of Divinity from the Muskingum College, in the summer of 1879.

GAILEY, RICHARD, attorney-at-law. Of the two sons of Rev. Richard Gailey, the subject of this sketch is the younger, the elder being Rev. John Gailey, of the United Presbyterian Church. Richard was born May 5, 1845, in Madison, Westmoreland Co., Penn. In 1849, his father removed to this county, and first settled in Monroe Township, and subsequently removed to Lexington; he received his education chiefly from his father in the seminary of which he was the founder; during the years 1867, 1868 and 1869, he studied law with Judge McJunkin, of Butler, Penn., where he was admitted to the bar in 1869; after his admission to the bar he practiced his profession in Mansfield, Ohio, until 1872, when he returned to Pennsylvania and practiced in Parker City and Pittsburgh, until the death of his father, in 1875, when he returned to Lexington, where he practiced until May 1, 1880, when he came to Mansfield and entered into copartnership with H.

D. Keith; this firm is engaged in a lucrative and constantly increasing business, and commands the confidence of the bar and people. During the war of the rebellion, Mr. Gailey served in the 87th O. V. I. and also in the 86th O. V. I. In 1872, he was married to Miss Sarah E. Nutting, by whom he has two sons—John, aged 6 years, and Richard, aged 2 years.

GASS & HOTT, dealers in books, successors to C. A. Pendleton; they handle a general line of school, miscellaneous and blank books, and stationery, wall-paper, curtains, curtain fixtures and similar goods, gold pens, archery, croquet-games of all kinds and a line of fine fancy goods, etc.

GASS, BENJAMIN (oldest son of William and Jane Gass); was born in Brook Co., Va., on the 12th of June, A. D. 1794; came with his parents to Fairfield Co., Ohio, in June of 1800; then to Knox Co., Ohio, in the spring of 1806, and to that part of "the new purchase" (so called) which is now Troy Township, Richland Co., Ohio, in the spring of 1812, arriving at their destination on the 23d of April. Benjamin was an extra good hand at hard work, and labored hard in assisting his father to clear up their wilderness farm, living mostly with his parents until he was married, in January of 1827, to Miss Elisabeth McCluer; they raised three sons and two daughters, all of whom are now living, except their youngest son (James G. Gass), who was a soldier through the rebellion, and died a few years after it was suppressed, perhaps in consequence of exposure while in the service; he was in a number of hard battles. Benjamin's wife died in May of 1864, and in the autumn of 1867, he was again married to Miss Sarah M. Creigh, of Mansfield, who still survives him. He taught school a number of winters both before and after his first marriage, also singing-schools; was a great lover of "old folks' singing." Was an ardent Antislavery man; lectured and debated much on that subject when it was quite unpopular in "old Richland," though he was twice elected, and served as Auditor of the county. He left his farm a year or more before his death, and resided on his wife's property in Mansfield, where he died in February of 1867, aged a little over 82 years and 8 months. He was hurt by a limb of a tree when he was 76 years old, and was unable to work after that; his wife lives on Market street.

GASS, ISAAC, youngest son of William and Rebecca Gass, was born in Troy Township, Richland Co., Ohio, in October, 1819; lived and worked on the farm during his minority and for some years afterward; taught school frequently; studied law with Judge Steward; was licensed as an attorney in 1848. In the spring of 1848, was married to Miss Amelia B. Coates; they had one son and two daughters; their son, Mr. Florean P. Gass, and daughter (Bertie) still live in Mansfield, their oldest daughter (Mary) having died some years ago. Isaac removed to Mansfield and commenced business as a lawyer immediately after his marriage. In the fall of 1861, he raised a company to help in the suppression of the rebellion, and was elected as their Captain, but about the time of their starting into service he was promoted to the lieutenant colonelcy of their regiment (the 64th); they were ordered to the battle of Pittsburg Landing in April of 1862, but only reached it as the rebels commenced the retreat. After a number of months' further exposure, his health failed so that he was under the necessity of resigning. He was afterward elected and served as State Senator, representing Richland and Ashland Cos., and subsequently to that was Mayor of Mansfield, and Justice of the Peace, which last office he held at the time of his death, in October of 1875, when he was about 56 years old.

GATES, DAVID, farmer and dairyman; he was born in Madison Township Sept. 10, 1837, and received his elementary education in Mansfield; afterward commenced farming at the old homestead, where he remained until coming to Mansfield in 1872, when he purchased the omnibus line, in which business he was engaged six years, when he sold his interest in it, and since then has been farming in Madison Township. Mr. Gates was married in Madison Township May 18, 1859, to Miss Margaret M. Bell; they have three children—Cora Irene, May Bell and Peter, all living.

GEDDES, GEORGE WASHINGTON, lawyer and Judge, and at present member of Congress for the Fifteenth District of Ohio. He was born in Mt. Vernon, Knox Co., July 16, 1824; he is the son of James and Elizabeth Geddes, and on his father's side of Scotch descent, his paternal grandfather having emigrated from Scotland in the last century; his father removed his family from Knox to Richland Co. when the subject of this sketch was but a child, and there he attended the public schools until he was 15 years old, when he returned to his native town, and entered a store as a clerk; his employer was the well-known old merchant, James Huntsberry, of Mt. Vernon, with whom he remained until he was nearly of age, in the mean time devoting nearly all of his spare time to the study of law; he entered the law office of Hon. Columbus Delano (Secretary of the Interior during the first term of President Grant's Administration), with whom he read law for one year, after which he was admitted to the bar; he chose law as a profession for reasons satisfactory to himself, and removed to Mansfield among strangers, where, unaided, he commenced his professional life in November, 1845; his first case decided his future; engaged to try this case in the country before a Justice of the Peace, he accidentally met Hon. James Stewart; that gentleman was so well pleased with the conduct of his first case, that he invited him to permanently settle at Mansfield, and guaranteed him sufficient to defray his necessary expenses; having remained with him under these conditions two years, he was, in 1847, taken into partnership, which continued three years, when, in 1850, Mr. Stewart was elected Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, and Mr. Geddes entered into partnership with Hon. Jacob Brinkerhoff; this connection continued five years, and until Mr. Brinkerhoff was elected to the Supreme Bench of the State, when this partnership thereupon ceased; Mr. Geddes then practiced alone until, in 1856, he was elected Judge of Common Pleas, as the unwilling candidate of the Democratic party, in opposition to his old partner, Mr. Stewart, whose term had expired; he served the full term, until 1862; that year, at a district convention of both parties, he was renominated for a second term, and elected without opposition; having served a second full term, he was, in 1866, nominated by his own party for a third term, but, although running ahead of his own ticket by nearly five hundred votes, he was defeated by a majority of only seventeen votes; he then returned to the practice of his profession in Mansfield, until 1868, when, the Legislature having provided for an election of an additional judge, he was, by a majority of over eight hundred votes, elected to fill that position; having served out the full term of this, his third election to the Common Pleas Bench, he decided not to be again a candidate; in the mean time, without solicitationon his part, in 1872, he was, at the State Convention, nominated for the Supreme Bench, but, with the other candidates on the ticket, defeated. A matter worthy of notice in this connection is, that Judge Geddes was never present in any convention that nominated him (until his nomination for Congress), and never solicited a nomination; after his last term of office, he resumed the active practice of his profession, associated with Col. M. R. Dickey and John W. Jenner, Esq., under the firm name of Geddes, Dickey & Jenner. Judge Geddes has always taken much interest in educational and benevolent institutions, and is a Trustee of the Ohio Wesleyan College at Delaware; during the war, he was resolutely in favor of the suppression of the rebellion, and closely identified with the party known as War Democrats; a Trustee and Steward of his church, the Methodist Episcopal, he is a liberal promoter of all that tends to elevate and relieve the community in the benefaction for charitable objects. In 1848, he married Miss Nancy Lemon, of Ashland Co., and two living children have been the issue of this union. Judge Geddes was, in June, 1878, nominated without solicitation on his part, by one of the most memorable district conventions ever held in Ohio; after a struggle of five days between the several candidates before the convention, on the 1,255th ballot, the nomination was conferred upon him by the unanimous vote of the convention, and in October he was elected by a majority of 4,578, to represent in the Forty-sixth Congress the Fifteenth District of Ohio.

GERBERICH, DANIEL, dealer in music, musical instruments, etc.; he was born Jan. 26, 1819, in Lebanon Co., Penn.; engaged in farming for twenty years. He was married, Nov. 4, 1841, to Eliza Wise (daughter of Judge Wise), who was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., Dec. 9, 1823; they engaged in keeping hotel for three years, after which he engaged in the music trade; they had four children—Dr. E. W. Gerberich, born June 24, 1842, and now resides in Des Moines, Iowa, engaged in the practice of medicine; Allen D., born Nov. 6, 1845, enlisted in the 127th Penn. V. I., and died in the service in 1862; P. A. Gerberich, born Nov. 1, 1847; and L. S. Gerberich, born July 23, 1849.

GERBERICH BROS., agents for pianos and organs; also, musical merchandise of every description; they have been engaged in this business for nine years; their knowledge of music and experience in this business have given them an extensive reputation in this and adjoining counties.

GILBERT, A. J., firm Gilbert, Waugh & Co.; Mr. G. came to Ohio from New York, his native State, with his brother, in 1865, and purchased an interest in the mills, where he is yet associated.

GILBERT, FRANK A., firm Gilbert, Waugh & Co.; Mr. G. is a native of New York; he came to Mansfield in 1865, and purchased the "City Mills;" afterward, the Gilbert Bros. sold an interest in the mill to Mr. J. W. Waugh, the three now owning and operating the mills.

GLESSNER, JOHN Y., editor and publisher of the Shield and Banner; this well-known citizen of Mansfield has for nearly half a century been prominently identified with the newspaper history of Ohio, as printer, editor and publisher; he was born in Somerset, Somerset Co., Penn., where he acquired the printing business practically, and afterward, in connection with a younger brother, Jacob Glessner, purchased the Democratic paper which they edited and published for three and a half years, when they sold out to the Hon. Daniel Weyand; they removed to St. Clairsville, Ohio, in 1833, and purchased the St. Clairsville Gazette of the Hon. George W. Manypenny, which they edited and published four and a half years; in the meantime, they also started the Cadiz Sentinel, which was conducted by the younger brother until both offices were disposed of; in the ever-memorable log-cabin and hard-cider campaign of 1840, when Gen. Harrison was elected President, John Y. Glessner was connected with the business department of the Ohio Statesman, then so ably edited by Col. Samuel Medary; in May, 1841, he came to Mansfield and purchased the Shield and Banner of Mr. John Meredith, which he has edited and published continuously for thirty-nine years the present month (May, 1880); for forty-three years and a half he has been in active editorial life in this State; adding the three and a half years in Somerset, Penn., he has been editing Democratic papers forty-seven years, and still possesses much of the vigor and perseverance of his more youthful days; he is now the oldest editor in Ohio.

GOODWIN, P. W., harness-maker. The parents of P. W. Goodwin will be remembered by the older citizens of the county. His father, Wm. T. Goodwin, came to Ohio and first settled in Wayne Co. in 1816, and removed to Richland Co. in 1844. He was married to Miss Phebe Bullock, of Rochester, N. Y., in 1813; to them were born ten children, of whom P. W. Goodwin was the ninth. His father died in November, 1863, in Medina Co., and his mother Dec. 2, 1875; both were earnest Christian people and members of the Methodist Episcopal Church. P. W. Goodwin commenced the trade of harness-making in 1852, which he continued until the breaking-out of the war. On the 19th of July, 1859, he was married to Miss Jane Wharf, in Mansfield, to whom have been born four children—two boys and two girls—May Alleta, Melvin Pearson, Wm. Henry and Maud Estella. In November, 1861, Mr. Goodwin entered the army and enlisted in the 42d O. V. I., serving his full term of enlistment, and participating in all the battles in which his regiment was engaged—notably among them the battles of Middle Creek, Chickasaw Bayou, Miss. (there wounded); Arkansas Post; Thomson's Hill, May 1, 1862; Champion Hill, May, 1862; Raymond, Big Black, and afterward at the siege of Vicksburg, and continued with his regiment until the close of the war, since which time he has been engaged at his trade. Now in business in Mansfield.

GROVE, W. A., dealer in clocks, watches and jewelry; was born in Hanover, York Co., Penn.; learned the jewelry business in Baltimore, Md., with Henry Ebaugh, on Gay street, between Front and High. He was married, in 1858, to Lavina Forney, of Hanover, York Co., Penn. In the fall of 1859, moved to Franklin Co., Penn.; remained there till June 17, 1863, at which time he was driven out by the rebel soldiers and lost his entire stock; afterward moved to Mansfield in November, 1863, and established the jewelry business. Mr. and Mrs. Grove have two children—Naomi, born July 12, 1872; John A., Aug. 12, 1875. Mr. Grove is still engaged in the jewelry business; he always has on hand a complete stock of every thing in his line, and will not be undersold; also repairing clocks, watches and jewelry. Main street, near the Savings Bank.

HALL, DR. J. B., homœopathic physician, was born in Franklin Township, Richland Co., in the year 1847, his father, now living, being one of the early settlers of this county; Dr. J. B. Hall spent his early life on the farm with his father, attending school during the winter months until about 18 years of age, then, removing to Mansfield, commenced the study of medicine under the instruction of the late Dr. Stull; in the fall of 1867, he attended his first course of lectures at Cleveland, and afterward returned to Mansfield, where he continued his studies until the fall of 1868, and then attended his second course of lectures in Philadelpia; afterward, commenced practice in Mechanicsburg, Penn., where he remained one year, when he removed to Mansfield, where he still resides with his wife and two children, having a fair and growing practice.

HANCOCK, R. G., contractor and stonemason; he was born in Wiltshire, England, June 11, 1842, and, although a comparatively young man, he has already acquired an enviable reputation as a mechanic and builder; he emigrated to America and landed in New York City May 5, 1870; having learned his trade in the city of Bath, where he lived five years; in 1862, he removed to London, England, which was his home until his departure for this country; he located in this city Oct. 4, 1870, and, the following day, commenced work at the court house, then in the course of erection; April 24, 1870, the firm of Hancock & Co. began building the stonework of the Congregational Church, of this city, which they finished, and, in the spring of 1873, the stonework of the savings-bank; in the spring of 1874, the stonework of the Plymouth and Shelby Schoolhouses, and, in 1875, built the freight-house of the C. C. & I. R. R., at Columbus, and the passenger stone depot at Berea; in 1876, the stonework of the Marysville High School, and, in 1877, the city hall of Marysville, and Masonic Hall of Marion; in 1878, the Marion County Jail; since then, he has been engaged in numerous other private and public contracts in this city and elsewhere, notably among them the Jenner, Keith & Scattergood Building; he is at present with his partner, Mr. Dow (who has been with him since 1873), the contractor for the stonework of the new jail in Mansfield. He was married in November, 1877, to Miss Scutts, by whom he has had four children—two sons and two daughters.

HARDING, FREDERICK (deceased); he was born in Stafford, England, May 10, 1816, and received his youthful education at Ashton-under-Lyne; in the year 1823, he was apprenticed by his father, George Harding, shoe manufacturer of Ashton-under-Lyne, to Charles Dawson, of the borough of Stafford, to learn the art of a chemist and druggist; the indenture was drawn up with great care, and the conditions were very stringent, as was the custom in England; after four years of service, he was granted a diploma as a chemist and druggist. Mr. Harding was married, in Manchester, England, to Miss Frances Tinker, youngest daughter of D. Tinker, of Ashton-under-Lyne, on the 19th of October, 1846; three children were the result of this marriage, two of whom died in infancy; the third came with his parents to this country in the fall of 1852, and is now a printer in the Government printing office in Washington; Mrs. Frances Harding died Feb. 8, 1853; Frederick Harding was married, May 6, 1855, to Amelia, third daughter of Charles and Sarah Hutchinson, in Richland Co.; to them were born three sons—F. H. Harding, April 30, 1857 (printer); C. F., Jan. 24, 1859 (clerk); J. H., June 8, 1861, and died Aug. 11, 1862. Mr. Harding entered the Union army in October, 1861, as a private in the 64th O. V. I., and served his full term of enlistment; in August, 1863, he received an appointment in the United States army as Hospital Steward, and was considered among the best chemists and druggists in the service. He died in Mansfield Nov. 25, 1866.

HARRINGTON, L. F., hardware merchant; he was born in Bellville, this county, Jan. 6, 1835, where he resided until coming to this city, in 1860. He served as Deputy Auditor during Jonas Smith's administration of that office; in 1873, he was elected Auditor of Richland Co., and re-elected in 1875; he served the full terms to the satisfaction of the people. Since 1877, he has been engaged in the hardware trade in this city. He was married in Mansfield to Miss Dollie Sheets in 1863; they are the parents of one child, a daughter—Ozella, a resident with her parents of this city.

HAWKINS, J. A., photographer; he was born in Rochester, N. Y., in 1853; in 1869, he went to Toledo, where he remained seven years, learning his trade; he then came to Mansfield, and at once opened a good gallery; he now has one of the best in the city, located over McCoy's dry-goods store, near the corner of Fourth and Main streets.

HEDGES, JAMES, GEN. (deceased); he was the sixth son of Charles Hedges, who was a resident of Eastern Virginia; the family consisted of nine sons and two daughters, as follows—Joseph, Samuel, Elijah, John, Josiah, James, Hiram, Otho, Ellzey, Sarah and Mary; of these sons, Joseph, Samuel, Hiram and Otho settled in Virginia, and remained there during all their lives; Elijah removed to Fairfield Co., Ohio, where some of his descendants still reside; John removed to Muskingum Co.; James and Josiah first settled in Belmont Co., and, in 1812, Josiah Hedges was the Clerk of the courts of Belmont Co., and James Hedges was the Sheriff of the county, while the youngest brother, the late Ellzey Hedges, was acting as a deputy of both. James Hedges was commissioned as Captain of cavalry in the United States army, and entered the military service, his younger brother, Ellzey, closed the office of Sheriff, and, in 1812, carried on foot the returns of the Presidential election to the capital of the State. James Hedges, who was a surveyor, upon this trip entered the land on which Mansfield is built, and, after the war, resigned his commission, and settled at Mansfield; here for a time he was engaged in mercantile business with his brother, Josiah Hedges, who remained at St. Clairsville, Ohio, under the firm name of J. & J. Hedges. Gen. James Hedges died in Mansfield Oct. 4, 1854.

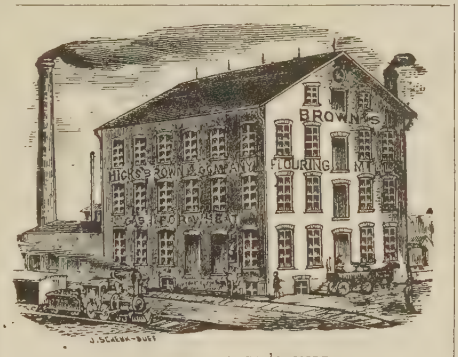
HEDGES, HENRY C., attorney. He is a son of the late Ellzey Hedges. He was born in Mansfield, where he has always resided. He graduated at Delaware, Ohio, in 1852; he studied law in the office of Charles and John Sherman, and was afterward a partner of the latter. After Mr. Sherman's election to Congress, Mr. Hedges continued in the practice of law, in which he is now engaged. Mr. Hedges served in a number of public capacities, being a member of the School Board over twenty consecutive years.

HEDGES, W. C., merchant; he was born in Tiffin, Ohio, and has resided in Mansfield for several years. His father, W. C. Hedges, was a son of Josiah Hedges, the founder of Tiffin, Ohio, and brother of the late Ellzey Hedges, of this city.

HEDRICK, ALFRED G., butcher. Among the oldest living residents of Mansfield is the man whose name stands at the head of this biography. Joseph Hedrick and Sarah Knode, the father and mother of the above, were married in Sharpsburg, Washington Co., Md., in the year 1813. Alfred G., the first son, was born in Washington Co., Md., Oct. 15, 1814, and came to Ohio with his parents, who first settled near Mansfield Oct. 25, 1826, where he remained until 22 years of age, working on the farm; in the fall of 1837, he removed to Vicksburg, Miss., going by stage to Cincinnati, thence by steamer; here he remained one year, when he returned by way of St. Louis, then up the Illinois River, afterward by stage to Chicago, then to Huron by steamer, and stage to Mansfield. Alfred G., in his younger days, worked at his trade of housepainting; since then, he has been engaged in different occupations and has traveled extensively over the western part of the country; for a time he was engaged in the grocery business, but upon the discovery of rich fields of gold in California in 1849, his love of travel and adventure again found him one of a party with William McNulty, destined for that then comparatively new country, going by the way of New York and the isthmus; thirteen months afterward, he returned by the way of New Orleans, and engaged in farming, which occupation he continued for fifteen years, when he again removed to Mansfield and went into business, but, not yet satisfied, he again joined a company for the mineral region of Idaho, where he remained eight months; some time afterward, he became interested in a large dry-goods business, which he continued for three years, when he removed to Kansas, and, shortly after, returned to Mansfield, where he has since resided. Alfred G. Hedrick was married, Nov. 15, 1838, in Madison Township, to Ann Case; they have had nine children born to them, seven of whom are living and two dead. This year, Mr. Hedrick is yet in active business in Mansfield, and can recall many of the early incidents in its history.

HELPS, WILLIAM, bookseller, and dealer in magazines, daily papers, stationery, etc., Main street.

HERRING, JAMES H., blacksmith and wagon manufacturer; he was born in the village of Bloody Run, Bedford Co., Penn., Nov. 27, 1842; he is a son of the late George W. Herring, who died in this city June 6, 1870, and a descendant of the Herrings, of Bedford Co., Penn., an influential family, who first came to this country from Holland in an early day. His parents came to Ohio in 1853 and located in Salem, where they remained one year and then removed to Rushville and thence to Lancaster; they came to Mansfield in 1856. When of sufficient age, James H. commenced working at the trade of blacksmithing, which he acquired in the usual time, and at which he continued until the breaking-out of the civil war. He volunteered in the United States service and was a member of McMullen's 1st Ohio Independent Battery, and remained with it until the close of the war and the expiration of his term of service; during his long career in the army, he actively participated in seventeen engagements. After his return, he resumed his trade of blacksmithing, which is his occupation at present. He was married in Mansfield, Dec. 19, 1867, to Miss Nancy J. West, a daughter of Sylvester West, an old resident of Mansfield; four children have been given them; three sons are living —John, George and Dimon; James Henry died in infancy.



HEDGES' BLOCK.

HERRING, CHARLES D., tinner; was born in Bedford, Northumberland Co., Penn., Jan. 30, 1825, and came to Mansfield in 1857, and belongs to the same family of Joseph and Andrew J., and a twin brother of the latter. Mr. Herring was married in Mt. Gilead, Ohio, to Martha Longsdorf, in the fall of 1857, to whom have been born eight children. Mr. Herring enlisted in the late civil war and was a member of McMullen's Battery, in which he remained and took part in all the engagements in which that battery was engaged while able to do duty, a great part of the time being unable on account of sickness; he remained in the army and was honorably discharged after about twenty months' service. Mr. Charles D. Herring is now engaged in business in Mansfield.

HERRING, ANDREW JACKSON, blacksmith. He is the son of Michael and Mary Messersmith Herring; Michael was a son of old Christian Herring, who settled in Berks Co., Penn.; A. J. Herring was born Jan. 30, 1825; a twin brother, Charles C., resides in Mansfield; they were born in Bedford, Co., Penn.; A. J. Herring came to Ohio, and settled first in Fairfield Co., and to Richland in April, 1863. Mr. Herring was married, Jan. 5, 1854, in Rushville, Fairfield Co., Ohio, to Matilda Dick; to them have been born three children—Mary E., Joseph C. and John Willard, all living in Mansfield. Mr. Herring and wife are members of the Methodist Church in this city.

HERRING, JOSEPH F., blacksmith, and inventor of steel plowshares. Was born in Bedford, Bedford Co, Penn., Feb. 16, 1825; he came to Ohio in 1855, and to Mansfield in 1856; Mr. Herring learned the trade of blacksmithing in his native town with his father, and continued the same after his removal to Mansfield until Aug. 18, 1874, when he received letters patent on his invention of the steel plowshare, the manufacture of which occupied his time, and since then has been wholly engaged in manufacturing that justly celebrated invention, which has been introduced into almost every State in the Union and conceded to be as near perfection as any now in use. He was married in Hollidaysburg, Penn., to Miss Nancy Herbert, to whom have been born four children, two of whom are living—Emma, the first, and Eugenia. Nancy Herbert Herring died in Mansfield in 1857. Mr. Herring was married in Mansfield to Mary Zerby; they have a family of interesting children.

HICKS BROWN & CO.'S MILL.

HERSHISER, CYRUS, builder and contractor. His father, Samuel, was one of the old residents of Bedford Co., Penn., where Cyrus was born Nov. 8, 1824; he came to Mansfield in 1844, where he commenced the carpenter trade in the spring of 1845, since which time many of the largest buildings and residences in Mansfield have been erected by him. In the year 1847, he was married to Miss Rebecca F. Hagar, who died in Mansfield in 1849; one child by this marriage, died in infancy. In 1850, Mr. Hershiser was married to Miss Margaret A. McCormick, a daughter of one of the old residents of Mansfield, by whom he had five children, three of whom are living—Alice B., Ella J. and Emma A.; Mrs. Margaret Hershiser died in Mansfield in December, 1871. In February, 1874, he was married to Miss Lena Seger, of Mansfield, with whom he now lives; one son by this marriage, died in infancy; Mr. Hershiser has been prominently identified in the enterprises of Mansfield for a number of years, and is now one of the largest builders and contractors in the city.

HICKS BROWN & CO., proprietors flouring-mills. In the progress of human events, the very essential article of bread is a matter of daily consideration, and, though human diet is composed of many ingredients, bread from wheat flour takes the first place; chemistry with the aid of the microscope has demonstrated, that, inside of the thin shell of the wheat grain or kernel, the flour is there closely compressed in small granules, and requires merely to be separated or disintegrated, and not to be crushed or powdered in grinding as has been the custom for ages past. For the purpose of making this new process of flour, it was proposed sometime during the Centennial year, to erect in Mansfield a flouring-mill, embodying all the features, machinery and processes required, and, as a result, early in February, 1877, the new mill commenced operations under the joint proprietorship of Messrs. John Staub & Hicks Brown; in September of the same year, the partnership was dissolved, and the mill passed into possession of the present partners, Messrs. Hicks Brown & M. D. Harter, under the firm name of Hicks Brown & Co., who have in the past two years increased its capacity 50 per cent, and have established a trade which requires the running of the mill to its fullest capacity, day and night, and the employment of about twenty persons; Mr. Brown gives his undivided attention to the business, and the product is obtained from the skillful operating of the mill under the direction of Mr. William Kreightaum, the head miller; the nationality of the operatives is decidedly cosmopolitan; of the 20 operatives, 1 is a native of Richland Co.; 5 are natives of other counties of this State; 2 are English; 4 Germans; 1 Swede; 1 Norwegian. The mill is located at the junction of the B. & O. R. R., with the A. & G. W. giving it advantages to receiving grain, and shipping flour not usually obtained; some idea of the amount of the business transacted by and through this first-class mill may be inferred from the fact that they are now paying the farmers of Richland Co. and vicinity about $200,000 a year for wheat, besides a large quantity of flour exchanged for their "Brown's Best Flour," which is clear evidence that the farmers appreciate their right to enjoy the best that their land produces; of course, the entire population of Richland Co. could not consume the products of this mill; Messrs. Hicks Brown & Co. find no difficulty in disposing of their new-process flour in the discriminating markets of the season, Boston alone taking nearly one-half that is made; Philadelphia and Eastern Pennsylvania taking also a full share. When the new mill commenced operations, it was recognized as one of "the most complete mills in America," and yet the proprietors are constantly on the lookout for improvements, both for machinery, and methods, being determined to keep in the front rank as to the standard of quality of their products; they have put in several improved machines, and are now contemplating additions; the magnificent steam engine which operates the entire machinery seems to defy any ordinary draft in its power; it is a Harris-Corliss engine, something of the renowned Centennial English pattern, and capable of turning out 300 barrels per day; there is indeed something in a name, especially when it is honestly earned; millers are very jealous of their brands of flour (decision of the Supreme Court on trade marks to the contrary notwithstanding), and especially when the contents of the barrel is in keeping with the inscription: Messrs. Hicks Brown & Co's own brands are "Brown's Best," "Belle of Richland," "Brown's Mayflower," "Brown's Charter Oak," historical names, and worthy to be daily mentioned in connection with daily bread.

HOFFER, ISAAC B., dealer in meats, etc. He was born April 13, 1833, in Carlisle, Penn.; came to Ohio in 1852. Married in 1858 to Catherine Leiter; she was born May 19, 1837, in Mansfield; they have the following children—Joseph F., born Feb. 28, 1859; Fannie F., June 23, 1862; Grace, Aug. 9, 1864; Isaac Brainard, Aug. 23, 1868; Edmund Brink, April 15, 1871; Kate L., April 20, 1875; James C., April 28, 1878.

HOFFER, JAMES E., butcher; was born Dec. 31, 1839, in Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn.; came to Ohio July 15, 1858; engaged in butchering; has been at that business constantly since he came to Mansfield. He was married, Nov. 4, 1862, to Melissa Crider, who was born in Massillon, Stark Co., Nov. 4, 1844; they have the following children: May, Laura (deceased), Willie, Jessie, Nellie (deceased), Harry and Fred.

IRWIN, GEORGE (deceased), born Dec. 8, 1787, in Chester Co., Penn., and removed to Ohio with his family in June, 1836. Rachel Wallace Irwin was born in Chester Co., Penn., June 12, 1791; they were the parents of eleven children—Elisabeth Irwin, born in Waynesburg, Chester Co., March 12, 1811, and died Jan. 1, 1815, aged 4 years; Mary Ann Irwin Rooks, born in Waynesburg, Chester Co., Penn., July 31, 1813, a resident of Mansfield; Joseph Irwin, born in Waynesburg, Chester Co., Penn., May 25, 1815, and died July 25, 1815; Levi, born in Waynesburg, Chester Co., Penn., Aug. 9, 1816; Hannah Maria Irwin Carrothers, born in Waynesburg, Chester Co., Penn., Feb. 16, 1819, now living in Mansfield; S. Laferty Irwin, was born at Waynesburg, Chester Co., Penn., April 12, 1821, and died at Mansfield, Ohio, Nov. 9, 1875, aged 54 years; Mr. S. L. Irwin was a carpenter in Mansfield for a number of years and held at different times official positions of trust in township and county; Charlotte Irwin was born at Milton, Northumberland Co., Penn., May 10, 1823, and died at the old homestead, near Mansfield, March 18, 1873, aged 50 years; Elisabeth Irwin, born at Milton, Northumberland Co., Penn., Sept. 19, 1825, and died March 22, 1833, aged 8 years; George W. Irwin, Jr., born in Milton, Northumberland Co., Penn., Aug. 30, 1827; has been engaged in railroad business for over seventeen years in Ohio; Rebecca Irwin, born in White Deer Valley, Lycoming Co., Penn., March 11, 1830, now Rebecca Irwin Ford, living in Madison Township; Sarah Jane Irwin Calhoon was born in White Deer Valley, Lycoming Co., Penn., May 24, 1832, and died at Mansfield, Ohio, March 18, 1873, aged 41 years. George Irwin, the father of these children, died at the old homestead, near Mansfield, March 29, 1864, aged 76 years; Rachel Wallace Irwin, the mother, died in Mansfield Nov. 11, 1873.

IRWIN, LEVI, contractor and builder. This well-known citizen is a descendant of an old Chester Co. (Penn.) family of Welsh descent; the grandfather, father and the subject of this sketch were all born in that county. John Irwin, the grandfather, was a soldier in the war of 1812, taking part in the campaigns in the Northwest, where he died. Levi was the third in a family of nine children of George and Rachel Irwin, five of whom are living and four dead; born Aug. 9, 1816. he came with his parents to Richland Co., Ohio, in the year 1836, locating southeast of Mansfield on a farm which is yet known by the family name. On this farm, the father remained during his whole residence in this county, and there died March 29, 1864, aged 76 years. Rachel Wallace Irwin, soon after her husband's death, came to Mansfield among her children, where she died Nov. 11, 1873, aged 81 years and 9 months. After leaving the family-homestead, Levi removed to Mansfield, where, as a carpenter, contractor and builder, he yet resides, having been in continuous business for over thirty-five years. On the 18th of December, 1852, Levi Irwin was united in marriage to Mary McClellan at Galion, Ohio; to them have been born six children; Nettie, the fifth child and only daughter, died June 15, 1874, aged 11 years and 9 months; four sons reside in the city; Charles L., a druggist; William F., engineer; George, a book salesman, and John McClellan. Mr. Irwin has been a member of No. 19, I. O. O. F., since the year 1851, and a member of the Methodist Church for forty-one years, and a Trustee of the same for thirty-five years; he is accounted among Mansfield's best and most enterprising citizens.

JENNER, S. E., lawyer (son of Dr. A. Jenner); was born July 7, 1839, in Ontario, Richland Co.; commenced the study of law, in 1860, with T. W. Bartley; admitted to the bar in 1862, and commenced practice in company with Judge Bartley in Cincinnati. Married, Oct. 25, 1866, Miss Julia M. Bartley, daughter of Gov. Bartley; returned to Mansfield in 1866, and remained here in practice in company with John W. Jenner till 1872; then moved to Washington City; formed a copartnership with Judge Bartley; remained there till 1877, then returned to Mansfield, and resumed the practice of law with John W. Jenner; present name of law firm, Jenner & Tracy, composed of John W. Jenner, S. E. Jenner and F. K. Tracy.

JOHNSON, JOHN, deceased; he was born in York Co., Penn.; when a young man, he removed to Ontario

Co., N. Y., where he purchased a farm, on which he lived ten years, then returned to York Co., Penn., and married Miss Eleanor Duncan in 1811; afterward resided in Ontario Co., N. Y., until 1824, when he came to Richland Co. and located on a farm three miles west of Mansfield, where he lived until 1845; he then came to Mansfield, where he resided with his daughter, Mrs. T. J. Robinson, until his death, which occurred March 28, 1864, at the advanced age of 80 years. John Johnson and Eleanor Duncan Johnson were the parents of one child—Sarah S., born Nov. 19, 1817; she was married in this county April 11, 1839, to T. J. Robinson, a prominent business man of this city; one child by this marriage—Ella J.; she is the wife of J. P. Vance, of Cincinnati. John Johnson was an elder brother of the Rev. James Johnson, whose biography appears elsewhere.

JOHNSON, JAMES, REV., D. D. (deceased); the first minister of the U. P. Church in Mansfield; he was born in York Co., Penn., in the year 1786; he was of Scotch-Irish descent; at the early age of 17 years, he commenced his ministerial education, in Beaver Co., with his uncle, David Johnson, and afterward graduated in the regular course at Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Penn., and completed his theological studies in New York City, under the instruction of Dr. Mason, then a noted divine of the U. P. denomination resident there; for a number of years, he taught school in Brownsville, Penn., where he afterward began his ministerial work. In 1821, he came to Mansfield, and assisted in laying the foundation of the present building occupied by that denomination, on the corner of Third and Mulberry streets. Three years later, when visiting a brother and sister in Ontario Co., N. Y., he there met Miss Mary St. Clair McCall, whom he married on the 4th of July, 1825, and who came with him to this city, the whole journey occupying fifteen days, being made in one of the cumbersome buggies of that period. He preached, the first Sabbath after reaching Mansfield, in the then unfinished church, the congregation bringing chairs and stools with them in lieu of other accommodations; he continued his ministry without interruption in this place until his death, which occurred in 1858. He was a man justly beloved by his people and respected by all for his upright life and conduct; for a number of years, he had regular congregations and appointments in Troy and Monroe Townships during his pastorate here. He was the father of three children, two sons and one daughter; Mathew St. Clair died in this city, aged 17 years; Robert William was a soldier in the Mexican war, and died in Mexico, was brought home and buried; Mary, the only daughter, died in 1852, aged 21 years.

JOHNSTON, J. K., dealer in furniture; he was born Oct. 11, 1850, at Mansfield; is a son of Eleazer Johnston, who came to Mansfield in 1848, and came to his death in the army. He engaged with John Skeggs and learned the carpenter business; in 1873, engaged in the cabinet business, devoting his whole attention to this branch of trade; in the spring of 1877, he formed a copartnership with M. P. Shambs in the furniture business, which continued till January, 1878; then formed a copartnership with D. H. Earnest; they still continue. He was married, Oct. 24, 1872, to Miss Anna M. C. Weatherby; she was born in Mansfield; they have two children—Margaret A., born May 15, 1874, and Maud A., Dec. 29, 1878.

JOHNSTON, D. R., wholesale and retail druggist; he is a regularly graduated physician, and practiced medicine twelve years. He was for several years, as a physician, connected with the U. P. Mission in Egypt. In 1876, he purchased the Markward Drug Store, below the Wiler House; he carries a large stock, and does an extensive business.

KANAGA, AMOS R., attorney at law; the subject of this sketch was born Nov. 14, 1854, in Jefferson Township; he attended the high school of Bellville from the age of 16 to 20 years, and afterward at the West Salem public schools, and then at Oberlin College; he studied law first with Thomas Keeler, of West Salem, and completed his studies with Dicky & Jenner, of Mansfield; he was admitted to the bar in Ashland, Ohio, June 19, 1878, and is now engaged in this city in the practice of law; he now has a good, paying practice; the public will find him ready to attend to such business that may be placed in his care, with promptness and dispatch.

KEYS, A. E., M. D., physician and surgeon. The subject of this sketch was born in Eagle Co., N. Y., Aug. 2, 1825; his parents were natives of Vermont, where they afterward resided until his 10th year, when they again removed to Western New York; here young Keys received a good common-school education; having chosen medicine as his profession, he commenced reading under the instruction of an uncle in Huron Co., Ohio; at the age of 19 years, he attended his first course of lectures at the old Erie Street School in Cleveland, Ohio, in 1846; some years later we find him in partnership with his uncle in the practice of medicine, with whom he remained until the spring of 1856, when he attended his second course of lectures at the Berkshire Medical College, Mass., and again in the winter of 1856, the Homeopathic School of Philadelphia; after this long and thorough course of study, the Doctor commenced the practice of medicine and surgery in Buffalo, N. Y., but a year later removed to Jamestown, in the same State, where he continued in practice until the beginning of the war in 1861, when he enlisted as surgeon in the army; the Doctor remained in the army two years, when he resigned and again commenced general practice in Ravenna, Ohio; in 1869, he came to Mansfield, where he has since resided, having a large and lucrative practice, and is looked upon by his brethren of the profession as a skillful surgeon and physician. He is a prominent member and officer of the Masonic Order and Knights of Honor.

KING, JEROME J., grocer. He comes from a family long resident in Troy Township, where he was born May 4, 1842; he received his elementary education principally at the Lexington Union Schools; when 17 years of age, he left the homestead and embarked in life for himself; for two years thereafter he was employed as a salesman of dry goods in Jeromeville, Ashland Co.; he came to Mansfield in 1861, and continued in the same business in the store of P. & A. W. Remy until April 1, 1865, when he entered into partnership with A. W. Remy in the retail grocery trade, which terminated Jan. 10, 1865; since that time he has been engaged in the same business alone in the city. Mr. King was married in Mansfield, Aug. 27, 1867, to Miss Mary G. Miller, by whom he has five children—Jerome Howard, Allen Miller, Clarence Catlin, Rufus Hobert and Mary Louise; during his residence in Mansfield, he has been considered one of her representative business men.

KNISELY, J. H., proprietor shirt manufactory. This factory is located in Krause's Block, on Main street, and gives employment to twenty hands, twelve sewing machines, and keeps two salesmen constantly on the road; the business was founded in 1876 by Mr. Knisely and two others, Mr. Knisely becoming sole owner shortly after; in 1876, the income amounted to $6,000, now it will reach $15,000 per year; Mr. Knisely is no novice at the business, having had an experience of over six years in a leading Philadelphia house previous to commencing his present enterprise; he turns out more shirts than any other factory in the State, retaining many of his old customers, who have learned to trust him; his productions never fail to show their superior quality, the prices range from $1 to $2.50, and guarantee in every case a satisfactory fit or no pay; all his material is bought direct from the importer, thus avoiding the "middle man" and his commission, and giving his customers the benefit of these figures; he laundries all his shirts, and keeps a full line of linen collars and cuffs always on hand; the shirts manufactured by Mr. Knisely possess many excellent features of style, durability and finish; the reputation of his shirts is now firmly established.

KNOFFLOCK, M., egg-packer; he was born Sept. 20, 1831, in Bucks Co., Penn.; he enlisted as a sailor on a United States man-of-war in 1841, when a mere boy; he served five years on board the United States frigate St. Mary, during which time he visited China, Japan, and all the principal islands of the Pacific and Arctic seas, as well as the different countries of South America; he served as a soldier in Co. E, 2d Penn. V. I. during the Mexican war, and was engaged in the campaigns and engagements under Scott while there; he served in the Union army during the late rebellion in Co. B, 27th O. V. I., two years (his full term of enlistment). He was married in Philadelphia in 1849, to Miss Sarah McNeely, who died in 1873; he was again married in Shelby, Ohio, to Miss Mary Jones, and is the father of three children.

KRAUSE, JOHN, merchant; was born in Niedermodau, Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany; his father's name was George Krause, and his mother's maiden name was Maggie Krause; John Krause was the second son, born Aug. 28, 1819, and came to America in 1847, landed in New York June 14, 1847; he came to Mansfield, June 20, 1847. He was married June 29, 1847, in Leesville, Crawford Co. to Elizabeth Beck, with whom he raised four children. One died in infancy; John, the oldest, born March 19, 1848, now one of the partners of Krause & Sons; Philip, the second child, was born Jan. 29, 1850, also partner in the firm; Cassie Miller Krause, born July 19, 1854; John Henry, born March 9, 1857. Mr. Krause has been in active business in Mansfield for twenty-four years, and is the senior member of the firm; in the year 1874, he erected the large business block on Main street now known as the Krause building, which he occupies in his grocery and provision business, in which he has been engaged over twenty-four years, now the oldest merchant in active business in that line in the city; Mr. Krause is at present a resident of West Fourth street, Mansfield.

LARIMER, JOSIAH (deceased). His father, James Larimer, emigrated to this country from Ireland in October, 1790, and located first at Pittsburgh, afterward removed to Virginia for a time, and then to Fairfield Co., Ohio, where Josiah was born Nov. 14, 1814; the family removed to Richland Co. in May, 1815, and settled in Madison Township on part of Sec. 31; he remained on the farm until 21 years old, and then came to Mansfield, where he was engaged in the livery business almost continually until a short time before his death, which occurred Oct. 5, 1875. He was married in this county to Miss Jane Sweeney, who survives him; three children by this marriage, one son and two daughters, reside in the city.

LINDSEY, E. D., plain and ornamental plasterer, fresco and granite artist; was born on Valley Farm, one mile west of Hollidaysburg, Penn., May 5, 1821. His father and mother, Jacob and Jane Simonton, moved there from the East. His mother's folks moved from Wilmington, Del., and settled in Canoe Valley. Both families had a great deal of trouble with the Indians; John Simonton, his uncle, was captured by them on one of their tours of massacre, etc., and was never recovered; he became quite a noted chief. E. D. Lindsey received his elementary education near where the city of Altoona now stands, and, on the 5th of May, 1836, at the age of 15 years, began an apprenticeship of four years, at his present occupation; at the expiration of that time, he went to Philadelphia, where he completed his trade in the ornamental branches; he then returned to Hollidaysburg and carried on business for several years, when, at the request of an old uncle, he started in the spring of 1845 for the Upper Sandusky (Ohio) land sales, intending to purchase property there; this project was afterward abandoned, and he settled in Marion, Ohio, where he resided till the fall of 1864, having purchased property in Galion in the summer of 1863, and was a partner in the wholesale and retail grocery business, under the firm name of Haines & Lindsey; in the fall of 1864, his family moved to Galion; in the spring of 1866, he engaged in the oil business in Pennsylvania, until the spring of 1867, when he returned to Galion and resumed his trade, doing business throughout Central, Northern and Western Ohio. That he is a skilled mechanic, some of the finest buildings, both public and private, will bear testimony—such as the court house in Sandusky City; court house, Catholic and Methodist Church at Mansfield, and numerous other fine buildings throughout the State. In 1867, was called to finish the residence of Joseph Simmons, and again, in 1869, to finish the Methodist Church—both of Mansfield, where he has resided ever since. He was married to Keziah J. Randall, of Marion, Oct. 26, 1848, by the Rev. L. B. Gurley. They are the parents of three children, Eugene D., Elmon H. and Harrie W.; the elder two are engaged in the drug business, and the younger is a musician at Mansfield. Mr. Lindsey relates this circumstance, which is quite a coincidence: He, with two friends and their wives, celebrated their marriage by a triple silver wedding, at his residence in Mansfield, Oct. 26, 1873, at which time all three couples were present, receiving many elegant gifts of remembrance; the marriage took place twenty-five years prior, at 7 o'clock A. M., at or as near the same minute as possible—the ceremonies were performed by different ministers, and with their bridal attendants started upon the wedding tour. All of them were most intimate friends in youth. The triple marriage was the result of a wager, which was, that if any one or more of the three were not married in three months from that date, he should forfeit a considerable sum of money; his two friends discussed their love-tales before him, thinking that he would have to pay the wager, and not till the day previous to the wedding did they discover that he was in the ring. Another perhaps remarkable thing was, that each couple had but three children. He joined the Ancient Order of Odd Fellows in the year 1846, afterward became a member of the Encampment, having served in all subordinate offices; took all degrees, passed all chairs, also the higher degrees of both Grand Subordinate Lodge and Grand Encampment of Ohio, and entitled to a seat in both grand bodies and the Grand Lodge of the United States, and is still an active member of all branches.

LIVELSBERGER, C. F., shoemaker. He is engaged in the manufacturing of boots and shoes; he is prepared to do all classes of work—sewed work a specialty. Shop on North Main street.

LONGSDORF, WILLIAM, house-joiner; was born in Berks Co., Penn., April 27, 1823. He removed to Stark Co., Ohio, with his parents in 1830, where they remained two years, when they again moved to Wayne Co. At the age of 15, he began his trade in Summit Co., which he acquired in three years; he followed his trade until 1848, when, by the premature discharge of a cannon on the Fourth of July of that year, he was incapacitated from further work in his calling. He was married in 1845, to Miss Aurelia D. Ward, in Cuyahoga Falls. They are the parents of ten children, four of whom are living and six dead. He removed to Mansfield in the fall of 1855, where he has since resided.

LUDWIG, JOHN ADAM, farmer; P. O. Mansfield; was born in July, 1840, and received his elementary education in Mansfield, where, and in Madison Township, he has been engaged in business until the present time. Mr. Ludwig was married to Miss Catherena Pfenning, who died in May, 1872, by whom he had three children—George Elbert, Charles Henry, Anna Louisa. In December, 1872, Mr. Ludwig was married to Philepena Snook, by whom he had one child, born in 1876. John Peter and Elizabeth (Delf) Ludwig, the parents of Adam L., were born in Germany, and have resided in Mansfield and Madison Township for many years, where they are universally respected.

McBRIDE, THOMAS, attorney at law. He was born in Monroe Township, Nov. 20, 1827; his parents, Alexander and Ruth J. McBride, came to this county and settled in Monroe about the year 1820, where the subject of this sketch received his elementary education in part, when he removed to Missouri and continued his studies until his return home two years afterward; from that time until he commenced the study of law, he was alternately engaged in teaching school during the winter, and working on the farm during the summer months; he commenced the study of law in this city, and was admitted to the bar by the District Court at Mount Vernon in June, 1857; commenced practice in Defiance, Ohio, where he remained eight years; while there he was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Defiance Co. two terms—from 1859 to 1863; he then returned to Mansfield, where he continued to practice his profession with M. May; the firm of May & McBride was dissolved in April, 1868, and McBride & A. M. Burns in April, 1874, when he entered into partnership with B. Burns & Son, under the firm name of Burns & McBride, and Burns, the junior member of the firm, having been elected Prosecuting Attorney of Richland Co., retired in April, 1877, since which time he has been engaged in the practice with Barnabus Burns, under the firm name of Burns & McBride. He was married in September, 1857, to Miss Barbara E. Brandt, of Springfield Township, by whom he has five children living, three sons and two daughters—Curtis Victor, Willie Edgar, Minnie Blanch, Florence Mabel Brandt, Thomas Hall, Hattie May McBride; the third child and oldest daughter died in her 7th year in Mansfield.

McBRIDE, JAMES (deceased). Prominent among the early settlers of Richland Co., who were identified with its growth and prosperity, were the McBrides, of Scotch pedigree; their father emigrated to America soon after the Scottish insurrection, 1796, and first settled in Chester Co., Penn.; James was born in Little York, Penn., Feb. 3, 1812; his father's family came to Richland Co. in 1823, and cleared and put up the first building on the Robert Coulter farm west of Mansfield; during his long residence in this city of fifty-four years, he was largely engaged in stock-dealing, which he took principally to the Philadelphia market, crossing the Alleghany Mountains twenty-seven times before the days of railroad transportation. Mr. McBride was married, July 12, 1838, to Miss Lettelia Hoy, a daughter of Richard Hoy, who came to Richland Co. in 1816, and cleared and built on a farm north of Mansfield; James McBride died in Mansfield Aug. 12, 1876, leaving three children, two of whom reside in the city, Sadie J. and Matie L.; Mrs. Lettelia Hoy McBride was born in Salem, Washington Co. N. Y.; she died June 6, 1870, in Mansfield; John G., second son, died Oct. 16, 1870, aged 25 years; J. Douglas, the oldest, was born March 26, 1842, now a resident of Washington City.

McBRIDE, ROBERT (deceased). Mr. McBride was born in Chester Co., Penn., March 20, 1808, of Scotch ancestry; his father, James McBride, was born in Ireland, whither his parents had gone during the insurrections in Scotland, and soon after migrated to America and settled first in Chester Co., Penn.; in the year 1823, the McBride's came to Richland Co., Ohio, and lived for a time on what is known as the Finney farm, and afterward on the Barr farm, west of Mansfield; while yet a young man, he came to Mansfield and opened a dry-goods store, in which business he continued until 1848; afterward, he was engaged in a number of enterprises, and was one of the prominent and extensive wool-dealers of this part of the country; for a number of years he was engaged largely in that business with a Mr. Sexton, of Cleveland. Robert McBride was married in the year 1845 to Miss Jane E. Shriner, of Pennsylvania, to whom were born four children, two of whom are dead and two residents of Mansfield; James H. engaged in the practice of the law, and Robert in the dry-goods business; Mary, the only daughter, died in 1860; George died in 1874, and was a number of years one of the prominent business men of Mansfield and a young man of great promise. Robert McBride will be remembered by the older residents of Mansfield as one of her best citizens, a man of integrity, whom all respected. He died Feb. 14, 1865.

McCLOY, ANDREW JACKSON, was born Feb. 11, 1828, near Zanesville, Ohio, the eighth child of David C. and Elizabeth McCloy; his father was of Protestant Irish descent, and came to this country in 1812; Elizabeth McCloy Haymaker was born in Virginia; in the year 1820, they removed to Ohio and settled in Muskingum Co., where he died in 1831. In the spring of 1846, A. J. McCloy came to Mansfield, where and in the vicinity he resided until the present time (1880). He was married in 1848 to Miss Mary Church, of Butler Township, by whom he has raised one son, Eli Chapman McCloy, now a resident of the West; naturally of a retiring disposition, yet an enthusiastic admirer of the beauties of nature, possessing fine social qualities, he is at once a companion and friend.

McCOY, ECKELS, Probate Judge. The subject of this sketch is of Scotch-Irish descent, and a name which has, through many years of public services and enterprises, become familiar to the residents of Richland Co.; born in Wayne Co., Ohio, June 22, 1825, the second son of Arwin and Jane (Eckels) McCoy; when of sufficient age, E. McCoy served an apprenticeship as carpenter for three years in Wayne Co., with a Mr. Stichler, previous to his removal to Mansfield, where he continued his trade with Mr. George Watson, long since deceased, whose daughter, Elizabeth Watson, he afterward married, by whom he has had seven children, six of whom are living and one is dead. In the year 1846, he joined both the Masonic Order and the I. O. O. F., in both of which he has held at different times a number of subordinate offices. Since 1856, he has been a useful member of the cemetery association; to him is due in part its present creditable condition. Since the year 1852, he has served as a member of the City Council five terms, and also as City Clerk. In 1853, he was elected Recorder of Richland Co., and re-elected in 1856. In 1860, he served as Clerk pro tem. of the Court of Common Pleas; appointed Superintendent of the Mansfield Water Works on May 1, 1872, he served as such until Feb. 1, 1879, when he resigned to accept the position of Probate Judge of Richland Co., to which he was elected, and which office he now holds. In March, 1850, Mr. McCoy was one of a party destined for the then comparatively unexplored gold regions of California, going by the way of Panama, and a year later returned through the city of Mexico and New Orleans. In addition to the public office which he now holds, Mr. McCoy is now and has been a member of the Richland Mutual Insurance Company, and Treasurer of the same; a man whom all classes of citizens without regard to party respect, and who has been faithful to all trusts confided to him.

McCRAY, T. Y., lawyer; born in Washington Co., Penn, Aug. 8, 1837; emigrated to Richland Co. in 1846; he was raised on a farm; he became crippled and had the asthma when young; attended school at Savannah and Hayesville Institutes; taught school twelve years; in 1860, was appointed on the Board of Examiners in Ashland Co.; served the term of four years; was admitted at the bar in 1862 in Ashland Co. He was married in 1863, to Miss Mary E. Barnhill, in Ashland Co. In March, 1866, moved to West Salem, Wayne Co.; had charge of the public schools till 1868; while there, was appointed on the Board of Examiners of Wayne Co.; continued till 1875; in 1868 was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Wayne Co. for a term of two years; in 1870 was re-elected, making a term of four years. In 1868 moved to Wooster, and engaged exclusively in the practice of law; in 1875 went to Cleveland, formed a partnership with J. M. Stewart, continued substantially one year; being asthmatic for the last three months, lost his voice, then returned to Wooster for the purpose of settling up his affairs; came to Mansfield Aug. 20, 1876; resumed the practice of law up till this time. Have had the following children—Robert, born in Ashland Co., Jan. 12, 1864; Minnie, in Ashland, Jan. 11, 1866; Clarence V., Nov. 5, 1868, in West Salem; Gracie, Sept. 14, 1872, in Wooster; Ella B., July 26, 1875, at Wooster; Thomas, June 26, 1878, in Mansfield; Robert died in 1871, Clarence in 1870, in Wooster; Ella died in 1876.

McCRORY, R. B., attorney and member of Legislature; was born in Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Penn., Feb. 13, 1846; came to Ohio with his father, Samuel McCrory, in a wagon to Mansfield. He was educated in the public schools of Mansfield; studied law with Geddes, Burns & Dickey; was admitted to the bar the 20th of June, 1870; commenced the practice of law; continued a short time alone, then formed a partnership with A. R. Scheble; continued with said firm about four months, then resumed the practice alone. In the spring of 1871, he was a candidate for Prosecuting Attorney against Andrew Stevenson and J. R. Cowen; Mr. Stevenson withdrew; was defeated by Cowen, by 180 votes; in the fall of 1872, the office was vacated by Cowen; A. J. Mack and R. B. McCrory were nominated; Mr. McCrory was elected; in 1874 was re-elected over S. E. Fink; served for the term of four years and three months; since then continued the practice of law; formed a partnership with Andrew Stevenson in December, 1878; nominated at the Democratic primary meeting in June, 1879, as candidate for member of Legislature; was elected Oct. 14, by 780 votes over Williams, 706 over Sowers; it was one of the most enthusiastic campaigns ever known in Richland Co.

McCULLOUGH, DAVID; was born in Washington Co., Penn., March 30, 1810, and came to Mansfield in February, 1822; for a number of years, he lived and carried on his trade of tailoring on the west side of Main street, below Market. Mr. McCullough is now a resident of East Market street, Mansfield, where he has lived for nearly fifty years, and has raised a large family of children, many of whom are scattered over the Western parts of the United States, while others lie at rest in the beautiful cemetery of Mansfield, a place he has done much to improve and adorn while acting as one of the members of the cemetery association. Under the old constitution of Ohio, Mr. McCullough held the position of Associate Judge a number of years. In 1855, he was elected Treasurer of Richland Co., serving out his full term with fidelity and conceded by all classes to have been faithful to his trusts. Mr. McCullough was taken into the Masonic Order in Mt. Zion Lodge, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, in the year 1841, and is now supposed to be the only living charter member of the Mansfield Masonic Lodge, in which he has held at different times a number of subordinate offices. During Mr. McCullough's long residence in Mansfield, he has always been looked upon as one of her best citizens. David McCullough was married to Catherine Tumbleson in Mansfield by the Rev. James Johnson, first minister of the U. P. Church in Mansfield. Catherine Tumbleson was born in Franklin Co., Penn., in the year 1809, and died in Mansfield in the year 1878; a kind and affectionate mother and wife, Mrs. McCullough will long be remembered by residents of the city for her many acts of charity and love.

McCULLOUGH, NOAH COOK, tailor; the first child of John and Melissa Cook McCullough. John McCullough, also a tailor, came to Ohio and settled in Mansfield Oct. 20, 1817, when a boy of sixteen years, preceding his brother David, who survives him. In August, 1827, Melissa Cook McCullough died in Mansfield, and was buried in the same grave with an infant child. John McCullough was among the oldest and most respected of our pioneer citizens, and esteemed for his many virtues; he died in Mansfield Oct. 4, 1872, aged 71 years. Noah C. McCullough was born in Mansfield, Oct. 29, 1824, on East Diamond street, near the old tanyard; when about 16 years of age, he commenced work with his uncle David, and continued in the same shop until 1848, when David retired; Noah McCullough is now and has been in the tailoring business in Mansfield since that date, and is the oldest tailor, in active business, in Mansfield. On the 24th day of Oct., 1848, Noah Cook McCullough was married to Sarah J. Pennywell, formerly of Massillon, in Mansfield. Miss Pennywell was born on the 1st day of December, 1825, and came to Mansfield in 1844. To them have been born two sons, Warren John McCullough, who died in infancy, and Willard Harvey, born Nov. 12, 1854, now connected with the Adams Express Company, in Mansfield. Mr. McCullough has been a member of the Mansfield Masonic Lodge, No. 35, since 1848, and during that time has held a number of subordinate offices. A member of the Baptist Church for over fifteen years, he is looked upon as one of Mansfield's best citizens.

McCULLOUGH, A. H., M.D.; is a native of Beaver Co., Penn.; his parents lived on a farm in Raccoon Township, and he assisted his father in farming and attended school until he was 18 years old; he then entered Westminster College, where he remained one year, and then went to Wooster University, where he graduated in 1873. After graduating, he went to Pittsburgh, and entered the office of Dr. John Dickson & Sons; and graduated from Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, 1875; he then located in Massillon, Ohio, and practiced his profession about six months, when he removed to Mansfield, where he has practiced medicine ever since. He added to his professional duties that of the drug business, having bought out the establishment of W. B. Mercer in September, 1878, in which business, together with his profession, he met with excellent success.

McFALL, HUGH (deceased). He was born in Bucks Co., Penn., Jan. 3, 1783; from there he moved to Beaver Co., where he learned the carpenter trade, which he followed for a time, when he removed to Canton, Ohio, in 1815, where he began work as a clerk in the store of Wm. Christmas; he came to Mansfield in 1821, and commenced business in a general dry-goods store, under the firm name of McFall & Co; his partner was George Stidger, of Canton, Ohio; this partnership continued about five years, when he purchased the interest of Stidger, and carried on the business until 1846, when he retired. He was married in Mansfield, July 4, 1824, to Miss Clarissa Smith, a native of Waterloo, Seneca Co., N. Y.; she was born Jan. 16, 1805; they were the parents of four children, one of whom died in infancy; Ephraim, the eldest child living, was born in this city, April 26, 1825; Gaylord was born Feb. 22, 1829; Susan Franc Dec. 25, 1836; during Mr. M.'s long business career in Mansfield, he acquired the enviable reputation of being a strictly honest man; he never was known to misrepresent to a customer, and often, when it would have been to his pecuniary interest, he refused, while others frequently used the advantage. He died in September, 1869. Mrs. Clarissa Smith McFall is yet living, and possesses a vivid recollection of the early times in this county.

McFALL, EPHRAIM, son of Hugh McFall; was born April 26, 1825, in Mansfield; he was educated in the Mansfield schools; then engaged in the wholesale grocery; was the first to engage in a jobbing business; he continued fifteen years; he then engaged in the study and practice of a veterinarian surgeon. Mr. McFall was married in January, 1854, to Miss G. C. Thomas; she was born in Maryland. They have one son, Hugh, who was born in 1860; is now employed by H. M. Weaver & Co., in their wholesale boot and shoe store.

McFARLAND, ROBERT C., grocer; was born Nov. 28, 1837, in Washington Township, Richland Co. Married in 1861, to Mary E. Norris, who was born in Hanover Township, Ashland Co., June 6, 1842. They have six children—Joseph S., born June 30, 1866; George O., June 10, 1868; Alfred H., June 16, 1870; David O., May 8, 1872; Harry W., March 22, 1874; Almira Adella, June 1, 1876. Mr. McFarland enlisted in Co. E, 64th O. V. I., for the term of three years; after his discharge, re-enlisted as a veteran soldier; was engaged as a soldier for four years; he was wounded three times at the battle of Stone River, and at the battle of Franklin, Tenn., was wounded through the left shoulder, and then taken prisoner and retained about twenty-one days; he was in sixteen regular battles or engagements. After the war closed, he located in Mansfield; is now engaged in the grocery business, and is a live business man, and as a citizen he is regarded as one of our leading and enterprising men, always ready to promote every good cause and work.

McFARLAND, DAVID K.; was born Dec. 30, 1852, in Washington Township, this county. Married Jan. 22, 1874, to Maranda J. McConkie, who was born Feb. 2, 1857. They had the following family—Elbert B., born Nov. 14, 1876; Mary, born May 15, 1879. Maranda McFarland died May 30, 1879. Mr. Mc. moved to Knox Co., Ill., March 1877.

McGUIRE, JOSEPH, carpenter; was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., 1820; he came to Ohio with his parents in 1822; located in Richland Co. He was married in September, 1849, to Elizabeth Hoover, who was born in this county in 1829. They have the following children—Paulinia Rosella, born July 1, 1850; Mary Elisebeth, March 25, 1852; William Franklin, April 30, 1855; Alice Dell, Feb. 4, 1857; Emma Ann and John E. (twins), May 31, 1861. Mr. McGuire located in Mansfield in 1842; he has been a citizen of this city ever since.

McKINLEY, JOHN F., farmer. As a soldier and citizen, this name is familiar to the residents of Mansfield, and the members of the 120th O. V. I.; born in Wayne Co., Feb. 27, 1835, he remained at home attending school and working at different occupations until of age, when he removed to Iowa, and entered into business; three years afterward, he returned to Ohio, and settled in Ashland, where he remained until the breaking-out of the civil war, when he enlisted at Mansfield in Capt. Dickey's company of the 15th O. V. I., three-months service; after serving his full term of enlistment, Mr. McKinley returned to Ashland Co., where he was married to Elisebeth Neal on the 27th day of November, 1861, and remained until August, 1862, when he again entered the service, and recruited Co. C, 120th O. V. I., which was stationed at Camp Mansfield until fully organized; this regiment was soon after ordered to Covington, Ky., when it entered into active service, the history of which will be found in another part of this work. During Mr. McKinley's career as a soldier, he served with distinction in all of the battles in which that regiment was engaged, first at Chickasaw Bluffs, Miss., the battle of Arkansas Post, Port Gibson, siege of Vicksburg, Jackson, Miss., Fort Blakely, when he was promoted to the position of Major of the regiment, and served as such during the battle of Snaggy Point, on the Red River; for about eight months thereafter he was in command of the regiment as Major. The 120th O. V. I. was later consolidated with the 114th O. V. I., when Maj. McKinley was promoted to the lieutenant colonelcy, afterward known as the 114th O. V. I., in which he served until the close of the war.

McLAUGHLIN, GEN. WILLIAM (deceased). This distinguished soldier was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Feb. 3, 1802; in his youth, he attended the common schools of the country, where, by dint of perseverance, he learned to write a beautiful hand, which, in early life, he turned to pecuniary advantage by giving writing lessons. Getting interested in the study of law, he determined to study for that profession; he applied to Gen. Robert Moore, then a member of Congress, and a practicing lawyer at Beaver Court House, Penn.; Gen. Moore advised him to take time to consider the matter, and, if he still concluded to enter the profession, to come to his office. At the end of a week, young McLaughlin came to Beaver Court House, and enrolled himself as a student. He was a fellow-student with Chief Justice Agnew and Col. Richard P. Roberts, two of the greatest lawyers in Western Pennsylvania. Col. Roberts has a brother and several other relatives in and about Shelby, in this county. Young McLaughlin was a very frank, honest, manly fellow, and was universally liked. When he had completed his law studies, Gen. Moore advised him to go West, as he had not had the good fortune to receive a thorough early education, as had been the case with the majority of the young members of the bar in Beaver, then a small place on the west banks of the Ohio. Gen. Moore told him that in the West he would have a better chance to rise, and, in compliance with this advice, McLaughlin came to Canton, Ohio, and began the practice of law. Here he was cotemporary with David Starkweather, Hiram Griswold, Dwight Jarvis, John Harris, and other men of that class. He made friends in Canton, as he had at Beaver, and soon rose in his profession. Desirous of coming farther West, he left Canton about 1828, and came to Mansfield; here he engaged in the practice of law, and soon became successful. When the Mexican war broke out, McLaughlin, who had always been a leader in the militia, raised a company and left for the front. Its history is given in the chapter on that subject. After his return in 1847, he resumed the practice of law, which he followed until the spring of 1861, when he was the first man to respond to the call for troops. He sent a dispatch to the Governor, tendering a company, when, in fact, he did not have a man enlisted. From the breaking-out of the war, until his death, his history is so closely identified with that of the war, that to give it here would repeat, in a large measure, what has been written on that subject. His last public act was to raise a squadron of cavalry, which he led to the field, and which he commanded until his death, July 28, 1862.

McMILLEN, DAVID C., M. D. The subject of this sketch is of Scotch-Irish descent, and direct offspring of a soldier in the war for American independence and the war of 1812. His grandfather emigrated to America with a brother soon after the insurrection in Scotland. David C. McMillen was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, July 27, 1832, and was the sixth in a family of eight children; in 1854 he came to Shelby, this county, and commenced reading medicine with his brother Calvin, with whom he remained until he commenced general practice, having attended lectures at the Cleveland Medical College in 1856 and 1857. With the exception of two years' residence in Goshen, Ind., the Doctor has continued in the practice of his profession in this county, almost without interruption, until the present time; he removed to Mansfield in the year 1870, and is now in general practice, attending faithfully to his duties, and with an increasing practice. During the war, he served as Assistant Surgeon of the 163d O. N. G., and also on a hospital boat on the Ohio and Tennessee Rivers.

McMILLEN, JAMES FRANK, physician (eclectic); Dr. McMillen was born in Weathersfield Township, Trumbull Co., Ohio, the 16th of June, 1824, the eldest of the three brothers residing in Mansfield, belonging to an ancestry which can be traced back to the great Scottish insurrection, and afterward in the American Revolution and the war of 1812. At the age of 19, he commenced the study of medicine, which soon after he discontinued for a short time, but again resumed under the instruction of Dr. Evarts, of Cleveland. In 1849, he came to Shelby, Ohio, and engaged in the practice of his profession; for over twelve years, the Doctor has been engaged in active practice in Mansfield, and, with the exception of short intervals of absence in St. Louis, Indianapolis and Macon, Ga., has been in general practice for thirty years. Dr. J. F. McMillen was married in Warren, Trumbull Co., Ohio, Dec. 27, 1853, to Laura Goodale Hadley, who died in Shelby, Ohio, on the 12th of December, 1866. To them was born one child—William E., now a resident of Omaha, who was born March 22, 1857. Was again married on the 27th of November, 1879, to Mrs. Catherine C. Edmonds, at Mansfield.

McMILLEN, JOHN ALFRED, plasterer and painter; was born in Trumbull Co., Ohio, Jan. 29, 1838; moved to Shelby, Richland Co., in 1852, with his parents. Of Scotch-Irish descent, he inherits the strength and constitution of that people; the lineage can be found in the biographies of his two brothers, in another part of this work. At the breaking-out of the late war, he enlisted in the Union army at Union City, Ind., as private, in the 11th O. V. I., three-months service, serving his full term with credit and honor. J. A. McMillen was married at Union City, Ind., to Anna Caron, in the year 1866, where he remained and worked at his trade, until his removal to Mansfield, in 1871. During his residence in Mansfield, he served on the police force and was accounted a faithful officer. They have three children.

MARSHALL, E. C., salesman; was born Oct. 9, 1856, in Washington Township, Richland Co.; he served with J. Kelly, of Bellville, as an apprentice; learned the tinner trade; then attended the Bellville High School, after which he went to Mount Union College in Stark Co.; came to Mansfield in 1876; employed as clerk in the Sharp dry-goods store, after which he engaged as salesman in Singer's hat store, which position he still retains.

MARSHALL, JOHN, dealer in farming implements; he was born in this county March 22, 1835. He married Mary A. Cookston. He enlisted in the late war as a member of the 7th Indiana Battery; served two years, and was discharged on account of sickness, after which he returned, and was for a time Lieutenant of Co. E, 2d O. V. C. He is now a resident of this city. He is engaged in selling farming implements of various kinds, and is doing a very extensive business.

MATTHES, ADAM, proprietor of European Hotel; he was born in Germany Jan. 8, 1832; emigrated to America in 1851, and located in Mansfield. He was married, Aug. 14, 1855, to Caroline Heltmen, who was born in this county in 1837; they have the following family—Louis, born Jan. 9, 1858; Caroline, May 1, 1862; John, June 13, 1864; Adam, Jr., July 13, 1866; May, Oct. 31, 1868; Charley and Frederick (twins), April 10, 1871; Amelia, July 9, 1877; Andrew, Oct. 5, 1879. Mr. Matthes is engaged in conducting the European Hotel, and is doing a good business.

MAXWELL BROS., dry goods; the store is located in a three-story brick building, 20x80 feet, at No. 11 Main street, in which can be found the largest and most complete stock of staple and fancy dry goods, embracing all articles usually found in the best stores, exceeding any other establishment in the city of Mansfield. This house was established in 1860; their increase in the past few years has been all that they could wish, and they now do a business that compares favorably with any similar house in the city; anything new in the dry-goods line can always be found in the store of the Maxwell Bros., and, as they have but one price, total strangers can buy just as cheap as regular customers. Robert B. Maxwell, the active member and business manager of the house, is a gentleman of over twenty-five years' experience; he is honest and straightforward in all his transactions, and never fails to gain the confidence and esteem of all with whom he may come in contact. The brothers were born in Scotland—Robert, in 1840, and John, in 1834; they are now taking the lead in this line of goods; all who call on them will find them congenial gentlemen with one, and they are destined to be successful in business.

MAY, JOHN MILTON (deceased); he was born in Conway, Hampshire Co., Mass., Oct. 13, 1787. The ancestor of his race in America was John May, from Mayfield, Sussex Co., England, Captain of the ship James, which sailed between the ports of New England and London, from 1635 to 1640, when he settled in Roxbury, Mass.; from this stock descended the Mays of New England, New York and Michigan, known in military and civic life; Theodore May, the father of the subject of this sketch, was a Revolutionary war soldier, who, at the close of his services, receiving his pay in Continental currency, so utterly depreciated that John Milton and his other boys would use it for "thumb-papers" at school. In 1797, he removed with his family to Washington Co., N. Y. In 1811, our Mr. May emigrated thence alone for Ohio, crossing the Alleghany Mountains to Pittsburgh on foot, arriving at Marietta, Ohio, by boat. In the fall of that year, he commenced the study of law in the office of Philemon Beecher, in Lancaster, Ohio, having for fellow-students for a time Hon. Thomas Ewing and the late Judge Jacob Parker, of this city; during his novitiate in the law, he supported himself by teaching in the winter-time; Hocking H. Hunter was one of his pupils; he was admitted to the bar July 26, 1815, and in the autumn of the same year, settled in Mansfield, where he resided until his death, which occurred Dec. 12, 1869; he was the first resident lawyer in Mansfield, and practiced in his profession until two years previous to his death. He was elected Prosecuting Attorney for this circuit in 1816, but resigned the office in 1817, because the defenses to prosecutions offered him better compensation; for many years, he rode the circuit of the northern and western County Courts, and had a large and successful practice. In 1825, he married Miss Artemisia Wolfe, from one of the pioneer families of the county, by whom he had one son, now the Hon. Manuel May, of this city, and one daughter, Miss Lizzie E. May, who died in 1866. In politics, Mr. May was unambitious; in his profession, he was a fine advocate, as well as an able chancery lawyer, and, during his long life, always maintained a high character as a good citizen and an honest man; in his latter years, among his associate lawyers, he was styled the "Nestor of the bar," and known as "Father May," and to the day of his death maintained the good will, respect and confidence of all. He was confined to his house about a month before his demise, but was not bed-fast; he passed peacefully away while sitting in his chair.

MAY, MANUEL, attorney. Mr. May was born in Mansfield, where he has resided continuously since; he is of pioneer parentage. The biography of his father, John M. May, has been outlined in this book. His mother, in the year 1807, then Artemisia Wolfe, aged 6 years, emigrated with her brothers, sisters and widowed mother from the Wyoming Valley, Luzerne Co., Penn., to Fredericktown, Knox Co., Ohio, then containing the territory of this county; she, with the Wolfe family, removed thence and settled in Mansfield in 1812, and was married in 1825; one of the issue of the marriage was Manuel May. Among the educators of his boyhood were Rev. James Rowland, Louis Andrews and William Johnson. He graduated at Kenyon College, studied law with his father, John M. May, and graduated at the Cincinnati Law School; in 1858, he received the honorary degree of A. M. at Kenyon College; on leaving law school, he practiced law with his father, under the firm name of J. M. & M. May; his subsequent law partners were Thomas McBride, John K. Cowen and S. L. Geddes. At present, he is alone in the law business with the aid of his large library and the office help of his students; he was elected and re-elected Prosecuting Attorney of Richland Co., serving in that capacity from 1858 to 1862; he represented the Fourth Ward as a member of the City Council of Mansfield for four years, part of which time he was presiding officer; he was elected and re-elected to the Ohio Senate and represented Richland and Ashland Cos. in that body from 1866 to 1870, and, during his second term, was a member of the Judiciary Committee; as a County School Examiner, Mr. May has for years been connected with the educational interests of the county. He is a bachelor, has always voted the Democratic ticket and is active in politics as well as business.

MITCHELL, DR. GEORGE F. (deceased). He was born in Washington Co., Penn, May 8, 1808; he was the youngest son in a large family of children; his brothers were mostly farmers, who remained in their native county; his tastes and inclinations were in a different course, and, in his early boyhood, as well as in his later life, he was a constant student; his researches were not alone confined to the profession in which he became eminent, but the sciences and literature were not neglected; in 1827, he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Church, of Pittsburgh, Penn., a noted practitioner of that city; with him he remained three years, when, after practicing a short time in an adjoining county, he removed to Ohio in 1832, and practiced medicine in Olivesburg, this county, until 1846, at which time he came to Mansfield; he was a graduate of the Miami Medical College, of Cincinnati, and in after years the honorary degree was again conferred on him by the Medical College of Keokuk, Iowa; for a number of years he was elected a Censor of the Medical College at Cleveland, and was an active member of the State and American Medical Associations, in both of which he held positions of honor, and was selected as a delegate to the latter body by the State society; at home he was interested in all educational and benevolent enterprises, and was one of the originators and Trustees of the Mansfield Female College, while under the control of the Methodist denomination. For forty years, he was actively engaged in the practice of medicine, during which time the rich and the poor without distinction received the benefit of his skill. He was married in May, 1831, in Fayette Co., Penn., to Miss Nancy DeVatte; eight children were given them, two of whom died in infancy, two in early and promising manhood, one daughter just as she was blooming into womanhood, and three children still live. He died in this city March 31, 1869.

MITCHELL, GEORGE, physician and surgeon. Dr. George Mitchell was born July 19, 1837, in Olivesburg, Richland Co., Ohio, and is a son of Dr. G. F. and Nancy DeVatte Mitchell; his father was a native of Pennsylvania, but practiced for forty years in Richland Co., with great success; Dr. George Mitchell received his elementary education in Mansfield, and in due course of time entered the Ohio Wesleyan University at Delaware, Ohio, and pursued the full course of four years' study, graduating from that institution in 1858, with the degree of A. B.; in 1860, he matriculated at the Western Reserve Medical College, where he attended one course of lectures, and during the following winter, entered the Ohio Medical College, at Cincinnati, where he graduated as Doctor of Medicine in 1862; immediately after receiving his degree, he entered the United States service as Assistant Surgeon of the 102d O. V. I.; he continued in active service in different campaigns until the close of the war, being twice promoted for valuable services rendered; in 1865, he retired from the army and located in Mansfield, where he has since resided and engaged in the practice of his profession; he is one of the Censors of the Medical Department of the Wooster University, and is also a Trustee of his alma mater; in the winter of 1876, he was appointed by Gov. Hayes one of the Board of Trustees of the Central Ohio Insane Asylum; he is a member of the American Medical Association, and also of the Ohio State Medical Society, and has at various times contributed to the literature of his profession.

MITCHELL, WILLIAM, surgeon dentist; was born in Weller Township May 1, 1841, and came with his parents to this city in 1846; he received his elementary education in the public schools he was a member of the first class that graduated in the Mansfield High School, he afterward completed his studies at the Delaware University; in 1860, he began the study of dentistry and graduated at the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery in Philadelphia in 1863; he practiced his profession for a number of years in this city and Galion, Ohio; he was employed by the publishers of this work as a biographical writer, and he collected many of the portraits of the early settlers that appear therein. He was married May 15, 1872, in Mansfield, to Miss Sallie Strickler; they are the parents of four children—George Frank, Charles Wesley, M. Eugene and Sallie.

MOWRY, JOHN N., physician and surgeon; was born in Pittsburgh, Penn., March 2, 1824, the second son of Daniel and Jane Wiley Mowry, of Western Pennsylvania, of German-Scotch descent; after receiving his elementary education in Pittsburgh, he commenced the study of medicine with Dr. R. B. Mowry, of that city, and afterward attended lectures and graduated at the Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia, March 9, 1850; in the fall of 1852, he removed to Mansfield, having previously practiced in Allegheny City for two years; he was appointed surgeon of the O. & P. and the P., Ft. W. & C. R. R., which positions he held for twenty-four years; he entered the army as assistant surgeon of the 15th O. V. I., and was at the first battle of the war, Philippi, W. Va.; then he was appointed surgeon of the 32d O. V. I.; then discharged after eight months' service, for disability; he then returned to Mansfield, then Gov. Tod telegraphed him to meet Surg. Gen. Webber, in Cincinnati, and proceed at once to Pittsburg Landing for the relief of the wounded; after his return, he was appointed Surgeon of the 86th O. V. I., and remained until expiration of service; he then resumed the practice of his profession in Mansfield, where he resided until 1875, when he removed to Tiffin, Ohio; not liking it, he returned to this city in 1877, where he has since resided. Dr. Mowry was married, Sept. 7, 1854, to Miss Elisebeth Sherman Parker, who died April 16, 1855; he was again married, Nov. 25, 1856, to Miss Mary L. Armentrout, by whom he raised five children; she died Jan. 10, 1872; he was married in Tiffin, Ohio, Feb. 17, 1874, to Mrs. Ellen J. Graham, of that city; the Doctor has always taken an active interest in the prosperity of the city, and subscribed liberally to all the railroads, and was active in securing the location of the Aultman & Taylor Co.'s shops in Mansfield.

MURPHY, JOHN A., farmer; was born in Madison Township July 7, 1850, and received his elementary education in District No. 3. He was married in the spring of 1877, since which time he has resided in this city.

NEWLON, J., groceryman; was born in this county in 1828. He was married in 1855, to Sarah Shoup, who was born in Wood Co., Ohio, in 1834; they have two children—Harmon D., born in 1856, and Williard B., in 1859. Mr. Newlon is engaged in the grocery business in this city in company with R. C. McFarland.

NEWMAN, ANDREW S. (deceased). He was born March 1, 1811, in Richland Co., in the Newman cabin, on the Rocky Fork, near the present site of Campbell's mill. A short time after his birth, his father, Jacob Newman, removed to Mansfield, and thenceforth Andrew continued to reside there; in the fall of 1812, he and his mother were sent to the block-house, at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, and, while at this place of comparative safety, his brother, Joseph, was born; when the army passed through Mansfield in 1813, under the command of Gen. Crooks, his father was requested, by the commanding officer, to act as guide through the wilderness, and during this expedition he contracted the disease which terminated his life shortly after his return; though thus early deprived of his father, in his surviving parent he was abundantly compensated; his mother was a woman of very extraordinary ability, and while she devoted herself to her children and their welfare, she was universally beloved by her neighbors; the native good sense and sound judgment which so characterized him as to make him a man of mark in the community, he inherited largely from his mother; his early intellectual advantages were meager, but, possessed of good natural abilities, with only such assistance as a winter school in a log cabin afforded, and with a thirst for reading, he became one of the best-informed men in the country; he was a man of strong convictions, and singularly gifted with the power to express them, had little reverence for place and position, but warm charity for the lowly and oppressed; he was possessed of a most excellent judgment of men and affairs, and always regarded a wise counselor. He was married, April 2, 1839, to Eliza A. Armentrout, who bore him two children, Mary S. and Harriet (who died in infancy). His wife died July 3, 1855, leaving an only child, the late Mary N. Cummins, so well and favorably known in this community. In 1841, he became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and ever afterward led a consistent Christian life. After a brief illness of typhoid pneumonia he died, Jan. 31, 1872.

NEWMAN, MICHAEL (deceased). He was born in New Holland, Lancaster Co., Penn., in 1785; he came to Ross Co., Ohio, about 1800, and in 1806, he was married to Elizabeth Copsey, who was a descendant of the family of the Longs, in England; he came to this county, as is shown by the history, in April, 1808, and settled at Beam's (now Campbell's) Mill; he lived a year or two in his brother Jacob's cabin, and then moved across the creek, near the mill, into a cabin that was built by Moses Fountain, who probably aided in building the mill on which Mr. Newman worked in the summer of 1808; he next moved to Section 16 in Madison Township, where he resided until after Hull surrendered Detroit, Aug. 16, 1812; it was about this time that troubles with the Indians arose, and as it was not possible for Mr. Newman always to be at home—the nearest flouring-mill being at Mt. Vernon—he took his family to Fredericktown, in Knox Co., Ohio, where there was quite a settlement, a block-house and a few soldiers stationed; he returned alone to take care of his property, but found all his stock and grain had been taken for the use of U. S. troops, under Gen Beall; his provisions and stock being all gone, he returned to Fredericktown and took his wife and children to her relatives and friends, at Chillicothe; he left them there and returned late in the fall to this county, only to find his house burned; he never was able to find out whether the Indians or soldiers perpetrated this outrage; having no shelter, he went to Chillicothe and remained there during the winter; in the spring of 1813, he returned to Richland Co., built a new house, and that summer, in August, he brought back his family and began again; he had five sons and six daughters; their names, in the order of their births, are Mary, Henry, Susan, Jacob, Jane, Margaret, Harriet, John, Elizabeth, Andrew and Michael C.; Mary married B. Goldsmith; they had five children; Goldsmith is now deceased, and his widow lives in Pierceton, Ind.; Henry married Hannah Maring and both are deceased; they had one son, John M. Newman, who married Eva J. Miller; Susan married William Waugh; they have no children, and they are living in Van Wert Co., Ohio; Jacob married Catharine Stoudt; they had two children, John H. Newman and Lizzie Newman; his wife died soon after the birth of John H., since which time Jacob has been a widower, and lives in Van Wert Co., Ohio; Jane died when a young lady; Margaret married John C. Snow; they have no children; Mrs. Snow is now deceased, and John C. Snow is now living in Illinois; Harriet died in infancy; John is not married, and is now serving his eighth term as County Surveyor of Richland Co.; Elizabeth married Rev. N. F. Bell; Mr. Bell is now deceased, and his widow lives in Huron Co., Ohio; Andrew is now living somewhere in California; Michael maried Carrie Wilson; they have four children, and reside in the city of Mansfield. Mr. Newman died in 1862, and his wife died in 1872.

NEWMAN, JACOB (deceased). The Newman family, of whom Jacob was the oldest, were of Holland descent, and settled at an early day in Lancaster Co., Penn.; the children, Jacob, Polly, John, Christena, Andrew, Michael and a sister whose name is not now known, were born here. This sister married a man by the name of Cline; went South with him, and was lost trace of by the family. Jacob and Michael, when they became young men, went to Franklin Co., Penn., where Jacob married Catherine Freymeyer, by whom he had four children—John, Catherine, Jacob and Henry; Mrs. Newman died when the last named was but 2 or 3 weeks old; the death of the mother, in a measure, broke up the family. This was in October, 1802. Mr. Newman gave all the children but the youngest to their grandparents (their mother's parents) to keep, and taking with him the youngest, whom he kept by the aid of nurses, he went to the vicinity of Greensburg, and lived there on a farm three or four years. He desired a frontier life, and, hearing of the West as it then existed, and the easy terms upon which poor people could obtain land in the military and other districts in Ohio, he determined to emigrate there. He came to Stark Co. and located some land near the town of Canton, then a frontier place. Not long after, he had a good chance to sell the land, and did so, and determined to remove still farther out. His kinsman, Gen. James Hedges, had been surveying in the new country, now comprised in this county, and had informed him of some of the choice selections of land and the probable location of a county seat, as the General knew a new county would necessarily be made in this part of the State. In the summer of 1807, he left his family at Canton, and, moving his few effects, came to the Rocky Fork, where he or Gen. Hedges had undoubtedly selected a location and erected a cabin. He brought, as a housekeeper, his niece, Catherine Brubaker, who did the cooking for him and his hands, who were probably her brothers, the Brubaker boys. As this early settlement is fully given in the pioneer history elsewhere printed in this volume, its history need not be repeated here. Mr. Newman remained here improving his land till the spring of 1808, when he took his niece back to Canton, and his brother Michael and his wife came out and entered the cabin. That fall, he brought Henry, his youngest son, out and left him here, while he went to Pennsylvania, where he was married to Susan Snively, and remained in the East during the following winter. Returning to this county, he remained in the Rocky Fork and improved his claim and run his saw-mill, which he had erected a year before. The removal of the site of the county seat from the vicinity of the mill, and its sale by Mr. Newman to Mr. Jacob Beam, caused Mr. Newman to remove again. He, in company with Gen. Hedges and Joseph Larwell, of Wooster, had laid out the town of Mansfield on its present site, and had begun improvements there. Mr. Newman built his cabin on the east side of South Main street, about two hundred yards south of the creek, and, in the latter part of 1811, brought up his family, and the next summer raised a crop on his land here. In August, the Indian troubles occurred, and Mr. Newman took his wife and son Andrew to Mt. Vernon for safe-keeping, while he and Henry remained to guard the cabin and the town. While Mrs. Newman was in Mt. Vernon, Joseph was born (Sept. 25, 1812). Not long after, a company of soldiers came up to help guard the town—the killing of Jones having excited the people considerably—and Mr. Newman, considering all things rather safe, went to Mt. Vernon and brought his wife and children home. Gen. Crook's army came to Mansfield soon after this, on their way to the Upper Sandusky country, and Mr. Newman, being a practical, sagacious woodsman, was engaged to pilot the army through from Mansfield. Most accounts state that the army left about the middle of December. Mr. Henry Newman says this can hardly be true, as he distinctly remembers the event, and is sure his father did not leave till later in the winter, probably in February. This march, in an open winter, was very trying on the soldiers, and even the hardy frame of Mr. Newman could not endure the strain. He contracted a pulmonary complaint, which, after reaching home about June 1, 1813, continued to grow worse, and on the 20th of that month he died. He left a widow and three children—Henry, Andrew and Joseph, the latter about 7 months old. She soon after took the logs Mr. N. had prepared in his lifetime to build a better cabin, had them moved to the north side of the square, where Capt. A. C. Cummins now lives, and had a cabin built there. The house was improved at times, and a brick addition built afterward by Henry Leyman. It is part of Capt. Cummins' house now. Mrs. Newman resided here until her death, 1834. By this time, the children were grown. Henry and Andrew were married and had homes of their own, and Joseph was a young man beginning life for himself.

NEWMAN, HENRY, Bryan, Williams Co., Ohio. Mr. Newman is the fourth child of Jacob Newman, and, since 1849, has resided in Williams Co.; he was born Oct. 17, 1802, in Franklin Co., Penn.; his mother dying a few weeks after his birth, his father took him to Westmoreland Co., where he went to reside, keeping him under his own care; about 1805, his father emigrated to Stark Co., Ohio, and in 1807 to Richland Co.; Henry remained in Stark Co. until the fall of 1808, when he was brought by his father to the cabin home on the Rocky Fork; he was left here by his father while he went to Pennsylvania, where he was married; Henry lived with his uncle Michael and wife, who came on and kept house while Jacob went East; after his father's return, both families occupied the cabin until about 1810, when Michael and his wife moved into the cabin built by Moses Fountain north across the creek, and near the mill; Jacob Newman remained on the Rocky Fork until the fall of 1811, when he came to Mansfield, and remained here until his death in June, 1813; in the summer of 1812, he raised a crop here, and that winter piloted Gen. Crook's army to the Maumee country. Henry Newman says the accounts concerning his absence from December until June are incorrect; he states that his father was not gone that length of time, and that he did not leave Mansfield until March; he is quite certain concerning this, as he cannot remember his father being absent so long; after his father's death in 1813, Henry assisted his mother in the care of her property, and gathered what meager education the schools of the day afforded; in 1828, he went to New Orleans in search of a man named Thomas G. Shield, who had absconded in debt to the Newman estate about $1,400, but failed to find him. A few years after his return, he was married to Jane Ward, a member of the Ward family, in Weller Township, to which locality he removed, and entered 80 acres of land. Mr. and Mrs. Newman lived on this farm—to which many acres were added—until 1849; they brought it to a high state of cultivation, and gained a competence from its soil; all their children, but one, were born here. Their names are Jacob, born in 1832, (now a resident of La Grange, Ind.); Joseph (who lost his life in the late war, being mortally wounded at Mission Ridge); Andrew (also a soldier, and, who after his return, died from the exposure of a soldier's life); all three of these men went into the army as Lieutenants, and all were promoted; Mr. Newman's daughters are Harriet, Sarah, Francis and Elizabeth. Mr. Newman moved to Williams Co. in 1849, where he purchased a large farm, and erected a saw-mill, which enterprises, with the aid of his son, he conducted successfully, until 1875, when he ceased the active labors of life, and went to Bryan, where he now lives in retirement. Mrs. Newman died June 30, 1876; since her death, he makes his home with his daughter, Frances; his memory is remarkably clear concerning pioneer days and incidents; he can give accurate histories of those early times when Richland Co. was a frontier county, and to his recollection more than to any man now living are the accurate details of pioneer days in this county as given in the historical part of this volume due; that it might be made accurate, he visited the county, and pointed out to the compiler of these pages, localities, and narrated incidents that otherwise would have been forgotten.

NEWMAN, JOSEPH (deceased), was the youngest child of Jacob and Susanna Newman, and was born on the 25th day of September, 1812, at the block-house at Mt. Vernon, Ohio, where his mother had been sent as a place of comparative safety from murderous attacks of hostile Indians. A few months afterward, his father returned from the army in Northwestern Ohio, where he contracted a fever that soon terminated his life. Thus early deprived of a father, his early care and training devolved upon his mother, who was wonderfully well qualified to perform these duties. She was a woman of "great good sense," and her keen intentions for the future welfare of her boy soon told her that nature had fitted him to adorn the highest walks of life. And his brief career shows how even a mother's love "builded better than it knew." He early showed a disposition to acquire an education and was not satisfied with the usual "quarter in winter time," but went to Norwalk, Ohio, then a prominent seat of learning in Northern Ohio, where he laid the foundation that determined his success in after life. The close application to study and habits of thought that he acquired at this academy followed him through life, and though his scholastic attainments were not the most classical, they were enough, combined with his strong, natural intellect, to rank him among the most scholarly men of his day. He attended law school at Cincinnati and then prepared himself for admission to the bar, and then entered into partnership with Judge James Stewart, and rapidly rose in his profession until he was considered one of the best lawyers in Central Ohio. Of commanding presence, far above the ordinary stature, a handsome person and magnetic voice, of rare habits of thought and study, he was singularly well qualified to fill a high position at the bar or in the halls of legislation. About 1841, he married Ann Catlin, of Harrington, Conn., a cultured lady of rare beauty and accomplishments, who survived him. No children were born of this marriage. He was a Major General of the Ohio militia and took great interest in its organization and proficiency. He was an Assistant Clerk of the Ohio Senate, and, about 1845, after having served four years as Prosecuting Attorney, was elected a member of the Ohio Senate. His entrance into the Ohio Senate was at the time when new counties were being formed, and personal feelings in this respect ran high. The new county of Ashland was about to be formed, which would despoil his native county of some of her most desirable territory. He took an active part in the Senate to preserve his county in her fair proportions, which was the great desire of his life. He regretted to see, and did all in his power to prevent, his native county from being clipped almost on all sides, despoiled of her original territory and fair proportions, but the feeling of the hour was for more new counties, and he was compelled to submit to a movement that he was powerless to resist. He took a high position both as a speaker and a careful, painstaking legislator, and filled the position with great credit and was regarded as among the foremost men of his party. In politics, he was a Democrat of the Jefferson and Jackson school and an earnest advocate of their political views. Toward the close of his senatorial career, his bodily health gave way, his mind became clouded under constant study and excitement, and he was removed to an asylum at Utica, N. Y., where his friends hoped that rest and the proper restoratives would bring back his wonted vigor of mind and body. But this was not to be; he died July 17, 1847. Thus closed a career of remarkable activity and usefulness, and one whose high and pure character passed the fiery ordeal of public life blameless and without reproach.

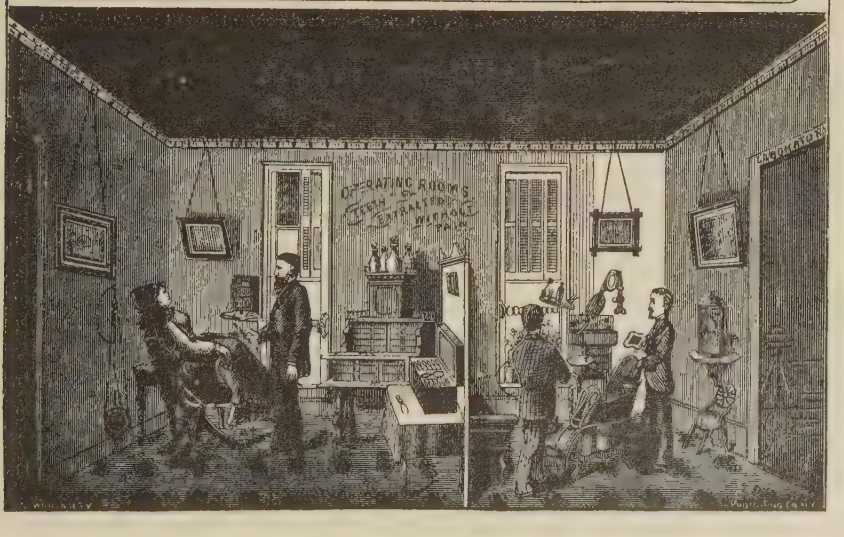
NETSCHER, J. B., manufacturer, Mansfield; was born in Germany, in 1834, and is a self-made man. He began business in this city some thirty years ago, in a very small way, but has increased his facilities fully 200 per cent, for, in fact, as a manufacturer of vinegar, he stands pre-eminent; by means of his pomace leach and vinegar generator, no pomace is lost; as soon as the cider is pressed out, what was considered useless is utilized by Mr. Netscher, and six or seven bushels of apples, after being pressed, will yield one barrel of choice vinegar that is ready for use in a few hours, and of a quality that never fails to please the consumer; by means of this generation, from two to ten barrels of vinegar can be produced daily; this handy contrivance is secured by letters of patent, No. 199,854, dated Jan. 29, 1878; it is without doubt one of the inventions of the age, and will, when it becomes better known, create a revolution in the production of vinegar, while the price of this standard commodity will very materially diminish. Mr. Netscher by no means confines himself strictly to the making of vinegar, but apple-wine and cider as well, all of which is warranted pure, or no pay desired. This enterprising gentleman also deals in bituminous and anthracite coal, and occupies with his coal yard a lot 450x450 feet, located on Short street, near the B. & O. depot; at this yard, parties can always be sure of obtaining the very best bargains in coal that any firm in the city can offer. The warehouse and cellar wherein Mr. Netscher stores his cider and vinegar, is a two-story brick, 30x60 feet; immediately in front of this building is a four-story brick structure, 30x70 feet, also owned by Mr. Netscher, which he rents for business purposes; a telephone extends from the yard on Short street to the warehouse, or upper office, on Main street, thus affording immediate communication to either place. When running full time, Mr. Netscher employs twenty-eight men all the time, and uses the power of a fifteen-horse engine; everything is complete, from the coalyard to the vinegar manufactory. Mr. Netscher is not only doing a public good in the manufacture of vinegar by his invaluable patent process. He is giving truth to the universal decision that America is the birthplace of all great ideas.



NEVIUS, L. W., dentist. Dr. Nevius was born in Knox Co., Ohio, Oct. 5, 1846; his father was an enterprising, well-to-do farmer; L. W. lived with his parents on the farm until the fall of 1861, when he entered the Ohio Wesleyan College of Delaware, where he remained until the fall of 1863, when he enlisted in the 2d O. H. A., and remained in the service until the close of the war; as soon as he returned home he began the study of dental surgery, in the office of Drs. Semple & Stephens, Fredericktown, Ohio; in 1867, he bought the office and practice of his preceptors, and carried on the business for himself; in the spring of 1871, he came to Mansfield and opened an office over Black's dry-goods store, on the corner of Main and West Market streets, a location he still occupies; the Doctor fitted his office in an exceedingly neat and tasteful manner, an improvement on the most of the offices then seen where dental surgery was practiced; his ideas were to disabuse the minds of his patients of the impression that a dental office was only a place of torture; he placed beautiful pictures on the walls, an organ in the room, statuettes in the corners, books and music on the shelves, an aquarium with gold fish swimming in its waters, a variety of house plants in the windows and other tasty and pleasing ornaments about his room; the result of this ornamentation soon had its effect; patients not only came from the city and the country, but from a distance, for a man who exhibits a cultivated taste for fine arts will always be a good workman. The Doctor's patients found him a man of pleasant address, free from every evil habit, and one who could not only appreciate their needs, but one who could relieve them; his practice soon grew so that the rooms needed extending, and new improvements; in 1875, he remodeled his office, added new rooms, giving him a cheerful, homelike reception-room, two operating rooms and a convenient laboratory; these he fitted in the best style, making them the largest, best-lighted and most commodious dental rooms in Central Ohio; his practice now comes from all parts of Northern Ohio, attesting his skill as an operator, and standing as a gentleman. Dr. Nevius' recreation consists in driving a spirited horse, an amusement not only very pleasurable but invigorating; it steadies his nerves and makes his brain clearer, when each morning he can enjoy a vigorous drive for an hour or more, and thus inhale abundance of fresh air, strengthening his system, and preparing him for his day's labor; whatever may be said of the practice, if other professional men would follow Dr. Nevius' example, either by riding or walking, a healthier and more cheerful class of humanity would certainly exist. Dr. Nevius has lately associated with himself Dr. C. M. Roe, son of Joseph Roe, one of the pioneers and principal men of Springfield Township, a recent graduate of the Dental College of the Michigan University; he bids fair to become a dentist of the best ability, and is a gentleman in every respect.

NIMAN, W. B., was born Sept. 29, 1831, in Madison Township. Married Feb. 28, 1867, to Mary H. Slocum, who was born Dec. 2, 1842, in Sandusky Co. Mr. Niman enlisted in the army July 24, 1861, 2d O.

DRS. NEVIUS & ROE'S

DENTAL ROOMS OVER MANSFIELD. O.

V. C.; went as private in Co. M; after returning home, he engaged with 163d, in Co. A; after the death of Capt. Avery, Mr. Niman took the command of Co. A through the service. At the expiration of service, he received an honorable discharge and returned to Mansfield, and was for a time engaged in keeping the American Hotel; the site of the hotel is one of the oldest corners in the city.

OBERLIN, WM. KELKER, farmer; was born in Stark Co., Ohio, Feb. 28, 1839; came to Richland Co. with his parents April 4, 1849, with whom he lived thirty-one years. His father, John Oberlin, located in Washington Township. He was married Oct. 19, 1869, in Washington Township, to Miss Kate Ford. They are the parents of two children—Thomas W., born Feb. 1, 1875; Arthur B., born Sept. 9, 1879. He is now engaged in business in Mansfield.

OTTINGER, SAMUEL F., Deputy Recorder; was born in Stark Co., March 13, 1847; came to Richland Co. in 1860. He was married in 1870, to Catherine Grubb, who was born in Knox Co., April 4, 1845. They have two children—Minnie Bell, born Jan. 5, 1873; Lizzie Ordella, April 18, 1877. Mr. Ottinger has been engaged as Deputy Recorder since September, 1878.

PAINTER, MICHAEL, farmer; was born in Madison Township May 2, 1839. His father, the late Andrew Painter, resided east of Mansfield for a great many years, where he followed farming, and also proprietor of a carding-mill, which still stands; in this business Michael was engaged during its continuance, and afterward at farming. He was married in 1868 to Miss Margaret Sproats, by whom he has raised two sons. Now a resident of Madison Township.

PARKER, JACOB (deceased); was born on the island of Newfoundland Sept. 5, 1791. Although born in a foreign land, he was an American in fact, his father being a citizen of Massachusetts, and resided in Newfoundland only temporarily; early in the present century, he removed with his father to Ohio. In 1815, he graduated at the Ohio University at Athens—he and Thomas Ewing being the first two who received the degree of Bachelor of Arts from an Ohio college. After his graduation, Mr. Parker, in company with Thomas Ewing and John M. May, entered the law office of Philemon Beecher, in Lancaster, where he studied until admitted to the bar. In 1819, he removed to Mansfield and entered upon the practice of his profession; in 1829, he went into the mercantile business with Robert McCombs, of this city, in which he continued until 1837; in the winter of 1840–41, he received the appointment of President Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of this county; he held this office seven years, and discharged its duties with great ability and to the entire satisfaction of the bar and the people. Upon leaving the bench, he retired from active life; he, however, always took an active interest in the welfare and prosperity of the city; he was a persevering worker, and a man of sound judgment. His death occurred in December, 1857.

PARSONS, LE ROY, real-estate and insurance agent; he was born in Bennington, Vt., in May, 1843; when a youth, he removed with his parents to Eastern Pennsylvania, where he received in part his elementary education; he came to Mansfield in 1867, and was engaged for a number of years in the sale of farming implements; in 1872, he opened an insurance and real-estate office in this city, in which business he has since been exclusively engaged. The assets of the companies he represents, which are classed among the very best, amount to over $1,000,000. He was married in Mansfield, Sept. 14, 1876, to Miss Mary Shumway, of this city; one child, a son, was born in March, 1878. Mr. Parson's ancestry dates back among the early settlers of New England. They were vigilant participants in the Revolutionary war. During his residence in this city, he has taken an active part in the promotion of its interests, and been elected to the office of Clerk of the City Council for four consecutive terms; a period longer than any of his predecessors.

PATTERSON, A. C., proprietor of the carriage manufactory; he was born in Lexington, Ohio. Married, in 1862, to Lizzie A. Cope, daughter of Franklin E. Cope; they had the following children: Franklin E., born in July, 1864, died in 1871; Florence J., born in October, 1868, died in August, 1871, and Gracie A., still living with her parents. Mr. Patterson established the buggy factory in 1864; has been connected with this business ever since, and has met with marked success; his work is among the best in the county.

PATTERSON, A. V., DR., physician; he was born in Springfield, Jefferson Co., April 9, 1831; came to Mansfield in 1837; attended the Mansfield Academy, also Oberlin College, after which he attended the University of Cleveland; graduated at the Cleveland Medical College Feb. 25, 1857; commenced the practice of medicine at Galion, where he remained until he was commissioned Surgeon of the 102d O. V. I.; continued till the close of the war, after which he located in Mansfield; engaged in the practice of medicine, and still continues. He was married, March 3, 1857, to Miss L. L. Gladden, daughter of Capt. Solomon Gladden, of Monroe Township.

PLATT, WILLIAM (deceased). Among the old residents of Madison Township who have passed away, and who will be remembered by many of the living, was William Platt, who resided on a farm near Mansfield, known by his name, but now within the city limits, and partially covered with dwellings. He was born in the year 1803, and came to this county in 1821. The site of the old homestead, and a part of the lands, which have never passed out of the family name, can be seen from many parts of the city. He died Feb. 17, 1850, in the 46th year of his age, well known by all the citizens of that time, and universally respected and esteemed. Quiet and amiable in his manners, he made no enemies. Highly moral in his conduct, and upright in all his dealings, he always sustained the most unsullied character; living at a time when it was generally customary among farmers to allow the use of liquor among their employes, particularly during the harvest, he was among the few who peremptorily forbid it. Mr. Platt was married, May 1, 1835, to Miss Charlotte Bell, by whom he had seven children—one, a son, alone survives him, a resident of the city, near the old homestead.

POTTER, E. J., photographer; he was born in Wayne Co. Sept. 19, 1844. He was married to Mary Backenstoe, who was born in Mansfield; they have two children—William, born March 10, 1867; James, Oct. 6, 1868. Mr. Potter enlisted in the 3d O. V. C., Co. E, in September, 1861; was in the service about three years and four months, and was in different engagements—among them the battle of Stone River. This regiment was noted for its service in this battle. He was taken prisoner at Benton, Tenn.; he was prisoner eleven months—first at Atlanta, second at Libby Prison, in Richmond, third at Belle Island, and from there to Andersonville; was kept there seven months; from there to Florence, S. C.; was then exchanged at Charleston, and came from there to Annapolis, Md.; from there to Columbus, Ohio, and received an honorable discharge. Came to Mansfield, where he has since been engaged in the photographic business, having one of the best galleries in the city. He has established a very extensive business, and an excellent reputation, as an artist. He stands at the head of his profession in Northern Ohio, and is prepared to do all kinds of first-class work in his line.

PRITCHARD, W. H., born in Worthington Township, Richland Co., Ohio, July, 1850. After taking an academical course at Greentown Academy, Perrysville, Ohio, he went to college at Denison University, and thence to the University of Wooster, where he graduated in June, 1874. The expenses of his education were paid almost exclusively by the results of his own labor, working summers and teaching winters. In July, 1874, he was married to Miss Sophie Leiter, of Lucas, Ohio, and for four years thereafter he was employed as a teacher—one year as assistant in Greentown Academy and three years as Superintendent of Schools in Shelby, Ohio. He was admitted to the bar in December, 1878, by the Supreme Court at Columbus, Ohio, and immediately thereafter formed a copartnership with Norman M. Wolf, under the firm name of Pritchard & Wolf, and since that time has been enjoying a good and successful law practice. In the spring of 1879, being an enthusiastic Republican, he was active in organizing and was elected chairman of the Young Men's Republican Club of Mansfield. His family consists of his wife and two boys—J. Sample, aged 5 years, and Natscher W., aged 2½ years.

PROCTOR, FRANCIS M., REV., minister, U. P. Church; was born in Troy Township in 1829; he is the second son of James and Margaret (Mitchell) Proctor, who were both old residents of that township; James Proctor came to Ohio with his parents from Alleghany Co. in 1816, and settled in Troy Township where he lived until four years previous to his death; he died in Mansfield Oct. 9, 1871, aged 73 years; Margaret (Mitchell) Proctor died March 31, 1837. Francis M. received his elementary education in this county, and graduated at Franklin College, Ohio, in 1856; he studied theology at the Alleghany Seminary, and was licensed by the Mansfield Presbytery of the U. P. Church to preach in 1857; in the year 1858, a call was made out for him by the Cuylerville congregation under the care of the Caledonian Presbytery of the State of New York, which call he accepted, and was ordained Nov. 9, 1858, and installed Pastor of that congregation, where he remained until February, 1866, when on account of poor health he was compelled to resign his charge, and returned to Richland Co., Ohio, where he has since resided, a resident of Mansfield, and has not regained his health sufficiently to engage in the active work. On June 18, 1857, he was married to Miss Lovenia Bowers, of Morrow Co., with whom he has raised six children, two sons and four daughters.

PURDY, JAMES, retired capitalist; was born July 24, 1793, in Hopewell, York Co., Penn.; his father owned a farm on which he had a flouring-mill, located forty miles north of Baltimore; the non-intercourse laws of 1808-09 and embargo on shipping in our ports embarrassed his business, reduced his income and the value of his property; James had been given more than an ordinary common-school education, with the intention of giving him a college course; he was the oldest son, and a change of the pecuniary circumstances required his personal services; he was put to work on the farm, in the mill, and at whatever he would be most useful.

In 1811, his father sold out, and purchased a farm near Canandaigua, N. Y., to which place he removed with his family; James continued to labor with him until he became of age, and his father's farm was well improved; he then determined to acquire a liberal education by his own exertions; to that end he devoted two years in an academy of high repute in the acquirement of a classical education; a gentleman of the bar in Canandaigua tendered him a position in his office on very liberal terms, which he accepted, and entered as a law student, in which position he continued three years, the time required in that State for admission to the bar; during all this time, he sustained himself by teaching, either common schools or as assistant teacher in the Canandaigua Academy, with some perquisites of the office; Sept. 5, 1822, he left for Pensacola; he stopped at Louisville, Ky., on account of the sickness below; while thus waiting, he became acquainted with the effect on society produced by slavery, and determined to settle in a free State; he crossed the river into Indiana and went to Corydon, where the Supreme Court of the State and the United States District Court were in session, and was admitted to practice in both; on trial, the location did not suit him, he returned eastward, and May 29, 1823, settled in Mansfield, then a rough, unsightly hamlet, and then the farthest west town in that latitude; the county was then thirty miles square, sparsely settled, with intelligent, industrious and energetic pioneers,

Some years before this time, J. C. Gilkison had brought a printing establishment to this place, and made an unsuccessful effort to establish a paper; he sold to a Mr. Croswaite, who had also issued a prospectus, but failed to get sufficient support, and offered the property for sale; Mr. Purdy purchased it, and gave his note on time therefor, employed J. C. Gilkison as printer, and issued the Mansfield Gazette; he now discovered that the type was worn out and insufficient to print a respectable paper; he went to Cincinnati on horseback, purchased type on credit, and brought it to Mansfield in saddle-bags, the only mode of transportation then available.

In connection with his professional business, he continued to edit the paper until 1831, when he sold it to T. W. Bartley, then a young lawyer, since Judge of the Supreme Court of the State of Ohio; a new circuit of the Court of Common Pleas was organized in the winter of 1823–24, composed of the counties of Richland, Huron, Sandusky, Seneca, Crawford and Marion; in these, the Courts of Common Pleas held three terms annually, and the Supreme Court one; this circuit he traveled four times a year on horseback, accompanied with other members of the bar, also the Supreme Court in Columbus, and the courts in other counties occasionally; as the country improved and increased in population, he reduced the territorial extent of his practice; by careful and strict attention to business, and prompt remittances, he was intrusted with a full share of the most important business of the country, from which his income was principally derived.

Canals were located and being constructed in other parts of the State, for which water could not be obtained in this and other counties on the dividing ridge. A canal from the mouth of Little Beaver, on the Ohio River, to the mouth of Big Sandy, on the Ohio Canal, was located and in process of construction by the State. Railroads were then considered quite inferior to canals. He had made an eastern tour and saw the railroads there being constructed and doing business, and thought a railroad from the western terminus of Sandy and Beaver Canal, westward, through Richland and other counties to the west line of the State, would create a valuable thoroughfare, connecting this part of the State with Pittsburgh, and thence eastward. His professional calling had introduced him to the prominent men of that city, and made him acquainted with the most prominent men on the line of the contemplated improvement.

In the summer of 1834, he wrote a number of these gentlemen, calling a meeting on a certain day at his office, to initiate the construction of this improvement. A meeting was held, composed of representatives from Wayne Co., westward to the State line, at which measures were taken to obtain an act of the Legislature, and Dr. A. G. Miller, S. R. Curtis (afterward General), and he were appointed a committee to forward the work. In the winter of 1834-35, he went to Columbus and procured the necessary legislation, and July 4, 1835, a meeting of the Commissioners therein designated was held at the court house, in Mansfield, and measures adopted to carry into effect the provisions of the charter. Dr. A. G. Miller and S. G. Curtis and he were again appointed a committee to take charge of the work. He called on the Board of Public Works for an engineer and corps to survey and locate the road. They, after much solicitation, in the spring of 1836, appointed S. R. Curtis, who organized his corps in Mansfield, and made the survey and location that summer; made his report to the Board of Public Works, and the expense was paid by the State. Of this, the Pittsburghers were notified by Mr. Purdy, without whose aid the work could not be done. Railroads had not yet become popular; they had the Pennsylvania canal and Ohio River, and declined co-operation. Thus terminated our labor of two years. But it was not lost. Our attention was directed to the construction of a railroad to Sandusky, which, as hereinafter stated, was completed in June, 1846. Mansfield soon became an important point, and in the fall of 1848, gentlemen of Pittsburgh wrote Mr. Purdy, requesting him to call a meeting at Massillon, which he did. The meeting was attended by Ohioans and Pennsylvanians. A joint charter from the two States was determined on. A committee was appointed to visit Harrisburg, and also one to visit Columbus to obtain the charter. Mr. Purdy and B. Jones, of Wooster, were the committee for Ohio. Mr. Purdy attended, and a joint charter was procured for what afterward became the P., Ft. W. & C. R. R. This company had the benefit of our two years' work and the survey we had made, at the expense of the State. Thus, "large oaks from little acorns grow."

Richland had never become a well cultivated county; immense quantities of produce were by the farmers transported to the Lake on wagons. Our first market was Sandusky. A canal was made from Huron to Milan; this drew the business from Sandusky to Milan. Sandusky then had a railroad built to Monroeville, operated by horse-power. Much of the Richland trade was withdrawn from Milan to Monroeville and thence to Sandusky. Efforts had been making for some time to get a railroad from Sandusky to Mansfield, and charters therefor had been granted. A charter had been obtained for a railroad from Monroeville to Plymouth. In December, 1839, Judge Patterson and he were appointed to go to Columbus and obtain or have amended a charter for a road from Plymouth to Mansfield, which was accomplished. He, with others, spent the winter among the farmers throughout the county in obtaining stock. In the spring of 1840, the company was organized and he was appointed President. Under his superintendence, an engineer was appointed and the road located, and in August, 1840, the first ground was broken in Mansfield, in the presence of a large and deeply interested assembly, by John Stewart, the first Surveyor and the first Auditor of the county, and Gen. Robert Bentley, also an early pioneer and commander of the militia of the county, both farmers. On that day the foundation of Mansfield's prosperity was laid. It then became a railroad terminus. Other railroads were constructed through this point, in all of which he took an active part, and for their construction contributed liberally. These public improvements have made Mansfield a railroad center, a commercial and manufacturing city. For this we are deeply indebted to the stalwart pioneers of the county, who subscribed liberally to the stock. Bonds were not then issued, the money had to be raised in the country. The three companies were consolidated; the work progressed slowly, and the cars did not reach Mansfield until June, 1846. It now forms part of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. To the contributors the improvements were not a direct financial success, but in the improvements of the country they have their compensation. In 1855, he invested in real estate in Iowa, one tract lay on the west bank of the Mississippi River. He, with others, added to this and laid out the city of Clinton, which, in 1870, contained 8,000 inhabitants, a National Bank, a daily paper and a street car company. The Chicago, Iowa & Nebraska Railroad Company was then (1855) organized, of which he became a stockholder, and in which he was offered and accepted a prominent position in locating and constructing the road. It was completed and the enterprise was a pecuniary success. It crossed the river at Clinton on a bridge, and has become a part of the route from Chicago to San Francisco. About the same time, he, with two others, purchased a block in Chicago on which they erected seven good buildings which he still owns. As facilities in Mansfield multiplied, business increased, requiring greater money accommodations. In 1845, he took an active part in obtaining the charter for the State Bank of Ohio, of which he became a member of the Board of Control and assisted in the management of its multifarious departments, consisting of forty branches. It was wound up at the termination of its charter, no bill holder ever losing a dollar. He, with the assistance of William Granger, G. Armintrout, David Anderson and John Shank, organized a branch—the Farmers' Bank of Mansfield, of which he was appointed President and Attorney, which position he occupied until the termination of the charter. This bank was the only institution of the kind in Mansfield for many years. It afforded means liberally to business men, and thereby promoted the prosperity of the city. At the expiration of this charter in 1865, the stockholders organized and transferred their stock to the Farmers' National Bank of Mansfield, of which he was appointed President and Attorney, which position he still occupies. This is now the only bank in the city that issues notes for circulation. It affords to our manufacturers and others pecuniary means for carrying on their business and a satisfactory profit to the stockholders. He was connected with other branches and some banking houses in the State. In 1850, he, J. M. Rhodes and S. B. Sturges, established a banking house in Sacramento City, Cal., where he had previously sent some miners, and furnished their outfit. This banking institution built the first fire-proof banking house in that city.

Although his business was extended, he continued to promote the interests of the city by liberally participating in all public improvements, by erecting business houses on Main street, and a comfortable family residence in the suburbs, where he continues to reside. He is a Presbyterian; not withholding aid from other denominations, his contributions were principally made to that church and its institutions. To the Wooster University he gave $5,000, the interest of which to be used in putting young men through the two last years of the course, who by their own exertions had reached the junior class.

In politics, he is a Whig and a Republican, in all those terms imply, including the N. To the support of these principles he contributed liberally, but never held a civil office. He has been a soldier and a participant in three wars. In that of 1812–15, he served in the army on the Niagara frontier. By special authority from the Governor, he assisted in enlisting Ohio's quota for the Mexican Army. On the first call for soldiers to suppress the rebellion, he received a telegram from Gov. Denison to enlist soldiers. Within forty-eight hours he raised and put on the cars for Columbus 100 soldiers; physical debility prevented him from accompanying them. As Chairman of the County Committee, he took an active part in raising men, and supplies to those in the field. He was appointed Commissioner for drafting men for the army, which duty he faithfully performed. His son, James, with his consent, enlisted at the age of 16 as a private, continued in the service to the close of the war, being promoted in the mean time to 1st Lieutenant. Although assiduously devoting his time to his profession, he was still attached to the business of his early life. After providing a home, an office and a library, he purchased a farm, then a mill site and built a mill, which he sold in 1835. In 1836, he purchased lands on the south shore of the Maumee River, opposite the Grand Rapids and an island in the river, thereby becoming the riparian proprietor of three-fourths of the Maumee and of the water-power. Here he erected a flouring-mill, saw-mill and other machinery, which he continues to keep in operation. On part of the land a prosperous town has grown up; on the remainder, farms have been cleared up, and are being cultivated and improved under his own supervision. At the age of 87, although badly crippled by rheumatism, he otherwise enjoys perfectly good health.

RACE, W. H., physician; came to Mansfield in 1859, and has been engaged in the practice of medicine since, except his service in the army, where he was surgeon in the 3d O. V. I. Returning, he again resumed his profession; he has served as Coroner for Richland Co. for two terms. Dr. Race is an alumnus of the Ohio Medical College, from which institution he graduated.

RECORD, C. M., boot and shoe dealer; he came to Mansfield in July, 1878, from Massachusetts; engaged in the manufacturing of boots and shoes, introducing all the late machinery, which added to his success; being prepared to meet all competition in price and quality, he is now selling his goods in many places in Ohio, and has a very extensive home custom trade. It is now an established fact, that Mansfield has a first-class shoemaker, prepared to make all classes of work, from the very finest hand-sewed boot to the stogy or brogan, as cheap as can be procured in any of the Eastern cities.

REED, N. S., General Agent Richland Mutual Insurance Company; he was born in Frederick Co., Md., Sept. 7, 1823; the third child of James and Susan Reed, old residents of that place; he came to Ohio with his parents, who settled in Knox Co. in 1829, where he received his elementary education; at the age of 16 years, he commenced the trade of harness-making in Frederick, which he completed in four years afterward; for a year afterward, he was employed in a dry-goods store as clerk, then he purchased a stock of goods and opened a store in Waterford, which he continued for eighteen months, when the death of his father compelled a change and he returned to Frederick, where he resumed his trade, at which he worked until removing to Mansfield in April, 1856, where he plied his vocation until the spring of 1863; for three years following, he engaged in real-estate business in this city, when he received the appointment of General Agent of the Richland Mutual Fire Insurance Company, which position he now holds. Mr. Reed was married in Richland Co., March 11, 1852, to Miss Cordelia Geddes; they have four children—Burr W., Lizzie A., Hattie R. and Mary; Burr W. died at the age of 9 years, and Mary at the age of 6 months. Mr. Reed was made a Mason at Frederickton, Ohio, in 1845, in which order he has held a number of subordinate offices and is now a member of Venus Lodge, Mansfield. During his residence in this city, he has been identified in every movement tending toward the improvement of the city and its inhabitants.

REED, INK & LEWIS, jobbers of notions, hosiery and fancy goods. H. L. Reed came to Mansfield in 1865, and engaged in book store, which he continued for some years. He established the present business in January, 1875. Mr. Reed was married to Miss Wasson, daughter of William Wasson, of Ashland, Ohio, in 1867. Residence, West Third street.

REMY, PETER, merchant and manufacturer; he was born Sept. 20, 1830, in Mogendorf, dukedom of Nassau, Germany; he emigrated with his parents to the United States early in the spring of 1844, who located in Mansfield June 29, 1844; he was then 14 years of age; the year following, he was employed by Mr. Keith, who was one of the early settlers, and kept a tavern stand one and a half miles north of the city; he remained with him two months, and recalls with gratitude to this day the treatment he then received. His father soon after apprenticed him until he became of age to Lieut. Gov. Thomas H. Ford, desiring that he should thoroughly prepare himself and complete the study of the law; after remaining about ten days, he became dissatisfied, and sought other employment; an uncle, who was then living three miles west of town, kindly found him employment in the dry-goods store of Endly & Wigle, with whom he acted as a salesman for three years; he was afterward employed in the same business in the firm of Frost & McBride for one year; this firm having failed, he was in like capacity engaged in the store of Sturges, Grimes & Co., for a period of four years. In December, 1852, he went to California, where he was again hired by Frost, who had preceded him and who was engaged in the same line of business; he remained with him one and a half years; for a short time afterward, he did business in Weaverville, then in a placer-mine; soon after, he opened what was then termed a general store. After residing in California four years, he returned to Mansfield, where he has since resided; in the spring of 1857, he opened a dry-goods store with his cousin, under the firm name of P. & A. W. Remy; this partnership continued until the spring of 1864, when he was next employed in the store of E. & T. Wirt for six months, then doing business on the old Weldon corner; Nov. 20, 1865, he, in company with James A. Hedges and Abraham C. Cummings, bought out the wholesale grocery, confectionery and liquor house of E. Clapp & Co.; the firm name was then Remy, Hedges & Co., which was soon after changed to Remy, Hedges & Walters; in this business, he was engaged fourteen years. He is now extensively engaged in manufacturing the celebrated patent thill coupling, also fork, hoe and other handles, in Lodi, Ohio; the firm name is Remy, Warren & Co. During his residence of thirty-four years in this city, Mr. Remy has held many positions of trust and honor; one term as City Treasurer, and again re-elected; he has served as Treasurer of Madison Township for two terms, and as one of the Infirmary Directors, which position he was compelled to resign, his business demanding his full time; he was a member of the Board of Equalization for six years, and served on the Board of Public Improvements, and for two terms a member of the Richland Mutual Fire Insurance Company; in all these positions, Mr. Remy served with credit to himself and for the interests of the people.

REMY, A. W., & SON. The above-mentioned firm are well-known grocers and coffee-roasters; they occupy Nos. 4 and 5 South Park street, a double store, 30x70 feet, connected by an arch, with a warehouse in the rear; they have a commodious store, and do a large business, and are first-class grocers; they are also coffee-roasters, and keep the largest variety of fine coffee, both green and roasted, to be found in Mansfield; salt, lard, plaster, water-lime, etc., always on hand and convenient to load; they make a specialty of clothes-wringers, and are sole agents for the Excelsior and Welcome wringers, with bench, which have been introduced over the county and given universal satisfaction; they have sold hundreds of these machines, and would refer any person wishing to buy a wringer to parties using them; they are guaranteed to be the best in the world.

REMY, E. & F. M., grocers; they were born in Mansfield, and are engaged in the grocery business, 108 Main street; they have the finest assortment of staple and fancy groceries in the city, and offer them at bottom prices; their stock consists of sugars, teas, coffees, sirups, spices, fruits, berries, and vegetables in in their season, flour and feed; they also make a specialty of fine cigars and tobacco; goods are delivered free to all parts of the city.

RICHARDSON, JAMES R., manufacturer mineral and soda water. He was born in Allegheny City, Penn., July 1, 1829; in 1830, his parents moved to Washington Co., Penn., where his mother died two years later, leaving a family of six children, four boys and two girls, the youngest 7 months and the oldest 15 years old. The subject of this sketch obtained a fair common-school education by attending school during the winter months; not relishing the avocation of a farmer, he determined to try the city, and, in 1846, the next year after the great fire there, he went to Pittsburgh, where an elder sister resided. She had married a gentleman engaged in the manufacture of hats and caps, and by whom Mr. Richardson was employed as clerk; while here he learned the business, and at the end of three years, he was enabled to purchase his brother-in-law's store, through the aid of a friend and the easy terms of payment given him by his brother-in-law, who wished to retire from the business. After carrying on the business for several years, having once been partially burned out, and losing considerable money, he sold out and invested his means in a steamboat, which he entered in the capacity of receiving and discharging —mud-clerk; he engaged in the river trade for some time, holding all the positions on the boat from clerk to captain. In 1867, he sold out, and engaged in the drug business in New Castle, Lawrence Co., Penn. In 1870, he sold out here, and in March, 1871, came to Mansfield, and engaged in the manufacture of mineral and soda water, The confinement in the drug trade had impaired his health, and his physician recommended him to try out-door employment, or one that would give him considerable physical exercise; the business he now follows gives him just that, and is, therefore, fitted for his condition; in 1875, after the death of Isaac Gass, then Mayor of the city, he was urged to run for the unexpired term; he did so and was elected by seventy-five majority; two years later, he was re-elected by seventy-four majority; he served out the term, faithfully discharging all the duties of the office. Mr. Richardson was married in 1852, to Miss Mary E. Surles, of Steubenville, Ohio; they are the parents of three children, one boy and two girls, one of whom (a daughter) is dead; both the other children are married and have families. Mr. Richardson is now and has been a prominent member of the Masonic Order, I. O. O. F., K. P. and Knights of Honor.

RHODES, WILLIAM H. This well-known citizen, at present a merchant, on the corner of East Diamond and Fourth streets, is of English descent, dating back to the Beaumonts and Hoxeys; William H. Rhodes was born in Portage Co. Dec. 8, 1819, and removed to Mansfield in the year 1846; soon after his removal to this county, he was engaged in buying horses for the Eastern market, until the year 1849, and then for a time was proprietor of the old Exchange, on Main street, now the European Hotel, which he soon after relinquished to take charge of the Teegarden House, now the St. James; soon after, he was actively engaged in the grocery business, which he continued until the year 1858, at which time he sailed from New York, by way of the Isthmus, for California, where he remained eight years, principally engaged in stock farming. In June, 1866, he returned to his native State, locating in Mansfield, where he has since been engaged in active business. Mr. Rhodes was married in the year 1848, to Miss Alzoa M. Winslow, by whom he has had nine children, six living—Abbie W., Esther S., George T., Helen S., Carrie E. and Mary A.; Mrs. Rhodes died Feb. 16, 1869; a kind mother and wife, she will long be remembered for her many good qualities of head and heart. Mr. Rhodes comes from a long-lived family, his father and mother both living until about their 80th year, and died in California some years since. William H. Rhodes, the second son in a family of six children, during his residence in this city, has always been considered an upright and good citizen, and respected by the entire community. Two brothers of Mr. Rhodes were for a time in succession cashiers of the old Farmers' Bank, of this city, and will be remembered by the old citizens as good business men.

RICHARD, J. FRAISE, Professor, President and founder of the Mansfield Normal College. He was born one mile west of Ashland, Ohio, Jan. 18, 1844; at the age of 7, his parents moved from that locality to the southern line of Wood Co., and began to clear up a farm; in this work he assisted, remaining on the farm until his 16th year, using such opportunities of education as the district school afforded; with these aids and self-study under most trying circumstances, he was qualified to teach a country school during the winter of 1860, being then but 16 years of age; with the means thus secured, he attended the Seneca County Academy at Republic one term in the fall of 1861, under the charge of Prof. Aaron Schuyler, now of Baldwin University; returning to his home, he taught during the dark days of 1861–62, and was ready to return to the Academy in September, 1862; when President Lincoln called for 600,000 volunteers, he enlisted in Co. B, 111th O. V. I., and went to the army; he was soon detailed as a clerk, in which capacity he spent over three years in the Government service; for two years he was Chief Clerk of the armies and departments, under the control of Maj. Gens. J. D. Cox, John M. Schofield, George S. Stoneman and John M. Palmer; twice during his army service he was offered a captain's commission, but they were both refused. At the close of the war, he was offered a position in the War Department at Washington, but it was also refused; returning from the army in 1865, he attended the University at Indianapolis for one year, taking double work; thence he went to the National Normal School at Lebanon, Ohio, where he completed the business, scientific and classical courses, graduating in August, 1869; during 1869–70, he taught in the Lebanon School; in the fall of 1870, he organized at Republic, Ohio, the Northwestern Normal School, and thus became the pioneer of normal work in Northwestern Ohio. From the hundreds and thousands of pupils received in that school during the five years it was under his management, have been taken the Principal and subordinate teachers of the Valparaiso (Ind.) Normal, to-day the largest normal school in America; some of the teachers in the Ada Normal; lawyers and physicians without number, and innumerable teachers and Superintendents; he taught a portion of a year at Ada, and was Superintendent of the Alliance (Ohio) Public Schools during 1877–78; from Alliance he came to Mansfield. From this sketch it will be seen that, as pupil and teacher, he has been connected with every grade of school in this country, and has acquired a diversified experience. His articles on educational subjects have been published in the Ohio Educational Monthly, the Boston Journal of Education, the Chicago Educational Weekly, the Eclectic Teacher and Southern School Journal, the Common School Teacher, Normal Teacher and Parents' and Teachers' Monthly. He is thoroughly known in the educational world, and is now permanently settled in the work of his life, the building-up of the Mansfield Normal College.

RIEMAN, ANDREW, brewer. He was born in Ida, Precinct of Rhodenburg, Chur, Hessen, Germany, July 23, 1826, and was married to Dorethea Kiston, on the 17th day of September, 1848. Mr. Rieman has been a resident of Mansfield since 1857, and during that time has held a number of public positions of honor and trust; he has repeatedly held the position of Councilman from the Third Ward in the City Council, and was elected President of the same several terms, where he served with credit to himself and the city's interest. To Andrew and Dorethea Rieman have been born six children, four of whom are living and two dead—Rosina, born Oct 11, 1849; John, Jan. 21, 1852; Elisabeth, Aug. 11, 1854; Lizzie, Feb. 11, 1856; Andrew, Jr., July 23, 1858; Dorethea, Oct. 16, 1864; Elisabeth Rieman died April 12, 1855, and Andrew, Jr., Dec. 18, 1861. Mr. Rieman is now a resident of Mansfield, where he is engaged in an extensive brewing business.

RITCHIE, JAMES, Sheriff of Richland Co. He was born in the County Monahan, Ireland, Oct. 2, 1843; he came to this county with his parents, who emigrated in 1846; the family afterward returned to Ireland in 1852, and in the latter part of the same year again came to America, where they have since resided; he began carpenter work in 1862, in this city, which trade he acquired and followed until 1875, when he was appointed Deputy Sheriff under John J. Dickson; he was elected Sheriff of Richland Co. in October, 1877, and re-elected in 1879, which position he now holds. He is the youngest man who has ever been elected to that office in this county. He was married in Mansfield to Kate Bell; they are the parents of six children —Bertie B., born Sept. 19, 1870; Franklin D., born Dec. 6, 1872; William W., born April 4, 1873; Nettie May, born July 29, 1876; James J., born Oct. 13, 1879; Kate, April 19, 1880.

RITTER, WILLIAM, leather merchant. Was born in Canton, Ohio; Jan. 10, 1834, where his parents resided previous to their removal to Mansfield in 1836. Since reaching manhood, he has held a number of offices of honor and trust, both in the city and county, to the satisfaction of the people; in 1860, he was elected City Clerk, which position he resigned at the breaking-out of the civil war, and entered the army in the three-months service, where he remained during his full term of enlistment; in the fall of 1861, he was elected Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, in which office he served two terms of three years each; in 1877, he was elected a Trustee of the Board of Water Works, which office he now holds and is President of the same. In June 24, 1864, he was married to Miss Sarah A. Keech, daughter of C. C. Keech, of this city, now residents of South Main street, Mansfield.

RITTER, JOSEPH (deceased). In 1874, Oct. 20, Mansfield lost one of its old and respected citizens, in the person of Joseph Ritter, who had lived here nearly fifty years, honored and respected, always a gentleman, plain and frank in his intercourse with his fellow-men; he was proverbial for his kindness and rigid honesty; he was born in Brakerl, Westphalia, Germany, in the year 1796, and emigrated to this country in 1818, landing in Baltimore, where he worked at his trade (tanner) until 1822, when he removed to Canton, Ohio, and in 1836, to Mansfield, having previously visited Ohio in 1819; after his retirement from business, a few years previous to his death, and on his fiftieth anniversary in this county, he visited the land of his birth and the scenes of his childhood, interesting incidents of which he was accustomed to relate with minuteness. Joseph Ritter was married in Baltimore, April 2, 1828, to Miss Magaline Eberly, who survives him, and by whom he had three children—John, William and Louisa, who now reside in this city.

RITTER, JOHN, tanner and leather dealer. The senior of the present firm of Ritter & Sons, was born in Canton, Ohio, Jan. 9, 1829; when 7 years of age, he came with his parents to this city, where he has since resided; while quite young, he commenced work in his father's tannery, which trade he afterward acquired, and in which he continued until the organization of the leather firm. He was married in Mansfield, May 8, 1857, to Miss Mary Jane Irwin, who died April 15, 1879, leaving four children.

ROBERTS, MARK L., mechanic and inventor. The subject of this sketch was born in East Whiteland Township, Chester Co., Penn., July 15, 1822, a descendant both on his father's and mother's side of old and well-known families, the one of Welsh and the other of French pedigree; his younger days were spent on a farm in his native county, where he first began to show that inventive genius that has produced so many useful labor-saving machines during his life. While in his 17th year, he invented a thrashing machine, which he thinks was the second manufactured; his second invention, a knitting machine and the Roberts Manufacturing Knitting Machine, was the work of sixteen years' hard labor before its accomplishment; an adjustable cork horse-shoe, which is believed to be a great improvement over the old method, he invented in 1873; a rake and hay elevator in 1872; a seamless knit bag in 1869. Mr. Roberts' family consists of a wife and six children; of the sons, Isaac Calvin is a painter; Allen Lewis, an engineer; Wayne K., a needle manufacturer. Mr. Roberts is now living on North Mulberry street, Mansfield, in a beautiful home, diligently at work in other improvements.

ROWLAND, REV. JAMES, was born near Pittsburgh, Penn., Sept. 1, 1792, where he was reared, and graduted at Jefferson College in 1813; he was of Scotch-Irish descent, his family having come from the North of Ireland; after leaving college, he went to Washington City, where he taught a preparatory school; he left Washington after a residence of four years, and opened a classical school at Darlington, Penn., where he remained as teacher and preacher of the Presbyterian faith until the spring of 1820, when he removed to Mansfield, where he was settled over the first church organization in Richland Co., preaching here part of the time and part six miles west on the Leesville road. He was married twice, first to Maria S. Christmas, of Wooster, Ohio, May 2, 1820, who died in November, 1839; second, to Mary A. Moody, of Shippensburg, Penn., May 12, 1841; Mr. Rowland was a ripe scholar, a man of fine personal appearance, and possessed more than ordinary talent; after a life of usefulness he died at his house in Mansfield, Dec. 20, 1873.

RUMMEL, J. P., proprietor of suspender factory. Was born in 1840, Worthington Township, Richland Co. Married in 1866, to Eva Redrup, she was born in Cleveland; they have the following family: Wilber J. (deceased), Lulu E., Arthur Clifton. Mr. Rummel is conducting an enterprise that is giving employment to a number of hands; the articles of his manufacture are growing fast in popularity, and consequently is increasing, and is taking the lead of this class of goods.

RUNYAN, BENTLEY S. (deceased). The subject of this sketch, who was one of the active and prominent business men of Mansfield for over twenty years, was born in Knox Co., Ohio, March 6, 1821; he was the eighth child of Hill and Mary L. Runyan, who were old residents of that county; in the month of April, 1847, he removed to Mansfield, where he opened a hardware store, near the southeast corner of Walnut and Fourth streets; in the fall of the same year, he changed his location to a room south of Fourth on Main street, where he remained until after purchasing the building south of the present European Hotel, in which place for many years he did a large and extensive business, it being the chief hardware store in the city. During his residence in this city, he was prominent in all public and charitable enterprises, and his name was generally found at the head of the list of those citizens who petitioned and subscribed in the interest of the city and its inhabitants; he was one of the founders of the Mansfield Gas-light Company, and served as one of its officers, and was elected on an independent ticket as Mayor of the city, in which capacity he gave universal satisfaction; for many years he was an active member and officer of the Richland Co. Agricultural Society, the success of which was due in a great measure to his efforts. He was married in Mount Vernon, Ohio, to Miss Lucinda Murphy, of that place, Jan. 14, 1844; five children by this marriage are living—John Beatley, now a resident of Tiffin, Ohio, where he holds the position of Teller in the Tiffin National Bank; Charles C., of the firm of Bush & Runyan, plumbers and gas-fitters in this city; Robert Mead, iron-roofer and painter, now in the employ of the Aultman & Taylor Co., and two daughters, Almeda and Mary E. B. S. Runyan died in this city Jan. 12, 1869; R. Mead Runyan was married in Mansfield, Jan. 20, 1875, to Miss Ida Boyle; two sons were born to them—Frank, born in 1876, died March 18, 1878; Harry was born Jan. 15, 1877.

RUSSELL, REV. FRANK, Pastor Congregational Church. (The first part of this sketch was taken from the 3d vol. of the History of the city of Brooklyn, and the rest was written by a lay member of Mr. Russell's church, with the aid of the records). Rev. Russell was born May 19, 1840, at Marion, Wayne Co. N. Y., the eighth of nine children, all boys, and all reared to manhood by the same parents; his father was a well-to-do farmer, and when Frank was 10 or 11 years of age, lost nearly all his property by the failure of business firms, who had used his name as security; Mr. Russell's education was procured by his own efforts; he taught school during the winters when he was 15 and 16 years old, and an academy in Niagara Co., when 17; at the same time taking his college-fitting from his 13th to 17th year, at the Collegiate Institute at Marion. In 1858, being prepared for the sophomore year in Yale College, he went to Phillips Co., Ark., with the determination of earning sufficient money by teaching to defray the expenses of the college and seminary courses. Associated with an elder brother, he was soon at the head of an academy which flourished beyond all expectation, and became the organizer of the first teachers' associations and normal work ever known in that part of the State. His home was with an eminent physician, where he improved an excellent opportunity of studying medicine, the advantages of which have been perceptible in all his subsequent work. He remained teaching with increasing success in every respect until the entrance of the Union army in the summer of 1862, when every dollar, all personal property, library, horses, etc., and even wardrobe, were lost amid the ravages of war. Three of Mr. Russell's brothers were in the army, one of whom was killed when leading the 2d Kansas Regiment, of which he was Lieutenant Colonel. Mr. Russell made his way to Michigan, became Instructor in Adrian College, where with highest honors he also took his degree in 1864, under Dr. Mahan; he entered Union Seminary in New York City the same year, continued his self-support by teaching the classics and phonography, doing mission work, speaking and writing. Married the daughter of a clergyman in 1866; graduated in 1867, and removed at once to Philadelphia, where, during his last Seminary year, he had gone weekly to preach to an unorganized congregation. He was greatly blessed in his labors, organized Plymouth Church, and on that occasion was both ordained and installed Pastor, his friend, Dr. J. P. Thompson, preaching the sermon. He was unwearying in raising funds for the new building, which was built and dedicated at the corner of Nineteenth and Master streets. Mr. Russell left this work, and was called to what was then the Fifth Avenue Congregational Church in Brooklyn, N. Y.; in April, 1868, very soon after, by a difficulty it had been rent in twain. One year from this division it was re-united with added forces, under the name of the Park Congregational Church, and Mr. Russell was installed Pastor, his own previous Pastor, Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, preaching the sermon. A new building was erected on the corner of Sixth Avenue and Seventh street, he raising therefor over $9,000 outside the parish. After over five years of active labor here, his home was broken up by the death of his estimable wife, when at the suggestion and aid of his generous and loving people, he left his two young children in appropriate care, and traveled in Europe, returning at the close of 1873; he very soon removed to the charge of the First Congregational Church in Kalamazoo, Mich. In May, 1876, Mr. Russell was married to a daughter of Judge Henry, of Detroit. He found his church the eighth in size of the churches of that order in the State, and after it had become the fourth in size and the church for the first time in twenty-two years entirely relieved of debt, he was visited with the sad calamity of the burning of his dwelling with almost its entire contents, including his fine library of over 1,100 volumes, and over 16,000 pages of manuscript, and also a valuable cabinet of minerals and curiosities. In the prime of his strength, his wife and children all in excellent health, Mr. Russell was soon called to his present charge in Mansfield, where he was installed Pastor on the 15th of May, 1878. The pastorate of Mr. Russell in Mansfield has thus far been marked by an earnest and systematic effort to promote the best interests of the church and the community. He has shown himself to be a severe student, and a zealous, painstaking laborer in the Master's vineyard; his methods are practical, and his manner of teaching and preaching attractive and impressive; his sermons are the result of thought and exhaustive preparation, and are fully committed and delivered extempore, entirely without notes; his interest in the reform and philanthropies that seek the good of the community, calls him to impress upon them the peculiar bent of his mind, and systematic and business-like efforts characterize the movements, which are quickened and expanded by the influence of his skillful touch, and made to bud and blossom with promise; within a year from the commencement of Mr. Russell's labors in the church, occurred the heroic and wonderfully successful struggle with the great and overshadowing church debt, in which $40,000 were pledged to wipe out the incubus. Within a year also, the great revival under the leadership of Messrs. Whittle & McGrannahan added sixty-four members by confession, the other churches of the city also reaping adequate harvests; temporally and spiritually the church has prospered greatly under Mr. Russell's charge, the congregations have been enlarged, the prayer and conference meetings have been largely increased in numbers and intensified in interest, and the Sabbath school has had exceptional growth, and is the beautiful and flourishing garden of the church, which is to gladden the future with abundant fruitage; the enthusiasm of the youth of the society has been stimulated and aroused as it never has been before, and the beneficence and missionary spirit of the church have been broadened and deepened, and bear onward unusual blessings. In all these realizations, the active brain and willing, practiced hand of Mr. Russell are visible. For the benefit of the community Mr. Russell has, together with the Pastors of the other evangelical denominations, begun a work that cannot but be wide-reaching in its influences, blessings and comforts for the poorer classes. The Union Church work was great in its conception and noble in its purpose; it seeks to clothe the naked, feed the hungry and lift up the degraded and sin-stricken, it is practical Christianity as taught by the Savior. Mr. Russell has taken active interest in this movement, and the resident clergy are working harmoniously and efficiently in its behalf; the larger success is yet to come. One of the principal efforts of Mr. Russell has been to promote brotherly feeling and unity of action among the evangelical churches, as the best way to assure God's blessings by deserving them; he has been met in the proper spirit, and all is harmony and peace and promise. Among what has been published from Mr. Russell's pen apart from newspaper columns, special mention should be made of some outline lessons of Biblical study, several addresses, quite a number of pamphlet sermons, and a volume on the "State of the Dead," and the geographical index to the collection of maps in one of the best-known teachers' Bibles, believed to be the first index of the kind applied to Biblical maps. His largest work is entitled, "What Jesus Says," a large 12mo of 400 pages, being a compilation of all the utterances of the Savior arranged under topics, with a careful index; the edition of this work was very soon exhausted, showing it has met and filled a want recognized among Christians.

SEAMAN, CONSTANTINE ORORICK, was born in Virginia, April 3, 1820, and came to Ohio and settled in Wayne Co. in 1833, and to Mansfield in October, 1842. C. O. Seaman was married in 1839 to Margaret Furguson, who died in 1849. In the year 1852, he was married to Miranda Hill, who died in 1866, and in the year 1870, he was married to Rebecca Furguson. Mr. Seaman, in his younger days, was considered one of the strong men of Richland Co., and during his residence here has done much hard labor in assisting to clear up the country and make Mansfield what it is. Mr. Seaman is of English and Irish descent, and inherits a strong constitution; is in active life, and a resident of the Third Ward, Mansfield, where he has lived many years.

SEWARD, JAMES P., attorney; was born in Knox Co., Ohio, Oct. 6, 1851, at Mt. Vernon; moved to Mansfield in 1856. He attended the Vermillion Institute, Hayesville, Ashland Co.; also attended the Oberlin College; read law with Manual May; admitted to the bar, Aug. 22, 1876, in Lorain Co.; engaged in the practice of law in Mansfield in the fall of 1876, and still continues in the practice. In 1877, he was appointed Secretary of the Democratic Executive Committee; in 1878–79, promoted to the chairmanship of the committee. Mr. Seward ably conducted the campaign of 79, which, by his unceasing assiduity, resulting in a great victory in Richland Co. for Democracy.

SHERMAN, JOHN, HON. The name Sherman is by no means common in England, though it has been highly respected and honored. Sir Henry Sherman, of Yaxley, was one of the executors of the will of the Earl of Derby, dated May 23, 1521; William Sherman, Esq., purchased Knightstown, in the time of Henry VIII; a monument to William Sherman is in Ottery, May, 1542. [Hollister History Conn., Vol. 2, p. 440.]

None of the records now accessible show precisely the relation between the Shermans of Yaxley, and Edmund Sherman of Dedham, Essex Co., whose descendants came to America. The latter was a clothworker and a man of means; his initials were found on a stained-glass window (his gift), one of the buttresses of the church was built by him, and the pupils of the free school indorsed by him were seen going to church in procession, by the Rev. Henry B. Sherman, now Pastor of the Church of the Ascension, Esopus, N. Y.

Edmund Sherman married Ann Pellet April 30, 1560; their son Edmund married Ann Clark June 11, 1584; their son, Edmund 3d, had a fourth Edmund, who came to this country with his three sons—John, Edmund and Samuel, and a nephew, John Sherman, but with his son Edmund, returned to England in 1636, and left the three boys to work their way in the new world. The nephew John was the ancestor of Roger Sherman. The son John was the Rev. John Sherman, of Watertown, Mass., the most noted mathematician at that time in New England. Samuel, his brother, was the ancestor of the Ohio Shermans. His son, Deacon John Sherman, died in 1730; his son, John 3d, died in 1727; his son, Daniel, was born Aug. 14, 1721, and was one of the noted men of Connecticut. Cothren (page 190) says of Daniel Sherman: "He was perhaps the most distinguished man that had arisen in the town (Woodbury) previous to his day." He was a Justice of the Quorum for twenty-five years, and Judge of the Litchfield County Courts five years from 1786. For sixteen years, he was Probate Clerk for the District of Woodbury, and Judge of that District thirty-seven years. He represented his native town in the General Assembly sixty-five sessions, retaining the unbounded confidence of his fellow-citizens. It is to be remembered that there were two sessions a year, May and October. He was a man of commanding powers of mind, of sterling integrity, and every way well qualified for the various public trusts confided to his care. He died at a good old age, and full of honors.

The sixth son of the Hon. Daniel Sherman was Taylor Sherman. He was married in 1787 to Elizabeth Stoddard, a descendant of the Rev. Anthony Stoddard, one of the justly noted men of New England. To know what is in the present Sherman family, and whence it came, it is necessary to give some account of this line of their ancestry. The ministry of Mr. Stoddard was remarkable for its duration and the peace and prosperity that attended it. From the date of his first sermon as a candidate, to that of his last, immediately preceding the brief illness that terminated his useful labors, he numbered sixty years in his holy calling. "We have contemplated him," says Cothren, (page 140), "hitherto only as a minister of the Gospel; but his labors ended not here. He was at the same time minister, lawyer and physician. Like many of the early ministers of the colony, he prepared himself for the practice of physic, that he might administer to the wants of the body as well as the mind.

"He was Clerk of the Probate for the District of Woodbury, then comprising many towns, for a period of forty years; in this capacity, he drew most of the wills for his parishioners, and did nearly all the business of the office. * * * All the records of the court during the time he was Clerk, appear in his handwriting."

The characteristics of the Rev. Anthony Stoddard appear in the widow of Taylor Sherman, his granddaughter, for, as one of the grandchildren says, "She made us stand around."

The Hon. Taylor Sherman, having married Elizabeth Stoddard, lived at Norwalk, Conn., lost property by depredations of the enemy during the Revolution; inherited a part of the fire lands in Ohio, and came out in 1808 as Commissioner to make a partition of them.

The Hon. Charles R. Sherman, his son, married Mary Hoyt in Norwalk, Conn., in 1810; after being robbed as Internal Revenue Collector by his Deputies, and thus broken up, he came West with his wife and one child on horseback, and settled in the town of Lancaster.

Lancaster at that time was noted all over the State and the West generally, for the learning and talent of its bar, yet Mr. Sherman placed himself in a position in accordance with the splendid history of the Sherman family. At the age of 35, when he had fairly entered upon a successful legal practice, before accumulating more than barely enough to pay the expenses of settling in a new country, he was appointed Judge of the Supreme Court of Ohio. In a brief memoir by Gen. Reese, it is said, "He rose rapidly to eminence as a polished and eloquent advocate and as a judicious and reliable counselor at law. Indeed, in the elements of mind necessary to build up and sustain such a reputation, few men were his equal in Ohio." While on the bench at Lebanon, he was taken suddenly ill, and died on the 24th of June, 1829.

He left a family of eleven children, of whom the eldest was 16 years of age, and the youngest 6 weeks. Of these Gen. W. T. Sherman was the sixth, and the Hon. John Sherman the eighth. The widow, having scant means to maintain herself and family, could do little toward educating them. The Hon. Thomas Ewing adopted William Tecumseh and had him made a cadet at West Point, and he thereby became a distinguished General, being now at the head of the Army of the United States.

John, at 8 years of age, was adopted by his father's cousin, John Sherman, of Mount Vernon, with whom he remained until 1831, when he went to Lancaster to school. In 1837, he was appointed junior rod-man on the Muskingum Improvement, under Col. Samuel Curtis. In the spring of 1840, his brother, Charles T., then in the practice of law in Mansfield, invited him here; after four years' study, when 21 years of age, he was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of law. He began public life in 1855 as a Representative in Congress. His upward career was rapid and sure; he was kept at his post all through the war of the rebellion, doing valiant service, in the Senate and in organizing troops for the war. After the war, he was continued there until his call to the office of Secretary of the Treasury, which place he has so signally and successfully filled.

All the other members of Judge Sherman's family lived to grow up and occupy respectable positions in society.

SHERMAN, CHARLES J. (deceased); Judge Sherman was born in Norwalk, Conn., Feb. 3, 1811, and was brought by his parents to Lancaster, Ohio, about a year later; he graduated at the Ohio University, at Athens, about 1829; he studied law with Henry Stoddard, at Dayton, and, after being educated to the bar, came to Mansfield about 1835; he remained here, steadily engaged in practice, until 1867, when he was appointed United States District Judge at Cleveland, where he settled and lived until his death, Jan. 1, 1879. He was married, in 1841, to Eliza Williams, of Dayton; they became the parents of seven children, five of whom are now living, viz.: Mary Hoyt, born in 1842, now the wife of Gen. Nelson A. Miles, of the U. S. A.; Henry Stoddard, born in 1845, now practicing law in Cleveland; John, Jr., born in 1847, now U. S. Marshal in New Mexico; Charles F. Cook, born in 1848, died in infancy; Anna Wallace, born in 1850, died Jan. 1, 1870; Eliza A. Williams, born in 1852, now the wife of Colgate Hoyt, of Cleveland; Elizabeth Bancroft, born in 1857, now the wife of J. D. Cameron, U. S. Senator from Pennsylvania. Judge Sherman resigned his judgeship in 1873, and, during the remainder of his life, held no office. Judge Sherman, while a resident of Mansfield and which crowned the very prime of his life, was active in promoting all the material interests of Mansfield and the county of Richland—specially in the organization of the agricultural society, in the introduction of better modes for the larger production of the better quality of fruits; he was for years one of the officers of the S., M. & N. R. R. Co. (now a part of the B. & O. R. R.); took a very active part in the projection and building of the P., Ft. W. & C. R. R., and was the first general solicitor, or counsel, of said company; he had a large practice as an attorney, but seldom appeared at the bar, preferring the work of a counselor in the office, and was one of the most genial of men in social life, a safe adviser and stanch friend.

SIMPSON, JOHN, PROF., Superintendent of the city schools; he was born in Richland Co., Ohio, June 26, 1829. He was married, Dec. 25, 1862, to Miss Millie J. Stringer, who was born in Ashland Co.; they have three daughters—Mary Blanche, born Feb. 16, 1864;

Helen Agusta, Feb. 21, 1868, and Gertrude A., Feb. 10, 1870. Prof. Simpson graduated at Jefferson College, Penn., in 1858; he entered the Hayesville Institute, as a teacher, about the year 1860; he was soon installed as Professor of mathematics, and lecturer on physical geography; in this department he distinguished himself, until he was recognized as one of the best instructors and ablest mathematicians of the State; he subsequently became President of the institute, and continued in this capacity until 1871; he then entered the public schools of Mansfield; after a little more than a year's experience of his ability, the Board of Education elected him Superintendent, a position which he has held with marked success for the past seven years, and to which he has been unanimously reelected by the board. The wide reputation of Prof. Simpson has been fitly recognized by the Faculty and Trustees of the University of Wooster in their bestowal upon him, at their annual commencement, of the honorary degree of Doctor of Philosophy.

SMITH, HIRAM R.; retired merchant. His father, Asa Smith, was born at Albany, N. Y., September, 1760; died on his farm near Huron, Ohio, Aug. 30, 1815. His mother (her maiden name Hannah Richmond) was born at Providence, R. I., March 21, 1774; died at Sandusky City Aug. 30, 1842. His parents with their family—four daughters and two sons—emigrated to Ohio just before the war of 1812; they embarked on a sail-boat (before any steamer was on the lake) at Buffalo for Ohio, and landed at the mouth of Huron River, where they located their farm adjoining the present village of Huron; here they remained during the war, encountering all the privations of a pioneer life and dangers from the Indians, who were prowling all over this section of country at that time. Here the subject of this memoir, Hiram R. Smith, was born, on the banks of Lake Erie near Huron, Ohio, Jan. 7, 1813. He came to Mansfield September, 1824; lived with Hugh McFall, tending store morning and evening, and went to school during the day; his teacher was Col. Alexander Barr, who kept in the old frame schoolhouse of one room, known as the Big Spring Schoolhouse, on the ground where the soap factory now stands. He lived with Hugh McFall fifteen years as salesman in a general stock of goods. From 1824 until the opening of the New York Canal, there was no market for the products of the country; therefore no prices to remunerate the farmer—wheat, 25 cents; corn, 12½; oats, 10; flour, $1.50 per barrel; pork, $1.50 per hundred; butter, 5 to 6 cents per pound; eggs, 3 to 4 cents per dozen. Goods were bought in Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, loaded on big Pennsylvania wagons with six horses in Philadelphia, and hauled through to Mansfield, which took from five to six weeks; on the return of the team they loaded with ginseng, beeswax, feathers, cranberries, butter and maple sugar. During the time he was with Hugh McFall he served as Deputy Postmaster for eight years and six months; did all the business in post-office department; through his fidelity, economy and energy he succeeded in accumulating some means; then engaged in business for himself in general merchandise, as was usually the custom in those times. He was married in 1839 to Ann C. Leiter; she was born in Washington Co., Md.; died in Mansfield June 7, 1850. They had the following children: Henry, born March 31, 1840 (enlisted in the army during the rebellion; died in Arkansas in 1862); Mary Felicia, born June 25, 1842, died July 20, 1876, (her death cast a gloom over the entire community; she had the qualities of true womanhood—religious and social—also a gentle and kind disposition; she endeared herself to many friends and had no enemies; she was a Christian and an earnest Sabbath school worker); Richmond Smith, born Dec. 14, 1844; Clara Ann, Feb. 8, 1848; died July 26, 1875; Miss Smith was for some time a teacher in the public schools; she also won many friends through her kind and gentle disposition; she was always ready to lend a helping hand in matters pertaining to the good of those around her; although her sufferings were intense, she bore them with Christian resignation and departed in great peace. Mr. Smith's second marriage occurred May 16, 1854, to Ann Ward; she was born in Richland Co.; they have two children: Ward Smith, born Oct. 1, 1856, was married to Mattie Hart, of Mansfield, Nov. 9, 1879; Rena May, born Aug. 8, 1860, she resides with her parents in Mansfield. Mr. Smith has been engaged quite extensively in the mercantile business, has filled different positions of trust and honor, and has proven himself worthy; also has added greatly to the improvements of this city; has erected several fine buildings, among them the Opera Hall building; he has always encouraged every public enterprise that would be a benefit to the community and especially add to the advancement of the city; he has also borne a portion of the pioneers' burdens, and can look back when Mansfield was in its infancy; he has grown up with the progress of the city, has participated in the work of progression, and has been one to help Mansfield raise up to her present status—one among the number to say: "Let us have a good pioneer history of our county," with a helping hand; he ranks among the first on the list; this is characteristic of H. R. Smith.

SMITH, WILLIAM (deceased); he was born in Washington Co., Penn., Nov. 5, 1788, and was descended from an old Washington Co. (Penn.) family; he came to this county in the fall of 1822, and first settled on a tract of land about two miles east of Mansfield, where he lived several years, when he purchased an interest in what was then known as the Tingley & Phearson carding machine and woolen factory, then located a short distance north of town; he continued in this business nearly three years, when he removed to Mansfield; two years later, he purchased of Robert McCombs a tract of land situated one and a half miles east of the court house, on the Rocky Fork of the Mohican, at that time covered with a dense forest; this he partially cleared, and on it he built a house, where he lived and continued to improve the land; some years afterward, he erected a carding machine and fulling-mill on the stream, which he operated a few years, and then started a flouring and grist mill, in which business he was engaged until 1844, when he removed to Mansfield, where he continued to reside until his death, which occurred May 5, 1846. William Smith was married in Washington Co., Penn., June 23, 1814, to Miss Sarah Lyle, a native of that county, who was born Feb. 1, 1794; they were the parents of twelve children—James, born Feb. 7, 1815, died Aug. 9, 1863; Sarah A., April 1, 1816; Robert Lyle, April 11, 1818, died Dec. 14, 1831; Abigail, June 28, 1820, died Oct. 6, 1831; William, Feb. 28, 1822; David Lyle, April 27, 1824; Mary Jane, March 4, 1826, died July 3, 1828; Rebecca, May 24, 1828, died Aug. 29, 1828; Ebenezer, Aug. 1, 1829, died May 23, 1852; Robert Ray, born Oct. 9, 1831; Samuel Lyle, Dec. 26, 1833, died Nov. 17, 1874; Isabella, May 18, 1836, died March 29, 1837. Mrs. Mary Lyle Smith died at the house of her son-in-law, Mr. James Clark, near Mansfield, Oct. 3, 1876.

SMITH, J. F., dealer in coal; he is a native of Knox Co.; he came to Mansfield six years ago; he is engaged as coal dealer, and has on hand a good supply of all kinds of coal, and delivers to all parts of the city; office on North Main street.

SMITH, JONAS, Jr., engineer; a resident of Mansfield, who springs from an old Western Pennsylvania family; his father, Henry E., was a native of Fayette Co., born in the year 1812; his mother, Margaret D. Carr, was born in Pittsburgh in 1816; in after years, the parents removed to Ohio; Jonas Smith, Jr., was born in Wooster, Wayne Co., in 1849, and received his education at the Massillon public schools; since 1867, he has been connected, as a fireman and engineer, with a number of the leading railroads of the West; for twelve and a half years, he was employed on the P., Ft. W. & C. R. R. and its divisions, as fireman and engineer, respectively, and, afterward, on the T. & A. A. R. R. Mr. Smith has the reputation of being a careful and well-posted engineer, enjoying the confidence of railroad officials wherever he has labored.

SMITH, RICHMOND (son of Hiram R. Smith), Secretary of the Richland Mutual Insurance Co.; was born Dec. 14, 1844. Married to Alice Dull, of Mansfield, Oct. 18, 1876. Mr. Smith has been very efficient in his labors, and has aided greatly in raising the company to its present substantial basis.

SMITH, E. W., insurance and real-estate agent; he was born in Washington Township, Richland Co., May 8, 1822. Married, Sept. 26, 1854, in Zanesville, Ohio, to Sarah Guthrie Metcalf, who was born July 10, 1835, at Lenox, Berkshire Co., Mass.; they have the following children: Caroline L., born March 2, 1856; Anna M., May 15, 1860; S. Dwight, May 6, 1868. Mr. Smith was raised on a farm in this county. He graduated at Oberlin College in 1845. In 1846, he went to Chicago with Rev. J. B. Walker, and assisted him in conducting a paper called the Herald of the Prairies; continued there three years, and then returned to Mansfield. In 1850, he and M. Day bought of J. C. Gilkison, and established the Mansfield Herald, which is yet published under the same name. While engaged in the publication of this paper, he was appointed, without solicitation, in 1851, General Agent of the American Bible Society for one-half of the State of Ohio, and continued in that work till May, 1870. Afterward engaged in the real-estate and insurance business, and still continues in that work.

SNYDER, SAMUEL S., contractor; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Sept. 13, 1816, the first child of Henry and Elizabeth Snyder. In September, 1834, he removed to Ohio with his parents, who first settled in Mansfield, and afterward resided on a farm west of the city for two years; during this time, and until the age of 21, he followed clearing, and carried the mail to Bucyrus and Delaware and return. In August, 1837, Mr. Snyder was married to Miss Irene Stevens of this county, with whom he raised a family of six children; two sons are now in active business in this city. In the year 1846, he removed to Mansfield having previously followed farming. For a number of years, he was engaged in the grocery business in Mansfield, and was located a great part of the time on the northeast corner of Main and Third streets. In 1850, Mr. Snyder was appointed Deputy Sheriff under Wharf, which position he held for four years. It was while engaged in this service, he was attacked by a desperate prisoner in which he came near losing his life. During his long residence in Mansfield, he has held numerous official positions, and in each has been faithful to the trusts confided to him; at one time Postmaster, then collector for Hall & Allen until elected Auditor of Richland Co., in 1864, and re-elected, serving two full terms. Mr. Snyder is now a resident of East Third street, and, of late years, has been engaged in business principally as a contractor in street improvements.

SNYDER, C. H., dentist; he was born in Mansfield in 1854; he was educated and graduated in the city schools; graduated at the Ohio College of Dental Surgery, at Cincinnati, Ohio.

SNYDER, GEORGE W., railroad agent; he was born in Mansfield Jan. 25, 1847, where he received his elementary education; in 1864, he became connected with the A. & G. W. R. R., at Mansfield, as clerk in the agent's office, which position he held until March, 1873, when he received the appointment of ticket and freight agent on the same road; after the formation of the Mansfield Stock-Yard Company, controlled by the A. & G. W. R. R., his business qualifications were recognized by an appointment to the additional office of general manager of that company, both of which positions he now holds. He was married Oct. 16, 1872, in Knox Co., Ohio, to Miss Lizzie Tulloss; they have two children, a son and daughter—Bennie T., born Aug. 14, 1873, and Georgia Belle, born July 4, 1876.

SPENCER, JOHN G., proprietor of opera boot and shoe store; he was born, 1837, in Ireland; came to Piqua, Ohio, 1854; engaged there in dry-goods trade for ten years; came to Mansfield in 1866, where he engaged in the wholesale and retail boot and shoe trade; more recently, he established the Opera House boot and shoe store, one of the largest retail stores in Northern Ohio; this establishment carries at all times an immense stock of first-class work, and, buying only from first hands, offers inducements not surpassed in this State; buyers will here find an unrivaled assortment, consisting of over one thousand different varieties, and the reputation of Spencer's store for low prices is well known all over Richland Co., and commends itself to the general public.

STEVENSON, ANDREW, attorney; was born April 1, 1844, in Weller Township, Richland Co.; was educated at the Vermillion Institute, Hayesville, Ashland Co. He went to the army; was in the Ohio Cavalry, served four months. He was discharged under a writ of habeas corpus, being under 18 years of age. He returned to Mansfield, commenced the study of law with the firm of Bartley & Johnson; was admitted to the bar in 1865; then went to Pittsburgh, Penn., and commenced the practice of law, and continued one year and six months; then returned to Mansfield in the winter of 1866, and resumed the practice of law. In 1869, was nominated Prosecuting Attorney by a majority of 1,190 over his opponent, Thomas McBride, and served in that office two years. Went to Marysville, Union Co., Ohio, in 1873, and resumed the practice of law. Engaged in the political campaign for Hon. E. F. Poppleton; stumped the entire district. In 1875, was strongly solicited to become a candidate for nomination for member of Congress; district composed of the counties of Marion, Delaware, Union and Hardin. He received the caucus vote of Union and Hardin Cos., and peremptorily refused to be a candidate, having pledged himself to give his influence to Hon. E. F. Poppleton for his renomination. In the winter of 1878–79, returned to Mansfield, resumed the practice of law with the Hon. R. B. McCrory.

STEWART, JAMES (deceased). Judge Stewart was born in Chanceford, York Co., Penn., Aug. 2, 1802; his paternal ancestors came from Ireland about the middle of the eighteenth century; his father, John Stewart, was born in York Co. in 1776; his mother, Jane Duncan, was of Scotch descent; they were married about the year 1800, and became the parents of three children—two boys and one girl; the eldest son, according to the custom of those times, inherited the homestead where his son, James, now resides. In the spring of 1805, the parents of Judge Stewart moved to Ontario Co., where they remained until 1824, when they came to Richland Co.; when they moved to Ontario Co. it was then the "West," in a measure, and was yet unpopulated; they purchased a farm of the Government, near the town of Seneca, and erected a hewed-log house, much better than the average cabins of the day; they were industrious, frugal and economical, and soon had a pleasant and comfortable home. Under such influences Judge Stewart passed his early life; of an active mind, he soon learned to read and write, and having the advantage of good schools in Seneca, he made rapid progress in learning; afterward he entered the academy at Canandaigua, where he continued to pursue his studies (save a few intervals spent in teaching) until he came to Mansfield in 1822; here he established the first academy in the town, which he conducted two years, when (in the autumn of 1824) he went to Oxford College, remaining only a year or so, not completing his course. In 1826, he was married to Margaret Loughridge, a beautiful woman, possessed of a lovely Christian character, from whom he had the sad misfortune to be separated by death two years later; she left one daughter, Cecilia, now Mrs. John Sherman, of Washington City. Two years after he was married, Judge Stewart was admitted to the bar, having studied law in the office of Judge Parker; he soon rose in practice, occupying the front rank in his profession; he continued the duties of his profession until the spring of 1850, when Judge Parker's term, as Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, expiring, he was appointed to the vacancy, in accordance with the unanimous wish of the bar; in the fall of 1851, this office was vacated by the new constitution; Judge Stewart was called by the unanimous vote of the people of his district to the position of District Judge, there being no opposing candidate; from this time until the expiration of his judicial term, in 1856, he was constantly occupied with the duties of the bench; two years after the expiration of his term his death occurred (Feb. 24, 1858). He was married the second time, to Mary Mercer, who died Aug. 14, 1860. As a jurist, Judge Stewart had few superiors; he was prompt, accurate, clear, unprejudiced and independent; his mind was eminently a judicial one, and to no one could the younger members of the bar go, in whose word and opinion they could have more confidence; in all public interests he was ready and willing to do his part; as a private citizen he was unexcelled, while as a parent and husband he was kind, congenial and true.

STRAUB, JACOB, wagon-maker; he was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., April 11, 1826, and removed to Richland Co., Ohio, with his parents when but 4 weeks old; they settled on Sec. 17, in Mifflin Township. Having chosen wagon-making as his trade, he came to Mansfield, and began work in the shop of William Berringer, where he completed his trade in 1847. Directly afterward, he commenced piece-work until accumulating sufficient capital to buy the stock of his employer in 1848, in which business he has continued to the present time; now considered the pioneer wagon-maker of Richland Co. He was married in 1850, to Elizabeth Christman, who died April 29, 1868, in Mansfield; he had three children by this marriage, one of whom is living. Again married in June, 1871, to Mary Lehr; he has one son by this marriage—Harry, born Jan. 9, 1873. During Mr. Straub's long and active life in this county, he has passed through many of the experiences of those who preceded him—having but a few dollars when leaving the homestead—nothing daunted, he has continued steadily at his trade while being called by his fellowmen to positions of honor and trust, as Land Appraiser, repeatedly chosen Assessor, and elected a member of the City Council three terms, three years of which he acted as its President, serving with distinction.

STRICKLER, CHRISTOPHER, cabinet-maker and wheelwright. The subject of this sketch was born in Chester Co., Penn., April 27, 1827; he is the fourth son of Amos and Mary Scott Strickler, one of the old families of that county; when 17 years of age, he was apprenticed to learn the trade of wheelwright, which he completed at the age of 21; not wholly satisfied with this vocation, he worked at cabinet-making several hours each evening, which trade he finally accomplished some years later by denying himself many hours of rest; some time after, however, he continued the trade of wheelwright exclusively, in his native county, where he remained until April, 1868, when he removed with his family to Mansfield, Ohio, and was employed in the shops of Blymeyer, Day & Co.; since then he has been constantly engaged in the Mansfield Machine Works. Mr. Strickler was married in Philadelphia, Penn., Dec. 16, 1852, to Miss Susan Hopton, a descendant of an old Quaker family, by whom he has had four children—Sallie, born Sept. 30, 1853; Anna Elizabeth, Oct. 22, 1862; Clinton, April 15, 1865;

Mary Gertrude, March 21, 1867; they are now residents of Wood street, and members of the Congregational Church.

STRONG, FREDERICK W., deceased; he was born near Frederick, Md., Feb. 16, 1812; he came to Ohio when quite young, and located in Mansfield in 1840, where, for many years, he was engaged in the dry-goods trade, and afterward, and until his death, was the founder and head of the well-known produce and commission house of F. W. Strong, Son & Co.; during his long residence in this city, covering a period of nearly forty years, he was accounted one of its leading citizens and merchants; a man of sound judgment and business tact, he was active and successful. Mr. Strong was married March 4, 1838, to Miss Lucina R. Poppleton, to whom were born two children—Lyman A. and Lucina J.; Lucina was married in this city Oct. 29, 1861, to Prof. W. H. Ingersoll, who died in Cleveland, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1876; one child, a daughter, by this marriage, is now living. F. W. Strong died June 10, 1879, in Mansfield, having lived an upright and consistent Christian life, and been a member of the Congregational Church for many years.

STRONG, LYMAN A., merchant; he was born March 2, 1839, and received his elementary education in this city, and afterward continued his studies at the Marietta College, where he graduated in 1861; returning home, he commenced the study of law in the office of Watson & Dirlam, and was admitted to the bar in 1864. Since 1865, he has been a member of the well-known firm of F. W. Strong, Son & Co., produce and commission merchants, and is one of Mansfield's representative business men. He was married Oct. 31, 1865, to Miss Fannie M. Whitney, of this city.

STURGES, EBEN P., Sr. (deceased); Mr. S. was born in Fairfield, Conn., on the 12th of August, 1784. At the early age of 14, he embarked in a subordinate capacity on board of a merchantman owned by a relative. It was not his design to make a sea-faring life his profession, but while on the vessel no one discharged his duties more assiduously. At 16 years of age, he was first officer, and before he was 21 was master and part owner of the ship. He commanded the merchant vessel Madisonia when hostilities broke out between Great Britain and the United States in 1812. Soon after the commencement of the war, he was homeward bound, on a voyage from South America, with a valuable cargo. Early in the voyage, he was informed by an American privateer of the existence of hostilities, and a few days subsequently, he was captured by a British frigate—the Garland—and sent with his crew as prisoners of war to Kingston, Jamaica. Here, after enduring severe hardships and passing through an attack of yellow fever, he was released on parole. He embraced the first opportunity to return to the United States, where he arrived safely, but enfeebled in health by confinement and disease. After recovering sufficient strength, he came to Ohio on a visit to his sister, the late Mrs. Ebenezer Buckingham, of Putnam. Having determined to relinquish the sea he turned his mind to a new field of enterprise. This portion of the State of Ohio was then an almost unbroken wilderness. Forming his plan, he returned east and formed a connection with Buckingham Sherwood, late of Newark, Ohio. They purchased a stock of goods, which they transported in wagons to Zanesville, designing to take them from that place to Gen. Harrison's camp near the frontier. In the accomplishment of this plan, they succeeded in conveying their goods with great difficulty to Mansfield, then the site of a new village. On their arrival, they were informed of the hostilities of the Indians along their proposed route, and were induced by the solicitation of the inhabitants to remain and offer their goods for sale to the settlers here. A store was opened in a cabin nearly opposite to where the Wiler House now stands, and thus Mr. Sturges became the first merchant who settled in Mansfield. Enterprising and energetic, he soon built up a large trade, attracting business from (at that time) quite remote points. Mr. S. was during his whole life an efficient friend of religious institutions. He, more than any other man, aided in the erection of the First Presbyterian Church in this city. Subsequently he embraced in heart the Gospel, the support of which he sought to promote by his means. After he made a profession of religion, he largely helped in building the Congregational Church here, where, while he was able to hear preaching, he regularly worshiped with interest and sincerity For many years before his death, he suffered from deafness, which prevented him from hearing ordinary speech. Mr. Sturges was married three times. In 1821 to Miss Amanda Buckingham, of Putnam; in 1834, to Miss Jerusha M. Hale, of Connecticut, and, in 1850, to Miss R. M. Tracy, of this city. By his first wife he had three children—Messrs. Dimon, Col. S. B., and Edward. By his second—Henry A. and Miss Amanda. His last wife had no issue. She still survives him. He died Jan. 1, 1862.

STURGES, EDWARD, Sr., deceased. He was born in Fairfield, Conn., Dec. 5, 1805, and was the son of Dimon Sturges, who was a soldier of the Revolution, and Sarah Perry. His great-grandfather, Solomon Sturges, was killed by the Tories during the attack of the British on Fairfield, July 8, 1779. At the early age of 14, Mr. Sturges left the home of his ancestors for the then "Western wilderness." He traveled over the mountains on horseback, and arrived in Mansfield in April, 1820. He immediately entered the store of his brother, E. P. Sturges, then an apparently rude establishment located on the corner where the Sturges Block now stands, the firm name being Sturges & Sherwood. In 1823, Edward Sturges became a partner in the place of Mr. Sherwood. The firm name then became E. P. & E. Sturges. He continued to be a leading and influential partner in this old and successful business house through all its various changes till 1863, when H. H. Sturges took his place, and the firm became Sturges & Wood. In January, 1854, he entered into the banking business in company with A. L. Grimes and S. B. Sturges, under the firm name of E. Sturges, Sr. & Co. This firm continued its business until it merged into the Richland National Bank. He was also connected with the Farmers' National Bank, and with other financial and manufacturing interests of the city. He was for a long time a large stockholder in the Mansfield Machine Works, and it was mainly due to his counsels and material assistance that this large establishment was saved from utter financial ruin on the very verge of which it was at the beginning of the panic in 1873. Soon after terminating his connection with the dry-goods store in 1863, he engaged in the wholesale grocery business with his son, E. P. Sturges, with whom he continued until his death, which occurred Monday, Sept. 16, 1878. Concerning his business habits, the Liberal, in its obituary notice, states:

"Mr. Sturges was, in all respects, a model business man, prudent, honorable, careful, and industrious; he trusted to sure and steady gains rather than the speculative ones, and his example remains for imitation to all those who would pursue a mercantile career upon the best principles for an honorable success.

"Mr. Sturges, although he never accepted political preferment, always took a deep interest in public affairs. In the early days of agitation upon the slavery question, he was an earnest antislavery man, and always gave a zealous support to the cause. He and his brother were among the founders, and were the life-long supporters of the Congregational Church, which grew up out of the antislavery discussions of the time.

"Mr. Sturges, in all the relations of life, was an exemplary man. In business, he was thoroughly trustworthy and just in all his dealings. As a citizen, he discharged his duties with fidelity and honor. As a neighbor and friend he was kind, obliging and charitable. In short, he was an upright Christian gentleman, whose life has been a benediction to his generation, and whose death will be lamented by all who knew him."

Mr. Sturges was married in the summer of 1837 to Mary Mathews, the daughter of Dr. Increase and Betsey Leavens Mathews, late of Putnam, Ohio, where she was born Nov. 18, 1815. Her parents were among the early residents of the Territory of Ohio, which her father adopted as his home at the close of the last century, and where, in connection with his associates, Gen. Rufus Putnam and Levi Whipple, Esq., he founded upon the Muskingum River the town of Putnam. She received her later education at Marietta. In the summer of 1837, she became the wife of Edward Sturges, Sr., and removed to Mansfield, which continued to be her home until her death. She possessed a strong character and many virtues. Practical and constant, though scrutinizing, in her benevolence, distress, misfortune, and worthy poverty met at her hands warm sympathy and unfailing assistance. They left a family of five sons and three daughters—Charles, Eben P., Arthur, Willis M., John, Susan, Mary, and Anna.

TAYLOR, THOMAS W., carpenter. He was born in Franklin Township Oct. 18, 1842. Married in 1866, to Lydia Small, who was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Jan. 8, 1843; they have six children—Orlando, born Sept. 22, 1866; Ada R., born Sept. 8, 1868; Charlie, born Dec. 23, 1870; Mary, born March 12, 1873; Maud, born Aug. 14, 1876; Thomas, born Feb. 21, 1879; Mr. Taylor resides in Mansfield, and has been engaged in the Mansfield machine works. He enlisted in the 64th Regiment, O. V. I.; a member of Co. E, and was engaged in the service three years.

TAYLOR, FRANK R., teamster. He was born in Franklin Township in 1854. He was married in 1876, to Mary J. Browneller, who was born in Madison Township in 1859; they had one child, Fenton E, born Jan. 17, 1877; he died April 20, 1879.

TODD, DR. J. J. (deceased). He was born near Ashland, Ohio, Dec. 12, 1820; when of sufficient age, he commenced the trade of saddle and harness making in that place, which he completed, and at which he continued to work for two years after coming to Mansfield in 1842; not fully satisfied with his vocation, and ambitious to enter a wider field of usefulness, he commenced the study of medicine with the late Dr. A. G. Miller, under whose instruction he finished his studies, and graduated at the Cleveland Medical College in 1847. For nine years thereafter, he had a large and constantly increasing practice throughout this county, and was looked upon as a careful and skillful physician. He died in Mansfield the latter part of January, 1856. Dr. J. J. Todd was married, Aug. 26, 1847, to Miss Naomi Hedges, daughter of the late Ellzey Hedges, of this city, to whom were born five children, three of whom are living and residents of this city.

TROUTMAN, ELIAS, tinner and coppersmith. He was born in Center Co., Penn., March 11, 1817; in 1827, he came to Ohio with his parents, who located in Orange Township, Ashland Co.; at the age of 18, he began the trade of stone-cutter and brick-laying, which he soon discontinued, as he was compelled to remain idle during the winter. He immediately came to Mansfield and entered into a contract with the widow Buckins after her husband's death to learn the tinner's trade, which he acquired in the usual time, when he learned the trade of coppersmith with William McNulty, where he continued until 1839; after that date until 1849, he was working chiefly at the tinner's trade, when in the winter of that year, he went to California, and returned in the spring of 1851; he has been engaged at his trade in all its branches since that year in this city, and is now in active life. He was married, March 26, 1840, to Elizabeth Keffer, of Washington Co., Penn.; to them were born seven children, five of whom died in infancy, and one daughter at the age of 18 years. One child living. During his residence in Mansfield, Mr. Troutman has always been identified in every movement that tended toward the improvement of the city and its inhabitants, and interested in benevolent and church enterprises. He is an active member of the Lutheran Church.

TWITCHELL, A. J., attorney; he was born Dec. 31, 1848, in Portage Co., Ohio; graduated at the Ohio Wesleyan University in 1872; at the Harvard Law School in 1874; read law with Judge M. R. Dickey; admitted to the bar in the fall of 1874; engaged in the practice of law, in company with A. M. Burns, in December, 1874; continued till July, 1877, when he began alone. Was married, Sept. 24, 1874, to Ella C. Downs, of Defiance, Ohio; they have two children—Ray, born in July, 1876; Lee, in September, 1878.

TYLER, W. F., traveling salesman; was born June 7, 1824, in Newport, Herkimer Co., N. Y.; emigrated to Mansfield in 1859; engaged in grocery store, continued sixteen years, and then engaged as traveling agent for a Cincinnati carriage manufactory, and continues up to this date. He was married to Hannah Pratt August 22, 1849; they have four children—Mary Ellen, born May 29, 1850; William Dexter, Feb. 7, 1853, who is engaged as traveling salesman; Ida Bell, Oct. 19, 1857; Hattie Emmer, Oct. 9, 1866. Residence, No. 90 East Market street.

WAGNER, C. W., druggist and practical apothecary; at No. 32 South Main street, in the American Hotel Building, can be found the well-stocked drug and prescription establishment of Mr. C. W. Wagner, who has had a practical experience in the drug business for over twenty-three years, six of which were passed in a first-class drug store in the city of New York; Mr. Wagner is a practical apothecary, in every sense of the word, and, in the compounding of medicine, stands pre-eminent in Ohio, being the only druggist in Richland Co. who is thoroughly conversant with the German language; having been educated in Germany, he naturally receives the greater portion of the German trade; he established his store six years ago, and has ever since been doing a successful business; his scrupulous honesty and extreme accuracy in compounding medicines secure for him a very large share of physicians' and private prescriptions; he is also manufacturing and selling extensively the following useful remedies: "Wagner's Compound Balsam of Wild Cherry, Horehound and Tolu," for the certain cure of coughs, colds, etc.; "The Children's Friend," the celebrated German worm-powder, very effectual and safe; "Wagner's Croup, Liver and Cathartic Pills," for liver-complaint, costiveness, sick headache, etc; "Wagner's Cholera Cordial," an excellent remedy for dysentery, diarrhœa, cramp, cholera-morbus, etc.; "Wagner's Celebrated Asthma Remedy," which gives relief in five minutes; also, "The Farmer's Friend," without exception the best horse, cattle and general stock powder now in use; Mr. Wagner also has constantly on hand a full assortment of pure, unadulterated drugs, chemicals, etc., and all the standard patent medicines in the market, besides a great variety of toilet and fancy articles; he is very attentive to his business, and can be found at his store at all times. C. W. Wagner, practical apothecary, No. 32 South Main street, American Hotel Building.

WALLACE & SNYDER, dentists; they established an office in Mansfield, in November, 1879. Dr. Wallace located here a year or two before. They are both practical and skillful workmen; they have built up a very extensive practice; are now taking the lead in this profession; they have fitted up an office in very neat style, on the west side of the park, where they can always be found to attend to all calls promptly.

WARING, GEORGE W., was born in Athens, N. Y., March 28, 1816; came to Ohio in 1838, and was engaged in the dry-goods trade six years in Plymouth previous to his removal to this city in 1844, when he actively engaged in the produce and commission business for a number of years; the building now known as the Niman Foundry was erected and used by him in that trade in 1844; he was afterward engaged in the dry-goods trade for four years, when he purchased the grocery store of Stiles & Coman, the first wholesale store of that kind in the city; for many years, he was the proprietor and landlord of the American House, while there, he purchased and brought to this city, in 1845, the first omnibus ever used here. He was married, March 28, 1844, in this city, to Miss Eliza Roop; they are the parents of seven children, three of whom are dead.

WELDON, JAMES (deceased). The subject of this sketch, well known to all of the old residents of this county, was a direct descendant of an old and highly respectable family of Weldons living in Kent Co., Del. James Weldon was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., in the year 1804, and was the second son of Rolland Weldon, who removed to Ohio and located in Mansfield, on what has since been known as the McFall corner, in the year 1811. James Weldon was married, Jan. 10, 1837, to Isabella McEllroy, daughter of Alexander McEllroy, near Mansfield, by the Rev. James Rolland. To them were born three children—the eldest, William H., was born Jan. 8, 1839; Charles D., April 17, 1844, and the youngest, a daughter. William H. Weldon, a business man of great promise, died Dec. 11, 1868, having been engaged for a number of years in New York and Philadelphia, as well as Mansfield, in the banking business; Charles D. is now and has been an artist of note in the East for a number of years—now a resident of New York. Isabella (McEllroy) Weldon was born in the year 1808, the third child of A. McEllroy, living two miles east of Mansfield. James Weldon was, doubtless, at the time of his death, Feb. 20, 1872, the oldest resident merchant in Mansfield; during his long life in Mansfield, which extended over a period of sixty years, he was engaged in many enterprises and business transactions of note; a quiet, unassuming man, respected by all for his qualities of head and heart, his death was deplored. Mrs. Weldon died Wednesday, May 12, 1880, at the old homestead, which has been occupied by the family over thirty-four years.

WELDON, WILLIAM H. (deceased). In another part of this work, a brief mention is made of Mr. Weldon, whose parents and grandparents were among the earliest settlers of this county. At the age of 14 years, he showed a more than ordinary aptitude for mercantile pursuits, and was placed in the Cleveland Commercial College, where he soon acquired that knowledge of book-keeping that was always of great benefit to him in his after life. After his return from Cleveland, he entered the Farmers' Bank, where he was soon recognized as an expert accountant; soon after, was engaged in a bank in Pittsburgh; then in Chicago, in the bank of Purdy, Granger & Weldon; while here, he received an appointment to a clerkship in Washington; then to the Treasurer's office at the Mint in Philadelphia, where he was appointed a Government Paymaster. Wm. H. Weldon was married to Mary Hodge Purdy in Mansfield, Dec. 2, 1862, to whom have been born two children—May Churchill, born Oct. 28, 1865, and William McEllroy, born Dec. 28, 1868. After his marriage, Mr. Weldon returned to Philadelphia, where he was employed in the U. S. Mint about five years, which position he was compelled to relinquish on account of poor health, when he returned to his native town, and soon after departed this life.

WEST, SYLVESTER, was born Nov. 13, 1880, in Jefferson Co., Ohio, near Steubenville; came to Richland Co. Jan. 15, 1836, and settled near Newville; he came to Mansfield in 1842. Mr. West was married Oct. 10, 1822, in Jefferson Co., Ohio, to Sarah Shiveley, to whom have been born twelve children—six living and six dead; five of the living reside in Richland Co. Mr. West has been a member of the Methodist Church fifty-five years. Mrs. Sarah West died Dec. 2, 1873, aged 68 years—an affectionate wife and loving mother, her life was that of a true Christian; she had been a faithful member of the Methodist Church over fifty years; she was born in Jefferson Co., in the year 1805, and after her marriage was always ready to assist her husband in making home pleasant and happy.

WHARF, FREDERICK (deceased); he was born in New York, April 20, 1809, and removed to Richland Co. with his parents, James and Jane (Graham) Wharf, in 1838. Mr. Wharf was married in New York, to Miss Laura Gault, to whom were born two children —William, who died in Mansfield, Aug. 23, 1878, and Henry, a painter, now engaged at his trade in this city. Mrs. Laura (Gault) Wharf died in Mansfield in 1851. Frederick Wharf lived at the old homestead south of Mansfield until he was appointed Deputy Sheriff. Mr. Wharf was afterward elected Sheriff of Richland Co., and served his full two terms to the entire satisfaction of the people who elected him. Although a strong party man, he possessed many qualities of head and heart that made him warm friends in both parties. He died in the fall of 1862, and was buried at Mansfield.

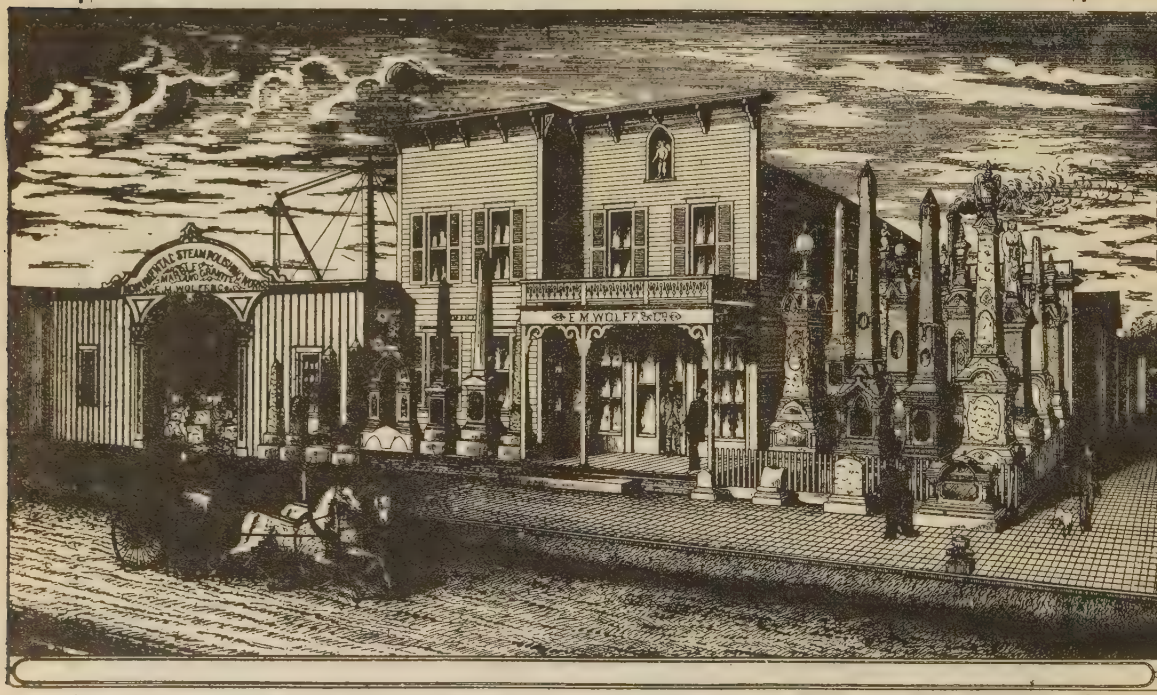
WHISSEMORE, A., photographer; he was born Dec. 20, 1829, in Wayne Co. Married to Martha Jane Mathews, of Richland Co. Mr. Whissemore has been engaged as an artist in Mansfield for twenty-three years, and is the oldest artist in the city; has been keeping up to the standard of his business, and having every facility, he is prepared to execute all kinds of first-class work; his reputation as an artist is so extensively known that it needs but little comment. Rooms above Blymyer's stove store.

WHITE, TIRZAH McCONNELL, MRS. Among the oldest of the faithful and good Christian mothers who still linger is Mrs. Tirzah White, of East Fourth street, Mansfield, a native of Lancaster Co., Penn.; she was born on the 14th day of July, 1800, and was married to John White the 11th of August, 1825, in Lancaster City. When but 4 years of age, she was left an orphan, and passed through the sad experiences of those bereft of parents in youth. Although now aged and infirm, she looks back over her long life without regret or complaint, and, anxious for the future welfare of all, she kindly admonishes them when opportunity offers to put their trust in Him who has been her stay and strength. John and Tirzah White were the parents of three children, two of whom are living—Samuel S. and Catherine J.; the third, Mary E., died July 3, 1877, leaving two daughters and one son; the daughters—Sarah Alice Stevens and Jessie Bowman—reside in Mt. Vernon. John Ligget Longshore, son of Catherine J., lives with his parent and grandparent at the old homestead on East Fourth street, Mansfield.

WILER, JOHN JACOB, weaver, butcher, brewer and baker retired; he was born in Herisau, Appenzell Co., Switzerland, June 4, 1780, and was the oldest of a large family of children, only four of whom, however, lived to manhood and womanhood. When quite young, he learned the trade of weaver in his native town, which he continued until his 16th year, when, concluding to travel and ply his vocation, he went to France, where he remained two years in order to acquire some knowledge of the language; afterward, for fifteen years he traveled through the different governments of Europe as a journeyman weaver; specimens of his workmanship are now in the possession of his daughter, Mrs. J. H. Cook, which show him to have been an expert workman. During the campaign of Napoleon I in Austria, he enlisted for a time in the Swiss army on the frontier, and was assigned to the Army of the Reserve. While engaged in his occupation as a journeyman weaver, he passed over the battlefield of Leipsic the morning after the engagement, while the dead were being buried; his description of the scene he used often to relate with minuteness. Mr. Wiler sailed for America from Amsterdam on the 19th of May, 1817, in the ship "Bourbon," Capt. William Gobrell in charge. Mr. W. landed in Philadelphia, after a voyage of ninety-nine days, on the 26th of August, 1817. Some idea may be formed of the terrible suffering and distress felt by the 500 souls on board during this long voyage, when, after being out some days, ship fever in its worst form made its appearance on the vessel, and, before reaching port, 105 of the crew and passengers succumbed to the dreadful disease, and were buried at sea. Mr. Wiler, after landing at Philadelphia, was sent to the hospital, suffering from this malady, where he remained three months, until fully recovered, when he started on foot through Pennsylvania, accompanied by his nephew, John Ulrick Tanner, who came to America with him. Being ignorant of the language, he was frequently taken advantage of by some people on the route and defrauded out of what little money he had. The treatment he there received, often by those professing Christianity, caused him to have little faith in man's professions, and he thereafter judged men by their actions alone. After coming to Ohio, he stopped at New Lancaster about one year with a Mr. Arnold, who befriended him, and to whom he has always felt grateful. He went from Lancaster to Columbus, where he remained about one year engaged as a hostler by a Mr. Heyle. At the end of the time, he came to Mansfield. Mr. Wiler was married to Miss Margaret Steyer after an acquaintance of three weeks, whose father lived in Franklin Township, on the 25th of April, Sunday, 1819, and the following Monday morning took possession of the tavern then owned by his father-in-law, which has since that date been known as the "Wiler House." His means were so limited, that when ordering his sign he found that he would be unable to pay if his full name was used, when, at the suggestion of his nephew, Tanner, the name Jacob was omitted, and he was able to secure the sign, and since that date he has been known only by the name of John Wiler. Mrs. Margaret Steyer Wiler died in Mansfield in her 71st year May 25, 1868. John Wiler lives on West Fourth street, and was 100 years old on the 4th of June, 1880. John Wiler had nine children, three of whom are living—Mary Ann (Cook), John Ulrick Wiler, Margaret Louesa (Barr); two sons, grown to manhood, died in California of cholera; the others died in infancy and youth. In this year, there are living twelve grandchildren and four great-grandchildren.

WILER, JOHN U.; mechanic and jeweler. He was born in Mansfield April 20, 1824; he learned the jeweler trade in the city; in September, 1848, he formed a partnership with the late John A. Lee, which terminated in four years, when he continued the business until 1857; he was afterward connected with the sawmill for a number of years, since which time he has been engaged constantly at his present vocation, assisted by his sons, John J., Hervey H. and David Ephraim, who also are expert workmen. Mr. Wiler was married Nov. 14, 1850, to Miss Anna Louisa Robbins; they are the parents of three sons, named above, and one daughter, M. Eva.

WINTERS, GEORGE H.; printer and stationer; successor to E. B. Sturges & Co. He calls the attention of manufacturers, corporations, professional men, merchants, societies, banks, churches, farmers and others, that he is more fully prepared than ever to do every kind of printed work, such as pamphlets, legal briefs, posters, sale-bills, horse-bills, handbills, circulars, dodgers, cards, bill and letter heads, statements, envelopes, programmes, labels, tickets, invitations, checks, notes, tags, and all other descriptions of job printing in superior style; every order will have special attention, with first-class workmen; he has made recent additions of late-style type, fine presses, and all necessary elements of a successful printing office, making job printing a specialty (no newspaper connected with their concern), and with a disposition to please all patrons, and execute only the best class of work at the most reasonable prices.



WISE, GEORGE C., grocer; a descendant of a Pennsylvania family; his grandfather, Col. John Wise, having command of a Pennsylvania militia regiment in the war of 1812. Jacob Wise, the father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn., in the year 1802; he emigrated to Ohio, and settled in Mansfield in 1825. George C. Wise, the third child, was born on the 23d of October, 1828, on the northwest corner of Third and East Diamond streets, Mansfield; at the age of 18 years, he commenced the trade of cabinet-making, which he continued four years; on the 8th of August, 1853, he began in the store of Mr. E. Clapp as clerk, on the corner of Fourth and Main streets, and was taken into the firm as a partner, under the name of E. Clapp & Co., in 1865; in the year 1866, the firm of Clapp & Wise removed to the Miller Block, where they continued the business until Feb. 6, 1873, when Mr. Wise purchased the interest of E. Clapp, since which time he has carried on the business alone. George C. Wise was married in Mansfield Feb. 1, 1854, to Ellen M. Clapp, a daughter of his employer, to whom have been born six children, four of whom are living—Alice C., now Mrs. Frank D. Gadsby; Charles E., at present in business with his father; Lillie E. and Nettie B. George C. Wise holds the position of one of the representative business men of Mansfield.

WOLFF, BARNARD, carpenter; he was born in Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Penn., April 17, 1827, being the sixth child of David Wolff of that place; as soon as he arrived at a sufficient age, he entered a carpenter-shop to learn that trade, which he accomplished in the usual time; in the year 1849, while yet in poor circumstances, he was married to Miss Jane McCleary, a resident of Chambersburg; in the month of June, 1850, they removed to Mansfield, Ohio, where he has since resided; on the 9th day of October, 1875, his wife died after a long and painful illness, and on the 17th day of April, 1877, he was again married in Plymouth, to Miss McClinchey of that place; during Mr. Wolff's residence in Mansfield, he has been closely identified in the city's growth and her improvements; he is the owner and builder of the Sherman House, which he erected in 1870, on the northwest corner of Fourth and East Diamond streets, thereby adding much to the good appearance of that part of the city, and a benefit to the traveling public; Mr. Wolff has also been the contractor and builder of many of the larger edifices in the city, both public and private, and also the large depot and freight house at Orrville; during his residence in Mansfield, he has always been considered one of her stanch citizens; he resides on East Fourth street.

WOLFF, SAMUEL M., carpenter; Col. Wolff was born in Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Penn., June 1, 1839, and came with his parents to Richland Co. in 1854, where he worked with his father on the farm, two and one-half miles north of Mansfield, until the year 1859, when he came to Mansfield and commenced the trade of carpentering in the shop of his brother, where he served an apprenticeship of two years. At the breaking-out of the war in 1861, he enlisted in the first company organized in the evening of the noted 17th day of April; his name appears among the first in Co. I, 1st O. V. I., three-months service, under Capt. Wm. McLaughlin; with this company he served his full term of enlistment, and with it was in the two engagements of Vienna and the first battle of Bull Run. July 21, 1861, his term of service having expired, he returned to Mansfield and again commenced work at his trade, at which he continued until the 21st day of September, 1861, when he enlisted in an "independent rifle company" then being organized in the western part of the State; this company was rapidly being recruited when John Sherman returned with an order from Washington to organize the 64th and 65th Regiments; by the common consent of the independent company, they entered the 64th Regiment as Co. A, this being the first company in Camp Buckingham; while here, Mr. Wolff was made Second Lieutenant; the 64th and 65th Regiments, known while in Camp Buckingham as the "Sherman Brigade," were, after their departure from Mansfield, always known as the "Harker Brigade," and it was first assigned to the 3d Division, 21st Army Corps, and took part in the battle of Shiloh; after this battle, Lieut. Wolff was promoted to the first lieutenancy of the same company; soon after, he was engaged in the Buell raid and the battle of Stone River, Dec. 29, 1862, to Jan. 3, 1863; it was in this long engagement that Lieut. Wolff was slightly wounded by a fragment of shell, but not disabled; he was promoted to Captain of Co. H, and, as such, was in the battle of Chickamauga, Sept. 19 and 20, 1863; at the battle of Missionary Ridge, Ga., Nov. 25, 1863, Capt. Wolff received a gun-shot wound through the right arm, which compelled him to relinquish his command for about two months; afterward, with his company and regiment, he was engaged in numerous battles until the close of the war, among them the battle of Rocky Face Ridge, May 9, 1864; Resaca, May 14 and 15, 1864; New Hope Church, May 27, 1864; Kenesaw Mountain, June 27, 1864; Peach Tree Creek, July 20, 1864; Atlanta, July 22, 1864; Jonesboro, Sept. 1, 1864; Lovejoy Station, Sept. 3, 1864; Spring Hill, Tenn., Nov. 29, 1864, in which engagement Capt. Wolff was slightly wounded by gunshot through both legs; at the battle of Franklin, Nov. 30, 1864, during a charge of the enemy, Capt. Wolff became engaged in a hand-to-hand combat between the lines with Col. John B. Austin, of a Mississippi regiment; discharge of the regiment, Jan. 3, 1866, at Columbus, holding the commission of Colonel, acknowledged as a brave and good soldier, with an army record of which any man might well be proud; it is sad to think that, after doing this service for his country, he should be a constant sufferer in his after life. Col. Wolff was married in March, 1864, to Miss M. J. Browneller, who died in the year 1865. In 1868, he was again married, to Miss Susan Urvan, who died in Mansfield, in 1870. The Colonel is now a resident of Mansfield.

WOLFF, E. M. & CO., marble dealers. Their shops were established in 1869; since then they have greatly in-the Union forces falling back for a time, charged upon the enemy, who had captured the works, driving them out, when Wolff, coming up with Col. Austin, demanded his sword; but this he at first refused, and bravely defended himself, but was soon compelled to surrender and reluctantly delivered his sword to Wolff, who now has it in his possession; in the night of the 20th of June, 1864, Capt. Wolff received a wound on the head from a falling limb while in charge of a company of choppers, the effects of which he will, doubtless, carry to his grave, being now a constant sufferer and threatened with the loss of sight; in February, 1865, Capt. Wolff was promoted to Major of the regiment, and, soon after, was made Lieutenant Colonel, and was, at the creased their business; as time progressed they added machinery which no other firm in Ohio has in use, made necessary by the march of time, until now their shops are fully supplied with everything needed in the business; the character of the work attests its quality, while sales in all parts of this and adjoining States establish its merits; twenty-two men are now employed.

WOLFE, NORMAN M., born in Monroe Township, Richland Co., Ohio, July 6, 1849; engaged on the home farm for many years; took his academical course in Greentown Academy, at Perrysville, spending the winter term at teaching country schools, and finally promoted to the situation of Assistant Teacher of Mathematics in the academy. He attended the University of Wooster, and completed his education at Amherst College, Massachusetts; was elected Principal of Mahoning Institute, Mahoning Co., Ohio, in which position he remained until the spring of 1876; began the study of law on the 14th day of April, 1876; was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court, at Columbus, Ohio, May 7, 1878; formed a partnership with William H. Pritchard, for the practice of law, Dec. 1, 1879; the style of the firm is Pritchard & Wolfe, is enjoying a most enviable reputation as lawyers, and have their office in P. O. Block, North Park street, Mansfield, Ohio. Mr. Wolfe was married to Miss Jennie Leiter Sept. 22, 1877, and his family now consists of his wife and daughter, Grace May, aged 2 years. In politics, Mr. Wolfe is an active Democrat, holding official positions in the campaign clubs of his party, and, in the spring of 1879, was elected to the office of City Solicitor for Mansfield.

WOLFE, SAMUEL G., COL. (deceased), born in Wyoming Valley, Luzerne Co., Penn., in 1798; his father, Jacob Wolfe, dying, his mother, Eleanor Wolfe, with Samuel, Peter and Jacob, her sons, and Eliza, Maria, Catherine and Artemisia, her daughters, along with the Ayres families and the Culvers, emigrated to Ohio, the Wolfes and the Ayrses settling in Frederickstown, Knox Co., in 1807, being the second arrival to settle here. On the breaking-out of the war of 1812, Jacob volunteered, and went to the army, serving in the regiment of Col. Lewis Cass; Peter was a scout, and Samuel, being but 14 years of age, was compelled to stay with the family as a help against the Indians. The Wolfe family moved to Mansfield in 1812, where Eliza taught school and kept military stores in the block-house. The Wolfes lived on the northwest corner of the premises now occupied and owned by John Wood, on West Market street. When Samuel became of age, he carried on the cabinet business there for some years, until he was elected Sheriff of the county; he served in that capacity four years, and then was elected and re-elected Auditor of the county, serving four years; he was a Colonel in the militia, and has been efficient in its organization, as well as a popular officer; he was a man of commanding presence, and, like his brothers, large and over six feet in height. He exercised a great deal of influence in politics, and had many friends who desired to run him for Congress. He died in Seneca Co., Ohio, in 1868.

WOLFARTH, JACOB, stonemason. He was born March 24, 1854, in Holmes Co. Married, Jan. 17, 1875, to Lucy A. Smith, she was born in Seneca Co. May 26, 1854; they have the following children: Mary A., born March 24, 1876; Dorthea Barbary, Jan. 7, 1878. Residence 115 West First street, Mansfield.

WOLFERD, EZRA, shoemaker; son of George Wolferd. He was born April 17, 1831, in Franklin Township; he engaged as an apprentice in 1847 with David Wise, of Mansfield, and served three years; he has since that time been constantly engaged at his trade. He was married in 1854 to Feny Simmons, who was born in Germany; they have two children—Stephen, born April 8, 1856, and Della, July 26, 1860; Stephen was married to Minnie Longsdorf in 1879. Mrs. Feny Wolferd died in January, 1877. Mr. Wolferd is engaged with Rigby & Cox, working at his trade.

WOOD, JOHN, proprietor woolen mills. He was born Nov. 22, 1819, in Concord, Mass.; he came to Ohio in 1837, located in Cleveland, remained there one year, then came to Mansfield; engaged as clerk for E. P. Sturges, continued for six years; in 1847, he engaged in partnership with Sturges Grimes & Co., afterward changed to Sturges, Wood & Witter, wholesale merchants. He was married, Sept. 1, 1847, to Charlotte B. Parker, daughter of Judge Parker; she was born in 1823 in Mansfield; they have four children—Edward P., born Aug. 16, 1848; he graduated at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., and is now in the navy; Lizzie, William S. and Fannie P.

WORDEN, MILTON W. (deceased). Judge Worden was born in Liverpool, Medina Co., Ohio, Sept. 30, 1839; after coming to this county, he resided for a number of years in Washington Township, where he was married, Nov. 22, 1859, to Miss Anna McFarland, daughter of an old resident of that township. Placed at an early age, by the death of his father, in circumstances where it became necessary for him to depend in a large measure upon his own resources, he marked out for himself a path in life, which many a youth unaided by fortune and friends, would have been fearful to essay, and by his integrity, valor and ability, reached a position in his brief life of twenty-nine years, in and by which he commanded the regard of his fellow-men, the esteem and respect of his comrades and the warm affections of his familiar friends. Judge Worden, by a course of preparatory studies and reading, fitted himself for, and gained admission to, the bar; but the gates of the temple for him were closed almost simultaneously with his entrance. The tocsin of the mighty rebellion was sounded; the call of the country to arms was made, and he enlisted in the 32d O. V. I., in the beginning of the rebellion; while acting as Captain in that regiment at the battle of Harper's Ferry in 1862, he lost a leg, which incapacitated him for further service, when he returned to Mansfield and was elected Probate Judge for one term in the fall of 1864; he was shortly after appointed Assessor of Internal Revenue, which position he held at the time of his death. Judge Worden at the time of his death left a wife, Anna McFarland Worden, and five children—Ella, Martha E., Frank S., Albert Milton and Lillie, all of whom are living.

Too late for insertion in proper place.

BOWLAND, ROBERT. He was born Sept. 19, 1774, in Pennsylvania. Was married in 1815, to Ann J. Mercer, who was born in February, 1791; came to Ohio in 1826, located in Mansfield and engaged in the dry goods business many years. Died in November, 1857; Mrs. Bowland died in April, 1858.

PRITCHARD & WOLFE, attorneys and counselors at law. The firm is composed of William H. Pritchard and Norman M. Wolfe, both natives of this county; Mr. Pritchard graduated from the University of Wooster in 1874; he then superintended the Shelby schools from 1875 to 1878; he began the practice of law Dec. 1, 1878. Mr. Wolfe was educated at the University of Wooster, and, soon after leaving college, succeeded ot the principalship of Mahoning Institute, remaining there two years; resigning that charge, he returned to Richland Co., and, on the 14th of February, 1876, began the study of law; was admitted to the bar by the Supreme Court of Ohio on the 7th day of April, 1878, and, in December following, he formed a copartnership with William H. Pritchard for the practice of his profession. Their rooms are in the Post Office Block.

SNYDER, JOSEPH N., deceased; his parents, John and Susan Stough Snyder, were long residents of Cumberland Co., Penn.; Joseph was born in that county in 1813, and was their first son; he came to Richland Co. in 1835, where he resided until his death, which occurred in this city in the fall of 1869; when a young man, he acquired the trade of cabinet-maker, which vocation he followed for a number of years; for many years previous to his death, he was engaged in house-painting, and was accounted the best workman in that line in the city; he was a man well informed, and took an active interest in the political parties to which he belonged; originally, he was an Old-Line Whig, but was known in after years as an adherent of the Democratic party. He was married in this city to Miss Catherine Brickman; they were the parents of five children, four of whom are living—three sons and one daughter.

SNYDER, C. B., painter and glazier. He was born March 23, 1845, in Mansfield, the second son of Joseph N., deceased; he is now actively engaged at his trade in this city, and is considered an expert workman. He was married in Mansfield in 1867, to Miss Amanda Harmon; they are the parents of four children—Willie, Alice and Harry; Frank, the second son, died in 1875, aged 5 years.

BLOOMING GROVE TOWNSHIP.

ADAMS, THOMAS C., was born in Cumberland County, Penn., May 14, 1830, where he resided until the fall of 1851; he removed to Springfield, Clark Co.; he remained there about one year, when he went to La Fayette, Ind.; he stayed there about four years; while there he paid his attention to milling; he removed back to Cumberland County, on account of his health being somewhat impaired; after his removal to Pennsylvania, he still followed the business as a millwright until he removed to this county, in May, 1863; when he first settled here it was nothing but a wilderness; the second or third year after his removal here he built a saw-mill; it was burned down June 20, 1872, but by the kind assistance of a few neighbors and friends he was soon able to rebuild; the mill still stands, and runs a great part of the time. He was married Jan. 10, 1861, to Margaret A. Snyder, who was born in Perry County, Penn., March 29, 1840, where she resided until she, with her husband, removed to this county; the fruits of this marriage are three children: Robert A., who was born Oct. 28, 1861, in Perry County, Penn.; Anna M., born Nov. 25, 1864, in this county, and Mary Jane Grace, born Oct. 14, 1866, also in this county. Mr. Adams is a millwright by profession, although early in life he learned the tanning business, but never followed that vocation after leaving home. He has by strict economy made for himself and family a good home, now owning on the county line a good farm containing 76 acres, which he still manages aside from the management of his mill.

ADAMS, W. B., was born in Union Co., Penn., June 7, 1857; he resided there until 1875, and then came to this county, where he has since lived; his occupation since residence in the county has been buying and selling goods on the road for the firm of A. Sturgess & Co., He has given his employer entire satisfaction thus far; he intends to make this his future business.

ALBRIGHT, HENRY; was born in Clear Creek Township, Ashland Co., Ohio, April 2, 1847, where he resided until the age of 14 years, when he soon after went into the army. He was a member of Co. B, 102d O. V. I.; was enrolled on the 8th of August, 1862, and discharged in 1865, when he returned to his native place, where he resided for about two years, when he removed to this township, and has since resided here. Aug. 28, 1870, he was married to Miss Ellen Sonanstine. They have one child, a son—Arthur, aged 2 years. Mr. Albright is a blacksmith by trade, and carries on that business at this place, Shenandoah. This has been his occupation since the late war. He contracted the rheumatism while in the army, but has never made application for a pension, to which he is entitled. Mr. Albright has built up for himself here a very good trade, although his health does not permit him to labor hard.

ALLEN, J. W. He was born in Shenandoah Co., near Mt. Jackson, Va., Oct. 20, 1811. He resided there until the year 1854, when he came to this county, and has since resided here. He is by profession a merchant tailor, as well as a druggist, which business he now carries on in Rome. In the year 1833, on the 12th of September, he was married to Miss Catherine J. Sonanstine; they had four children, three of whom are living—Joseph F., James William, and Mary Jane. The one deceased—Virginia C.—died in 1864, at the age of 18 years 8 months and 14 days. Mr. A. studied and practiced medicine previous to his coming here, although he has not paid much of his attention to his profession at this place. He attended lectures at Jefferson College at Baltimore, Md.

ALSDORF, ADAM W. Was born in Ashland Co., Milton Township, then Richland Co., where he resided until the age of 32 years, when he removed to this township, where he has since resided. He has paid most of his attention to farming and dealing in stock. Mr. Alsdorf is now one of the Trustees of his township, which shows the estimation in which he is held by the people of the township which he represents. Feb. 4, 1865, he was married to Miss Minerva Gates; they have four children living—Arminda, Dora A., Cyrus A., and Herney C. The health of their family is good. Mr. Alsdorf has, by good management and strict attention to business, made for himself and family a good home. He enjoys the respect and esteem of all in the community in which he resides.

ANDERSON, WILLIAM C., Shenandoah; he was born in Preble Co., Ohio, Feb. 27, 1841, where he resided until the age of 11, when his parents removed to Randolph Co., Ind., where they remained about two years, when they came to Richland Co., where they have since resided. In 1857, Mr. Anderson learned the trade of shoemaker, at which he has worked, until within the past year he has been paying some attention to the shipping of stock, the purchase of hides and furs, and the boring of wells. In 1865, he was married to Elizabeth A. Burgoyne. Their four children are living—Lena Ann, Bettie E., Stella V. and Lois. During the war, Mr. Anderson enlisted in April, 1861, for three months; again, in 1862, for the same time; again in October of the same year; and when the three-months troops were called, he again went into the service—enlisting four different times, receiving an honorable discharge each time. Mr. Anderson never interested himself much in politics, but has been Township Trustee several terms.

ARMSTRONG, SAMUEL M., was born in Franklin Township, this county, on the 1st day of July, 1830; he resided here until the spring of 1841, when his parents removed to this township, and where he has since resided. Mr. Armstrong is by profession a shoemaker, and followed that until the war broke out, when he enrolled himself as a member of Co. F, 82d O. V. I., on the 30th day of November, and was discharged on the 25th of August, 1865; he was in the numerous battles the regiment was called upon to engage in; he received a gun-shot wound in the right hip at the battle of Dallas, in front of Atlanta. Since the war, Mr. Armstrong has been farming. In the fall of 1856, on the 16th of October, he was married to Miss Sarah J. Burns. They have had nine children, seven of whom are still living, and named Mary E., Flora Bell, George W., Nettie May, Eva A., Wilber B. and Frank N.; Mary Elizabeth is married; the ones deceased are Charley F., who died at the age of 2 years and 5 months; the youngest, Perry S., died at the age of 4 months. Mr. Armstrong's father and mother are still living, and reside with him. His father was born Dec. 29, 1800, in Adams Co., Penn. He was 2 years of age when he removed to this State, and at the age of 22 he came to this county, which makes him a resident of the county for a period of fifty-eight years.

ARMSTRONG, JOHN H., was born in this county on the 10th of December, 1836, and has since resided in the county, with the exception of the war. He enrolled himself as a soldier Aug. 25, 1861; he was a member of Co. M, 2d O. V. C., and was discharged Oct. 7, 1864. His vocation, principally, is that of farming. In the year 1866, he was married to Miss Susannah Pifer. They have reared a family of six children, all of whom are still living, with the exception of the last one, who died in infancy; the others are named, respectively, Effie M., Harold B., Tennie E., Virgia, Claudia and Florence. His wife died Jan. 26, 1880; she was a lady of exemplary character, and a consistent Christian.

BACKENSTO, ANTHONY J., was born in this county April 20, 1851, where he has since resided, and has lived in this township for a period of six years; his occupation has been that of farming all his life. In the year 1871, June 15, he was married to Miss Jane Eller; they have two children, both of which are still living, and named Ira E. and Ernestus C. The health of his family, together with himself, is not very good, and has not been since he removed to this place, he being troubled with the heart disease, while that of his wife and that of the oldest child is good, but the youngest has never been very rugged, although Mr. Backensto lives in one of the healthiest localities in his township, as well as one of the most pleasant; although the hand of disease has laid its hand upon him, he has the satisfaction to know that himself and family enjoy the respect of all in the community where he resides.

BAKER, PETER, was born in Germany Nov. 11, 1835; when at the age of 18 years, he came to this country and located in New York City, where he resided until the year 1868, when he removed to Ashland Co., where he remained three years; from there he removed to Windsor, this county, where he stayed six years; from there he moved back to Ashland County, where he lived a short time, when he moved back to this county, and located in this place, Rome, where he manufactures boots and shoes of all grades. He also has a notion store. His trade is that of shoemaker, and he has always made that his business. He learned the trade in Germany before he came to this country. In the year 1856, June 16, he was married to Miss Catherine Abeale, in New York City; they have had nine children, six of whom are still living, and named Leana, John, Frederick, Rosa, Augusta and Laura; three died in New York City, named Henry, Annie and Emma.

BAKER, GUSTAVUS B., was born in Hampshire Co., Va., on the 24th February, 1834, where he resided until the age of 4 years, when his parents removed to Cumberland Co., Penn., where they remained about five years, and from there they removed to Knox Co., Ohio, where they stayed one year, and from there to this township, where he has since resided, and has always paid the most of his attention to farming. In the year 1859, on the 14th of February, he was married to Miss Feann Stauffer; they raised a family of eight children, seven of whom are still living, and named Cornelius O., Mary E., Sarah E., Harry A., Augusta D., Perry B. and Alice M.; the one who died was Benjamin F.; he departed this life on the 19th of February, 1872, aged 12 years and 8 months.

BAKER, JOSIAH, was born in Cass Township, on the 7th of June, 1843, and has always resided in the county, although he has moved, from time to time, from one township to another, and has recently sold his farm in this township and purchased one in Franklin, where he intends to make his future home. Mr. Baker has never turned his attention to political matters to any great extent, although he has represented his township as Trustee two terms, and is now Supervisor and School Director. In the year 1865, on the 27th of May, he was married to Miss Sarah Arnold; they have a family of four children, three of whom are still living—Lizzie M., George B. and Curtiss C.; Andrew S. departed this life on the 13th of December, 1866, aged 3 months and 24 days. He has always paid his attention to farming, and, by good management and strict attention to business, has made for himself and family a good home.

BARR, JOHN C., was born in Noble Co., Ind., on the 27th of September, 1855, where he resided until the age of 2 years, when he removed to this county and where he has since resided; Mr. Barr is by profession a blacksmith, which he carries on at Ganges; he is considered by all to be proficient at the business. In the year 1877, he was married to Miss Libbie A. Stoer; they have no children.

BASHORA, ISAIAH, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., on the 26th of April, 1833; at the age of 2 years, his parents removed to the State of New York, where they resided about ten years, when they came to this State and located in Shelby, where they lived about six years; thence they went to Bucyrus, where they remained until 1848, when they removed to Wisconsin, where they lived two and one-half years; they then returned to Bucyrus, where our subject remained until 1858, and thence he removed to this township, and has remained here ever since, with the exception of six months in Wood Co. and four years at Shiloh. In the year 1853, on Feb. 12, he was married to Miss Suzanah Hess; they have a family of four children, three of whom are living—Henrietta, Maggie J. and Ruehamie; the one deceased, Esther, departed this life in August, 1858. Mr. B. is by profession a blacksmith, and he, together with Mr. Burns, carries on that business at Rome in all its branches, where they do work right and at prices to suit the times.

BELLMAN, ANDREW J., was born in Middleburg, Portage Co., Ohio, Aug. 12, 1836; when at the age of 6 months, his parents removed to Plymouth, in this county, since which time he has resided in this county; in 1871, he removed to this township, which place has since been his home; at the age of 15 years, he commenced at the cabinet and chair making business, which trade he has made his vocation until his removal here at Shenandoah, where he has been engaged, together with his trade of carriage and wagon making, as well as the carpenter trade, house-painting and turning, and also paper-hanging—in all of which he is considered proficient. In the year 1858, on Jan. 28, he was married to Miss Mary Jane Sonanstine; they have had six children, four of whom are still living—Carrie, Eddie, Fred and Florence J.; the ones that died were Kittie and an infant. Mr. Bellman now carries on a repair-shop at this place, where he does and designs to repair anything that can be done by mechanical skill.

BENEDICT, ABRAHAM, was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Aug. 11, 1834, where he resided with his parents until the age of about 7 years, when he removed with his parents to this county and township, where he has resided ever since, with the exception of about two years, when he resided in Williams and Ashland Cos. about seven years. In the year 1857, Feb. 22, he was married to Mary E. Stoner; they have raised a family of four children—Henry N., Sarah Ann, Albert and Almira; all are still living, and Mr. Benedict has, by strict integrity and good management, made for himself and family a good home, and while himself and family enjoy good health, they enjoy the regard of all who know them; the father is dead, having died in Michigan; his mother is still living with his sister, Margaret B., in Iowa, near the State line.

BRICKER, LEVI, was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., on the 19th of December, 1817, where he resided until the age of 21 years, when he removed to this county and located in Franklin Township and rented a little cabin of his uncle, and worked out by the day's work. Mr. Bricker possessed only what he could bring in a one-horse wagon—wearing apparel, a few dishes, etc., $160 in money, his wife and one child. In the fall, Mr. Bricker began butchering for 75 cents per day, but soon after, his wages were raised to $1 per day. Soon after, his brother-in-law gave him his two horses to go and trade for a stallion owned by one Gideon Lozier; he went and traded one of the horses, gave $30 to boot, payable in one year, and that rigged him for farming. This was the first of the year 1840. He rented a small place from the same party he made the trade with, containing 80 acres; he cleared 3 acres for three crops, but Mr. Lozier having married again, he sold his crops to him and came over to this township and located on John Arnold's place, and bought the crops on the grounds from one Mr. Livey, who had the place rented. Mr. Bricker lived there two years; then he bought 80 acres of land in Franklin Township, all forest; built him a little cabin, into which he moved in the spring of 1843; he cleared his land in about three years, together with 10 acres of Philip Fisher's land adjoining his; he borrowed the money to purchase his land from his father-in-law, David Werner; the amount was $500; he paid him back annually with 5 per cent interest; he earned a great part of his money by driving horses over the mountains; he made his first trip in 1845 with nine horses; a great part of the way he went alone. Mr. Bricker followed that as his vocation every year until he located in this township in 1852. Sometimes Mr. Bricker would have to walk back a great part of the way, as he could not get room on the coach; he never came back but what he would always bring his money with him—from $1,000 to $4,000, not in drafts, but generally in Lebanon bank money, which was just as good as the gold out here; he was never robbed, nor was there ever any attempt to rob him. He bought the place which he now occupies in 1851, together with 44 acres, paying cash, $1,500. Previous to this purchase, he bought the 160 acres east of here for $1,600 cash, but had to borrow $400; his father-in-law went his security. Mr. Bricker is considered one of the most successful business men in the county; has given work to a great many men; has always lent his aid in all public improvements, and is considered one of the largest land-owners in this part of the county. He has, by good management, and strict attention to business, made for himself and family a good home, having given his children over $50,000. Mr. Bricker well remembers when he would go through with horses, porters would say along the road that dealt in stock, as also in Philadelphia they would often make the remark: "There comes Bricker; and what he tells you about his horses, you can rest assured is correct." Mr. Bricker made, net, over $1,600 in two trips with horses over the mountains. Mr. Bricker had by his first wife ten children, nine of whom are living. By his second wife three, all of whom are living. Mr. Tobias Coffman, of Lancaster, Penn., claims that Mr. Bricker can beat any man in America on the "jig dance;" he says he will bet his last dollar on him as regards time.

BURGOYNE, GEORGE, was born in Dolphin Co., Penn., on the 28th of June, 1802, where he resided until the year 1833, when he removed to this township, and where he has since resided. Mr. Burgoyne is a tanner by profession, and followed that as his vocation until the year 1840, since when he has paid his attention to farming. In the year 1830, on the 25th of March, he was married to Miss Anna Bell; they have a family of five children, all of whom are living, named Alfred, Hannah Jane, John P., George A, and Elizabeth Ann. Mr. Burgoyne is one of the oldest surviving settlers of this county, and he, together with his brother associates, can recall many hardships and privations that he had to contend with, that the present, as well as the future generations, will never know nor experience.

BURGOYNE, JOHN P., was born in this township on the 13th of June, 1836, where he has since resided. Mr. Burgoyne has always paid his attention to farming. He has never paid much attention to political matters. In the year 1862, on the 5th of March, he was married to Miss Elisabeth Cline; they have one son—George F.

BURNS, JAMES A., was born in this township Jan. 24, 1841, and has always resided here, with the exception of three years he was in the late war; he enlisted Sept. 7, 1861; was a member of Co. E, 3d O. V. I.; he was discharged Oct. 3, 1864. Mr. Burns is a blacksmith by trade, having learned the trade at the age of 18 years, and has since followed that as his vocation; he now carries on the blacksmithing business at this place (Rome), where he does all kinds of work pertaining to the business. On the 12th of July, 1865, he was married to Miss Elisabeth Burns, who was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Feb. 18, 1838; they have four children, all of whom are living—Charles F., Clinton, Victor L. and Minnie. The health of himself and family is good. Mr. Burns has, by strict attention to business, built up for himself a good trade.

BURNS, WILLIAM F., was born in this county and township April 1, 1843; his principal vocation has been that of farming; he engaged himself at the carpenter trade for about three years. He is the eighth child of William and Mary Burns, of whom mention is made in another part of this work, as their lives are connected with the early part of the county. In the year 1870, Jan. 25, he was married to Miss Lovina Zeigler. They have raised a family of five children, named Curtis A., Flora E., Scott A., Carrie L. and the baby. Mr. Burns was a member of Co. F, 82d O. V. I., and was enrolled on the 5th of November, 1862, and was discharged from the service the 24th of July, 1865, at Louisville, Ky.; he participated in all the different battles and marches that his regiment was called upon to participate and engage in, having, during his time of service, marched a distance of over three thousand miles, as the records will show; he entered the service as private, and was discharged with the rank of corporal.

CARROTHERS, JAMES, was born in Washington Township, this county, April 6, 1830, where he resided until the age of 15 years, when he went to Williams Co., where he learned the carpenter trade; remained there until he finished his trade, when he went to Michigan, where he stayed two years; then to Wisconsin, where he remained until 1857, when he removed to the State of Minnesota; stayed there one summer, then started for the frontier, in Upper Minnesota, where he remained until he was compelled to leave on account of Indian troubles in 1862; his wife and two children were captured; he then volunteered to fight the Indians, which service he served about two weeks; in the mean time his wife and children made their escape; he then enrolled himself as member of the 1st Wisconsin Battery, where he remained until the war closed, when he returned to the frontier and commenced work at his trade again; worked about five years, disposed of his land, then went to Iowa, where he stayed about two years, and at the expiration of that time he came back to his native county and located in this township, where he has since resided and worked at his trade until now, with the exception of what time he spent in inventing a sawing machine, which is considered by all a very valuable improvement in sawing timber of all kinds—can work it by hand or steam power; it is so constructed that two men can saw twenty cords of wood in one day, with perfect ease, by hand-power, without the use of steam or horse power; they can saw large timber as well as small; the inventor has taken in with him a partner, and if they take the pains to show the merits of this machine, it will soon be in use all over our land, as it is conceded by all who have seen it work to have no equal of anything of its kind yet invented. He was first married to Miss Helen Marr-Paddock; they had two children, who are still living, named Althir and Thomas W. He married his second wife, Miss Mary Jane Ferguson, Jan. 18, 1876; they have two children—Albert A. and Elisabeth Jane, who are still living. Himself and family enjoy good health, and have the regards of all around them.

CHEW, EZEKIEL, Sr. (deceased), was born May 13, 1805, near Winchester, Va.; while he was the infant of the family, his father, the late William Chew, came to Ohio and settled in Harrison Co., and at the age of 17 he came to Richland Co., with his uncle Thomas Dickerson, learning from his uncle the trade of a blacksmith, which business he followed for sixteen years. In the mean time, May 27, 1827, at the age of 22, he and Elizabeth Hackett were married, and settled on the land which is now a part of his "homestead farm." His wife died February, 1847, leaving six children in his care. He again married, on June 24, 1850, Amanda M. Phelps; two children were born, Ezekiel Martin and Laroka Phelps. Our subject was time and again chosen as the Magistrate of his township, and, in the charge of his official duties, so wisely counseled, that but little litigation was carried on. In 1848, he was elected by the General Assembly an Associate Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of this county, occupying the bench with Judges Steward, McCullough and Barr, and remained there until the office of Associate Judge was discontinued by the new constitution. In the discharge of his judicial duties, he was prompt, able and honest. The older members of the bar of Richland Co., without exception, bear cheerful testimony that the judicial robes were by him unsullied. His political convictions were strong, always acting with the Democratic party. He was one of the charter members of the Rome Lodge of I. O. O. F., No. 158. He was for many years a member of the Masonic Order, and of Mansfield Lodge, No. 36. By his brethren of Mansfield and other lodges, his mortal remains were consigned to the tomb.

CHEW, EZEKIEL M., was born July 2, 1851, on the farm on which he now resides and owns. July 4, 1876, he was married to Alverda E. Ferrell, by whom he has one son, Oro Lotis. Mr. Chew is a member in good standing in four secret orders. He joined the I. O. O. F. in 1878, and the Moriah Encampment in 1874, and the Patrons of Husbandry in 1875, and the Royal Arcanum in 1879. His political convictions are strong, and very zealous, always acting with the Democratic party.

CHEW, WILLIAM M., was born in Jefferson Co., this State, on the 2d day of July, 1829, where he resided until the age of 15, when his parents removed to this township, where he has since resided; Mr. Chew has paid the most of his attention to farming. In the year 1853, he was married to Miss Chew, who died in 1867; they reared a family of four children, who are still living, and named Franklin P., George W., Thomas J. and Rubie A.; in 1872, he was again married, to Miss Matilda Whisler; they have a family of five children, four of whom are living—Viola, Maud, Alpheus and Pere; the one deceased died in infancy.

CHEW, AMIE, MRS., is the widow of the late Joseph Chew, who died on the 5th of October, 1877, and who was born in Jefferson Co., this State, in the year 1831; when 10 years old (in 1841), his parents removed to this county, where he lived until his death; he was a teacher by profession; he was married to Miss Amie Charles on the 23d of March, 1864; they reared a family of six children, all of whom are still living, and named Lettie A., Mary E., Silas S., Clement V., Clara C. and Emily W. The health of Mrs. Chew's family is generally good; she is able to attend to the management of her place and keep four of her children at school. They all enjoy the regards of all in the community in which they reside.

CHEW, AMON S.; he is the son of William and Leddie Chew. William Chew was born in October, 1770, in the State of Maryland, and Mrs. Chew was born in old Virginia about the year 1787. Our subject, Mr. Amon Chew, was born in Harrison Co., this State, Oct. 15, 1811, and, about the year 1822, his parents removed to this county, Monroe Township, where they resided until their death; Mr. Chew lived there about twelve years, and then removed to this township, and has resided here ever since; his mother died in the year 1855, and his father, William Chew, died in the fall of 1866; this subject is the thirteenth child of his parents, who raised a family of seventeen children; he has resided in this township since the year 1834. In the following year after he located here, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Gutherie; they raised a family of two children; his wife died Dec. 18, 1837; in the year 1839, on April 2, he was again married, to Miss Mary Hackett; they raised a family of six children, only one of whom, Elizabeth (the wife of J. G. Hackett) is now living; Mr. Chew's second wife died Sept. 30, 1878. He has been from time to time elected to offices of trust, such as Assessor and Treasurer for several years of his township. He has, by strict economy and good management, made for himself a good home. He enjoys the respect and esteem of all who know him; his oldest son, William, died while serving his country during the war in the capacity of Sergeant.

CHEW, E. J., was born Dec. 18, 1853, in this township, and is the second and youngest child of George H. and Sarah P. Chew, who was also born in this county; his father died twenty-one years ago, his mother the following year; after the death of his parents, his uncle, Amon Chew, took him to raise when but a mere boy; he remained with his uncle until the age of 16 years, when he went out into the world for himself, and has from time to time followed different vocations; he is a blacksmith by trade, and a railroader; he has also paid some attention to farming; in 1875, he took a trip to California, but, not liking the country, and the climate not agreeing with him as well as his native place, he only remained there about nine months, when he returned home.

CLELAND, WILLIAM, farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Shiloh: he was born in Washington Co., Penn., June 18, 1816; his parents, John and Margaret Cleland, settled on the northwest quarter of Section 9, in Township 23, Range 18, in 1824; his father drove a four-horse team from the East, when they emigrated, and his mother rode on horseback, carrying one child; the parents were natives of Washington Co.; the father was of Irish parentage, the mother of German; about two years after settling in this county, the father died, leaving the mother and a family of six small children; the eldest child left home to learn a trade, and to the next, the subject of this sketch, fell the burden of aiding his mother in a struggle for existence; he was then about ten years of age; by industry and hard labor the farm was cleared and made remunerative. The nearest mill was on the Huron River, seven or eight miles away; he took the grist there for grinding, sometimes using the oxen and the sled, sometimes the corn was put in one end of a sack, a stone in the other, and thrown over a horse on which he was mounted. Plymouth was the post office; no school or church was in the neighborhood; when the schoolhouse was built, greased paper served for window lights, slabs answered for seats, and, on Sabbaths, divine service supplanted the educational routine of the week days. Mr. C. was married to Charlotte Cline Jan. 8, 1844; they have seven children—Elisabeth, Celesta, Margaret, Jairus, Hattie, Ida and Henry. After Mr. C.'s marriage, he remained on his father's farm, which he finally purchased, adding to it till he now owns 320 acres of well-improved land, with good buildings. He has held the office of Township Trustee several years, and has all his life been an active and useful citizen.

CLELAND, AMAZIAH, was born in Washington Co., Penn., Oct. 11, 1822. At the age of 2 years, his parents removed to this township, where Mr. Cleland has since lived, with the exception of about eighteen years he spent in Huron Co. (New Haven). He is the youngest of six children of John and Margaret Cleland. He was married, April 1, 1849, to Ellen L. Stewart, who was born in Steuben Co., Penn., in 1829. They have seven children, of whom five are living, named Ezra S., William, Emline B., Herman W. and Edna; the ones that died are named Wilson and Phebe. Mr. Cleland is by profession a blacksmith, and followed that vocation, from time to time, for a period of five years; he has also been in the mercantile business about seven years, and the balance of his life has been spent on the farm; his eldest son, Ezra S., is married.

CLINESMITH, WM. H., was born in this county on the 11th of December, 1846, where he has always lived; he has always paid the most of his attention to farming, although he is by profession a carpenter and also a millwright; he has worked at both of these vocations from time to time. Dec. 11, 1872, he was married to Miss Sarah Wood; they have had three children, all living—Jessie, Charles K., and Elswood.

COBBAN, CHARLES I., is the youngest child of James and Sarah Cobban. His father was born in Scotland in 1811; he came to this country in 1835, and came to this county in 1854; he was married twice—first to Helen Webster; by this marriage he became the father of seven children—named John, James, James (2d), Isabel, William A., Francis M. and Mary Ellen; only two are living, William A. and Isabel. His second wife's name was Sarah Beattie, who bore him four children—named James A. and Charles I., who are still living; the ones that died were Mary C. and Maggie. Both his wives were born in Scotland. Charles I. Cobban was born Nov. 25, 1857, in this township, and has always lived here; he was married Feb. 6, 1878, to Alwilda Robbins, who was born in Wakeman, Huron Co., Nov. 29, 1859, and has resided in this county six years. Mr. Cobban has always been a farmer.

CRAWFORD, WILLIAM, was born in Washington Co., Penn., Oct. 18, 1808, where he resided until the age of 15 years, when he removed to this State, Columbia Co., where he resided until the age of 28 years, when he came to this township on the 6th of March, 1833; he remembers the time well; the ground was covered with snow; he can recall the many hardships of himself and family in the days that are past and gone; at the age of 15 years, Mr. Crawford commenced to learn the carpenter trade, which he followed until he was able to buy a house of his own, since which time—about fifteen years—he purchased a farm, and has paid most of his attention to farming; he has also been Trustee of his township; in the year 1839, Feb. 23, he was married to Miss Nancy Quinn. Mr. Crawford has, by hard work, good management and strict attention to business, made for himself and wife a good home.

CREVELING, A. W., was born in Columbia Co., Penn., Jan. 17, 1841, where he resided until the age of 7 years, when his parents removed to this county and located in Cass Township, where they remained about seven years, when they removed to this township, where he has since resided. Mr. Creveling is the fifth child of Jacob and Martha M. Creveling, who raised a family of seven children, all of whom are dead, with the exception of this subject. Mr. Creveling's father died Oct. 2, 1878; his mother is still living, and resides with him. Mr. Creveling has paid the most of his attention to farming, buying and feeding stock. In 1868, July 4, he was married to Miss Zoradah Burns; they have raised a family of three children—Verda, Dora and Boyd, all of whom are still living. He has held the office of Justice for three years; he was elected on the Republican ticket.

CROSIER, WILLIAM, was born in Juniata Co., Penn., Sept. 17, 1826; at the age of 8 years, his parents removed to this county; in the spring of 1855, he went to California, where he remained about three years, when he came back to this county, where he has since resided. He was married, July 10, 1854, to Eveline Shamp, who was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, Dec. 4, 1836; when a babe, her parents removed to Huron Co.; resided there until the age of 10 years, when her parents came to this county, where she has since lived. They have had eleven children, five of whom are still living—Nora J., Mary Ida, Emma, Albert and Charles B.; those that died are named Annie, Bell, Ruby, Bertha, Thomas and Hattie. Mr. Crosier has always farmed as his vocation, which business he still follows.

DAVIS, SAMUEL, was born in Columbiana Co. Jan. 29, 1831; when 2½ years old, his parents removed to Clear Creek Township, Ashland Co.; he lived there until the age of 19, when he removed to Butler Township, and has since lived in different townships in this county, with the exception of about two years he resided in Ashland Co.; he has always farmed from boyhood; has part of the time traveled on the road, selling different articles of merchandise. He was married April 24, 1851, to Louisa J. Barns, who was born in Huron Co., where she lived until the age of 8 years, when she came to this county, and has always lived here since; they have had four children, three of whom are still living—Almira Cordelia, Mary L. and Minnie Maud; Elisabeth Jane departed this life Jan. 4, 1878, aged 26 years, 8 months and 11 days. She was married to Mr. George Wolfersberger; Almira C. is married to Sylvanus Hodges.

DE LANCY, JOHN, was born in Cass Township Oct. 22, 1848, where he resided until 28 years of age, when he removed to this township, and has since resided here. He was married, Sept. 4, 1873, to Louisa Huston, who was born on the place Mr. DeLancy now owns, she was born Sept. 16, 1854; they have had two children, both are living and named Sarah Ann and Lizzie. Mr. De Lancy has followed farming, although for the past two years, he has been engaged in selling the combined Hubbard reaper and mower, manufactured at Fremont, Ohio, in which capacity he has met with decided success, as the machine he represents is first class in every respect, and is conceded by all who are acquainted with the machine, to be as good for all purposes as any others manufactured. Mr. De Lancy is agent for a part of Huron and Richland Counties.

DEVORE, PHILIP C., was born in this county and township and on the farm which he now owns and resides; but about twelve years ago he removed with his family to Kansas, where he resided about eight years, when he moved back to this county, and located on the farm aboye mentioned; Mr. Devore was born Dec. 18, 1842, and has paid the most of his attention to the livery business, has also been in the merchandise business; but of late his business has been that of farming. In the year 1866, April 2, he was married to Margaret Sutch; they have raised a family of four children, three of whom are still living, named Allen, Elipphlet, Dora and a babe, aged 8 months, named Harry; the one that is dead was an infant; this subject is the third child of Soxley and Cathrine Devore. DICKERSON, THOMAS, farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Shiloh. Mr. D. was born in Harrison Co., Ohio, July 11, 1822; his parents brought him to Blooming Grove in October of the same year. His earliest recollections are those concerning wolves and Indians. He often hid himself under the bed when they would come to the cabin. He enjoyed the meager facilities of the day for getting an education. He remained with his parents till 21 years of age. Nov. 30, 1843, he was married to Susannah Miller, by whom he had nine children, six boys and three girls—William, Manuel, Angeline, George, Ambrose, Irena, Ellis, Ellsworth and Amon. He and his wife and two daughters remain on the farm, which he entered at the land office at Wooster in 1819. Mr. D.'s father was a native of Fayette Co., Penn.; he came to Harrison Co., and was married to Mary Chew in 1819. In this county he lived until 1822, when he came to this county, entered a quarter-section and on it built his cabin. He had learned the blacksmith trade, which, in his condition, was a great advantage; as such, he was of great value to the Indians, who frequently came to his shop for the repairs of their rude tools. In the history of the township, several incidents are narrated concerning his life here. He lived on the farm until his death, Sept. 10, 1845.

DICKERSON, GEORGE O., was born in this county Aug. 22, 1852, where he has since resided. He has always followed farming as his vocation; he has also followed saw-milling for about three years. He was married, Dec. 17, 1876, to Annie Mary Adams; they have one child—Almeda.

Mr. Lybarger during the late war served in the 2d O. N. G. as Second Lieutenant as well as Captain.

LYBARGER, EDWIN B., was born in Knox Co., near Monroe Mills, on the 16th of August, 1855; he resided with his parents until the age of 10 years, when they removed to the State of Illinois, where they remained about eighteen months, when they removed back to Knox Co., where they stayed about three years, when our subject removed to this township and remained about three years; he removed to Knox Co., where they stayed about two years, when he came back to this county, where they stayed about two and a half years; then he went back to Illinois again, where they remained about fourteen months; from there he went to Iowa and located in Wayne Co., where he remained about five months, and from there he came back to this township, where he has since resided. Mr. Lybarger has paid most of his attention to farming, although he has been in the saw-mill business, as also many other vocations; he has from time to time walked the rope from one building to another at quite an elevation. He is at present a student of medicine and expects to become a physician and surgeon. On the 20th of May, 1878, he married Miss Annie Terman, who bore him one child—a little girl named Mabel A.

McCLAIN, JOHN K., wagon and carriage maker, Shenandoah; he was born near Jeromeville, Ashland Co., March 14, 1836. When a child, his parents removed to Canal Fulton, removing again to Ashland when he was 16 years of age. Here he learned carriage-making, and removed to Blooming Grove Township, Richland Co. In 1857, he engaged in the carriage and wagon manufacturing business in Shenandoah, and soon established a good trade. In 1869, he gave his attention to the manufacture of handles of all kinds, and, in 1872, was employed as salesman for machinery and farming implements in general. In 1876, he returned to the manufacture of handles, rakes, etc., and has established a good business, generally employing about ten hands. He was married, in 1857, to Angeline Sonanstine; they have five children—Arabella, Clara, John C., Cora and Albert. Mr. McClain's business qualifications have enabled him, with a good deal of hard labor, to secure for himself and family a good home, where they live in the enjoyment of good health and the respect of the community.

McCORMIC, DAVID, was born in Ashland Co., Mifflin Township, Aug. 2, 1844. At the age of 2 years, his parents removed to Hancock Co., where they stayed one year; from there they returned to this county, where Mr. McCormic has since resided. He has lived in this township about nine years. He was married, Dec. 3, 1868, to Lydia Harlan, who was born in Ashland Co. Mr. Nellson was married, Nov. 2, 1855, to Rebecca Quin, who was born in this township Feb. 20, 1824, and has always lived in the township; the fruits of this marriage are five children—Esther Jane, Margaret Ann, Nancy, John A. and Charles Nellson. Mr. Nellson is by profession a carpenter, and has followed his trade from time to time during life; he has also carried on his farm, which he still manages.

NOBLE, JOHN A., is the fourth child of William and Margaret Noble, who was born in Butler Township, this county, Jan. 15, 1836, where he resided until the year 1853, when he removed to this township, and has always resided here, with the exception of one year he spent in Montana Territory. His father was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., March 30, 1801; he settled in this county about 1832, where he still resides; his mother was born March 31, 1798, in Washington Co., Penn., and died July 9, 1870; they had six children, four of whom are still living—Hannah, Jane, John A. and Margaret E.; those that died were named Mary A. and William W. John A., was married, Jan. 3, 1871, to Adeline M. Howard, who was born in Ripley Township, Huron Co., this State, Oct. 9, 1848; they have four children—Hennie, Sumner, Wade and a babe 10 months old. Mr. Noble has from boyhood followed farming, and still makes that his business.

OMAN, WM. W., was born in Columbia Co., Penn., on the 1st of March, 1850; he resided there until 3 years of age, when his parents removed to Kalamazoo Co., Mich, where he resided about ten years, when he removed to this township, where he has since lived, with the exception of about three years when he returned to Michigan, where he remained for that time; Mr. Oman has always paid his attention to farming, and is said to be proficient at the business. In the year 1872, on the 5th of March, he was married to Miss Sarah J. Tucker; they have a family of three children—Charles C., William W. and Maudie M.

OMAN, CLARK, was born in Kalamazoo Co., Mich., on the 8th of June, 1855, where he resided until the year 1877, when he removed to this township, where he has since resided; Mr. Oman has always been a farmer, and it is claimed by all that he makes a success of it. He has never been married; his sister keeps house for him; Mr. Oman has a brother with him, J. F., who has recently come from Michigan, and should the county suit may make this his future home.

ONEAL, JAMES A., was born in Norwalk, Huron Co.. this State, on the 14th of October, 1852; he resided there until the age of 14, when he engaged himself to the Lake Shore Railroad Co., in which place he remained for four years; from there he went to Greenwich, where he stayed one year, and then went back to the railroad one year; from that, he went into the saw-mill business; from there he went to Wyandot Co., where he remained over two years, and then to Wood Co., where he remained two years; from there he went to Delphi, and from there he came here, where he has since remained, and has charge of, and runs, the saw-mill located at this place. Mr. Oneal is a millwright by profession, and is considered by good judges to be proficient at the business. On the last day of June, 1872, he was married to Miss Margaret Kooken; they have a family of three children—Elmina M., John W. and William.

PARRISH, HUGH L., REV., deceased,* was born in Pembroke, Genesee Co., N. Y., Nov. 29, 1812, and died in Rome, Richland Co., Ohio, June 17, 1879. He was converted Aug. 12, 1827, when 15 years old, at the close of a Methodist class-meeting. His mother belonged to the Baptist Church, but he, feeling drawn toward the Methodist Episcopal Church, and she, believing he was a Christian, and yet forbidden by her church to commune with her son, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church with him. He always attributed his early conversion and love for the church to the example and prayers of a pious mother. He was licensed to exhort in Mercer Circuit, Pittsburgh Conference, by Cornelius Jones, July 13, 1833. He was licensed to preach, June 3, 1835, at Salem, Penn., Alfred Brunson, Presiding Elder. He commenced the itinerant's life in October, 1836, under the direction of Adam Poe, Presiding Elder of Wooster District, on Richfield Circuit, George Smith in charge. He was admitted to the Michigan Conference, on trial, in the fall of 1837, and sent to Wooster Circuit with George Smith and Thomas H. Dunn. Bishop W. L. Harris entered the traveling connection at the same conference. His remaining appointments were as follows: In 1838, Wellington, James Brewster in charge; 1839, Medina Circuit, John L. Ferris, Assistant, ordained Deacon at Ann Arbor in 1839, by Bishop Soule; 1840–41, Dover Circuit, ordained Elder at Wooster in 1841, by Bishop Roberts; 1842–43, Brunswick Circuit; 1844–45, Amherst Circuit, Joseph Santley, Assistant; 1846–47, Berea; 1848, Medina Circuit, W. C. Pierce in charge; 1849, Medina Circuit, William Spafford, Assistant; 1850, Sullivan Circuit; 1851, Olivesburg Circuit, J. Scoles, Assistant; 1852, Olivesburg Circuit, R. H. Chubb, Assistant; 1853, Sullivan Circuit; 1854–55, Jeromeville Circuit, P. R. Roseberry, Assistant; 1856–57, Mansfield; 1858–60, Presiding Elder Mansfield District; 1861, agent Ohio Wesleyan Female College at Delaware; 1862, Chaplain 102d Regt. O. V. I.; 1863–64, Berea; 1865–67, Taylor street, Cleveland; 1868–70, Lorain street, Cleveland; 1871–72, Galena Circuit; 1873–75, Pelton avenue, Cleveland; 1876, Shiloh Circuit; 1877–78, superannuated; 1879, transferred from earth to heaven. He was twice married. His first wife was Jemima Darrow, who left two children—daughters—at her death, both living. His second wife was Abbie A. Ingham, the comfort of his infirm old age. Brother Parrish was one of the old-school preachers, the pioneers of Methodism in the West, whose college was experience; whose teacher, the Holy Spirit; whose study, the saddle.

*From his obituary notice.

PARRISH, MRS. ABBIE A., is the widow of the late Rev. Hugh L. Parrish, who departed this life on the 17th of June, 1879, whose portrait and life will be found elsewhere in this work. Mrs. Parrish was born in New London Co., Conn., on the 1st of January, 1828; when at the age of 8 years, her parents removed to this State, where she has since resided; she commenced going to school when quite young and was an attentive pupil; she attained for herself an education sufficient to teach school, which vocation she followed for a few years, when she quit teaching and went to the Ohio Wesleyan Female College at Delaware, this State, where she graduated with honor, and from that time until her marriage with the late Rev. Hugh C. Parrish, Feb. 7, 1860, she followed her profession as teacher in the high school; her husband and herself by their united energies had made for themselves a good home, and, at his death, she fell sole heir to all. Her health is somewhat impaired, but she is still able to attend to the management of her farm. She enjoys the respect of every one who knows her.

PAUL, MATILDA, is the widow of the late Mr. Andrew Paul, who departed this life on the 17th of April, 1872. Mrs. Paul was born in Beaver Co., Penn., on the 4th of June, 1817, where she resided until the age of 19, when she paid her uncle a visit in this township, but never returned to her native home, as she married Mr Paul on the 2d of January, 1840, and has since resided here. They reared a family of eight children, six of whom are still living and named Margaret Ann, William M., Mary J., Andrew E., Matilda and Nancy C.; those deceased are named Elizabeth, who died after marriage, and Rebecca Ann, who died in infancy. Her son Andrew A. is unmarried, resides at home and carries on the farm, and three daughters, unmarried, are still at home; the rest of her children are married.

PITTENGER, IRA L., was born in Rome, this township, Dec. 16, 1852, where he has since resided, with the exception of about one year, when he resided in Weller Township. He was married Nov. 19, 1876, to Ida V. Backenstо, who was born in this county, where she has always lived; they have two children—Loyd O. and a baby. Mr. Pittenger is by profession a school teacher, which vocation he followed in the winter season; in the summer he pays his attention to farming; he has also followed the business of buying produce through the county for a period of four seasons. He has never missed a winter at school, either as pupil or teacher, since he was 5 years of age; he has taught school eleven terms.

POTTER, GEORGE H., was born in Franklin Co., Penn., on the 21st of October, 1838, where he resided until the year 1866, when he came to this county and has since resided here. Mr. Potter is by profession a miller, although he has paid some attention to farming; for the past ten years, however, he has been in the grocery business at this place, and for the past four years has been Postmaster also of Ganges. In the year 1870, on the 10th of July, he was married to Mrs. McElroy. He enlisted in the late war, first a member of Co. K, 126th Penn. V. I.; he was enrolled Aug. 2, 1862; discharged on the 20th of May, 1863; second, was a member of Co. D, 21st Penn. V. C.; enrolled on the 1st of February, 1864, and discharged on the 8th of July, 1865, at Lynchburg, Va.

POWELL, ELIZABETH, MRS., is the widow of the late William Powell, who was born in Pitt Township, Allegheny Co., Penn., March 7, 1805. At the age of 17, he came to this county, and lived here until his death, which occurred March 7, 1880, at the age of 75 years. Mrs. Powell was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Aug. 14, 1813; she lived there until the age of 17, when her parents removed to this county, where she has since resided; they have thirteen children, seven of whom are still living—James, William H., Matilda Jane, Priscilla Ann, Sarah, Lydia and George W.; the ones deceased were named Margaret, Mary, John, Nancy, David R. and Elizabeth; James, William H., Matilda Jane, Priscilla Ann and Sarah are married. George W. was born Feb. 22, 1857, on this farm, and has always lived here; he has always paid his attention to farming, and now carries on the farm for his mother, which he has been doing since his father's last and fatal illness.

POWELL, JAMES, was born in this township Aug. 20, 1837, where he has always resided. He was married, June 19, 1866, to Sarah C. Roseberry, who was born in Ashland Co., April 15, 1845; they have a family of five children, all of whom are still living—Sylvester W., Ida May, Otho, Irene S. and Ina E. Mr. Powell has always farmed from boyhood, and of late years has turned his attention to dealing in stock, although he owns and has the management of two farms. He has, by industry and strict attention to business, made for himself and family a good home.

POWELL, WILLIAM H., was born in this township June 5, 1840, and has always lived in the township. He was married, Aug. 3, 1868, to Sabra S. Finch; they have five children—Nora B., Della, Nettie, S. W. and Eva. Mr. Powell has always been a farmer.

QUINN, SAMUEL, was born in this State, Feb. 21, 1812, where he resided until the year 1821, when his parents removed to this township and located on the farm our subject now owns; he is the oldest child of seven children, whose parents' names were Daniel and Hester Quinn, both of whom are dead; his father died Jan. 1, 1861; his mother on the 6th of May, 1873, at the ripe old age of 82 years; our subject well remembers the first night they spent in this township, the 17th of April, the snow fell at the depth of eighteen inches; soon after this his father lost one of his horses, but soon obtained another one in exchange for a yoke of cattle; he remembers how one John Aller used to bring over his team, accompanied by several of his boys, and how hugely they used to enjoy the exercise of their physical powers in logging; his father was considered by all to be a good marksman and says he killed a great many deer, and if just a few miles from home, he would give them away rather than carry them home. Our subject was never married; his housekeeper, Miss Fannie Dugan, is a native of Ireland, has been in the family for over fifteen years, and is a lady who is respected by all. Camp Council of the war of 1812 was almost direct in front of where his house now stands. He has never taken any active part in political matters, but casts his vote for the Democracy; he has by good management made for himself a good home; has always paid his attention to farming.

QUIN, GEORGE, was born in this township on the 16th of February, 1834, and has always lived in the township, making him one of the oldest surviving settlers of the county; has always paid his attention to farming. He was married on the 4th of March, 1861, to Miss Clarrissa Ferrell; they have reared a family of eight children, three of whom are still living, and named Della, Ora and Silva; the ones that are dead died in infancy.

REYNOLDS, FRANKLIN D., was born in this county on the 12th of July, 1854; he has always resided here, and paid his attention to farming. In the year 1877, on the 6th day of December, he was married to Miss Mary E. Zeiters.

RORICK, J. F., was born in this county and township, at the village of Rome, Aug. 22, 1854, and has since resided here, and has followed as his vocation the wagon and carriage business, but for the past three years he has been engaged in the merchandise business with his brother at Rome; his brother sold to his brother-in-law, Martin Collin; in the future it will be under the firm name of Rorick & Collin, general dealers in all kinds of merchandise, dry goods and everything found in a first-class store, it being the only general store in the town. Mr. Rorick's father was one of the old settlers in the township, having resided here for over a generation; he departed this life July 21, 1879, being lamented by all who knewhim; he was born in Germany in 1812, where he resided until the age of 15 years, when he removed to the United States, located in Pennsylvania and resided there sixteen years, when he removed to this county, where he resided until his death. He was married to Margaret Moun in 1847; they raised a family of four children—Jacob, Joseph F., Mary E. and Hannah Amanda. Mr. Rorick served four years in the late war.

RUTH, H. N., was born in this township on the 12th of July, 1850, and has always lived here; he is by profession a carpenter, and follows that as his vocation. In the year 1875, on the 14th of October, he was married to Miss Caroline Emery.

SANKER, JOHN G., was born in Saxon Germany Sept. 20, 1825, where he resided until the age of 7 years, when his parents removed to this country, and located in Columbiana Co., this State, where they remained for about fourteen years, when he removed to this township, where he has since resided; on his coming here he learned the trade of carriage and wagon making, and that has been his vocation ever since; he now carries on that business at Shenandoah. In the year 1847, May 30, he was married to Miss Catharine Sonanstine; they have raised nine children, eight of whom are still living, and named Curtis J., Sylvester, Alphingo, Jennetta C., David A., Jennie May, Della and Leonard J.; the second child, named Joseph W., died at the age of 2 years. Mr. Sanker has, by fair dealing and strict attention to business, built up for himself a good trade, as well as made a good home for his family. Mr. and Mrs. Sanker are both members of the Disciple Church. During the late war, his son, Curtis J., entered the service for his father at the age of 17 years, and while there he contracted a fever, which has injured his health. Four of Mr. Sanker's children are now married—Sylvester, Alphingo, Jennetta C. and Jennie May. Mrs. Sanker has lived in this township forty-seven years.

SANKER, DAVID A., was born in this township Nov. 8, 1858, where he has since resided; he has learned the carriage and wagon making of his father, and has always paid his attention to it; he now runs the blacksmithing department of his father's factory. They manufacture carriages and wagons of all descriptions, and at prices to suit the times; they also manufacture sleighs of all kinds, and do all kinds of repairing.

SHAMBS, GEORGE, was born in Germany on the 24th of June, 1830; he remained there until the year 1852, when he came to this country, locating in this county, where he has since resided; Mr. Shambs has always paid his attention to farming and dealing in stock, and now makes a specialty of breeding and handling short-horn cattle, together with all kinds of stock. In the year 1855, on the 10th of December, he was married to Miss Margaret Zachman; they have had a family of nine children, eight of whom are living—Margaret, John F., Mary Jane, George B. McClellan, Carrie B., Eugene, Philip and Josephine; Ella B. departed this life on the 8th day of December, 1878, aged 18 years 6 months and 15 days; she was a young lady whom every one loved and respected. Mr. Shambs has, by good management and strict attention to business, made for himself and family a good home, and is considered one of the foremost citizens of the township in any direction that tends to elevate or enlighten the rising generation.

SNAPP, PETER, was born in Virginia March 12, 1808, in Shenandoah Co., where he resided until the year 1836, when he removed to this county and township, where he has since resided, and has paid his attention to farming, principally; he followed shoemaking for the first few years after his location here, but soon purchased a farm; he has owned two or three good farms in the township, aside from the one he now owns. Mr. Snapp has held offices of trust, from time to time, in his county and township; the last office he held was County Commissioner; he served two terms, being six years; his last term expired in the fall of 1879, which record shows for itself how he was held in the estimation of the citizens of this county at large. April 22, 1831, he was married to Miss F. A. Sonanstine; they have raised a family of ten children, nine of whom are still living—Margaret Jane, Mary A., Catherine, George W., Ellen M., Emma C., John L., Franklin P. and William A.; the one that died was the oldest child, named Joseph F., who went to California in 1852, leaving here the 19th day of March; resided there until his death, March 21, 1877. Mr. Snapp is considered amongst the old settlers of his county, and himself, together with his brothers, can recall the many privations and hardships they had to contend with that the present and future generations will never have to cope with. One son, John L., is home on a visit from his home in Nevada, where himself and brother, Frank P., own a large tract of land and carry on the stock and mining business.

SNELL, FRANK, was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, Oct. 28, 1849, where he resided with his parents until the age of 18 years, when he removed to Wadsworth, Medina Co., where he remained about four years; from there he went to Berea, Cuyahoga Co., where he remained about two years, when he came to this place, where he has since resided. While at the age of 18 years, he learned the trade of carriage-painting, which has since been his occupation, he now having charge of the painting department in his father-in-law's (Mr. Sanker) carriage factory. In the year 1876, Sept. 7, he was married to Miss Jennette C. Sanker. They have one child, a daughter, named Blanche, 3 years old. By fair dealing and strict attention to business, he has built up for himself a good trade.

STARR, ELIZABETH, MRS., was one of the pioneer settlers of Blooming Grove Township; she was born Sept. 12, 1787, in Huntington Co., Penn., and lived there ten years, and removed to Beaver Falls in the fall of 1797, arriving at the falls Nov. 4, 1797. Married Aug. 23, 1810, lived there until 1818, removed to Richland Co., in 1818, leaving the falls May 1, and arrived at her home in the wilderness of Blooming Grove on May 12, where she has lived until now, March 4, 1880. Her grandfather Colwell, on her mother's side, came from Ireland; her grandmother Colwell was American-born, born in Chester Co., Penn.; her maiden name was Elizabeth McClain. Her grandfather, John Mitchell, was born in County Tyrone, Ireland; his father's name was George; grandfather Mitchell and grandmother Mary Camble, were both born and married in County Tyrone, Ireland, emigrated to America, and settled near Chambersburg, Penn. Her father and mother, Robert Mitchell and Anne Colwell, before marriage, were forted from Indians, near Huntington, Penn., on one Litel's farm, part of each year of the seven years of the war of independence, and were married in 1783. Her brother, David Colwell, was a soldier under Washington; was in the battle of Brandywine, helped take the Hessians at Trenton. She has always been on the frontier, never had the advantage of an education, not so much as to read and write, and gave these sketches from memory. She has lived under the administration of every President from Washington down.

STARR, MITCHEL, M. D., Shanandoah, was born in Butler Township, Richland Co., Oct. 27, 1820, and has since resided in the county. Studied medicine in 1847, with Dr. Allen, of Rome, and began practicing in 1851, and by close attention to business has secured a large practice. During the late war the Doctor entered the service as Assistant Surgeon of the 174th O. V. I., continuing with the regiment until the close of the war, since which time he has been engaged in the practice of his profession and the management of his two farms. He is the fifth child of Robert and Elizabeth Starr, old settlers of the county. In 1852, he was married to Mary M. Cummings; their children are Grattan F., Wilson S., and Judson C. His parents came to the county in 1817, and located the farm upon which his mother (who is still living, at the age of 92) yet resides. The old lady has been blind for fifteen years, but retains her mental faculties in a remarkable degree; her birthday is Sept. 12. The Doctor is not a politician, but has voted the Prohibition and Republican tickets. When Gov. Tod called out the "Squirrel Hunters," Dr. Starr responded, and marched to the defense of Cincinnati, which was then threatened by Gen. Kirby Smith. He relates that while on this expedition, one of his comrades went on a foraging expedition and secured some sweet potatoes, but was followed by the owner of the potatoes, who threatened to shoot the forager; whereupon the man with the gun was arrested, and while surrounded by the soldiers, one Flanders, who probably had previous acquaintance with him, accused him of being a rebel; whereupon he was made to hold up both hands and swear to support the Constitution of the United States, of the State of Ohio, work in the trenches for the Government, and take postage stamps in exchange for sweet potatoes. The Doctor enjoys talking of old times, and says the cradle in which he was rocked was a sugar trough. They ground their corn in a horse-mill, the nearest being located at Olivesburg. The bed occupied by his mother when her fourth child was born was constructed of four forked sticks driven in the ground for bedposts, upon which sticks and straw was laid.

STARR, GRATTAN F., was born in Weller Township, this county, March 19, 1853; he has resided in this township since 1857. He was married, Dec. 18, 1873, to Annie Funk; they have three children, two of whom are still living; Judson died at the age of 6 months. Mr. Starr is the first child of Dr. Mitchell Starr, of whom mention is made elsewhere. He has always paid his attention to farming. Mrs. Starr was born in Franklin Co., Penn., where she resided until the age of 6 years, when her parents came to this county, where she has since lived.

STARR, WILSON S., was born in Olivesburg, this county, Oct. 21, 1855, and has always lived in the county; his grandmother and his father are among the oldest surviving settlers of the county. Mr. Starr has been principally salesman in a store, situated at Shenandoah, although he has farmed some. At present, he is engaged in the manufacture of tile, in partnership with Nathan Whisler. They have the facilities to manufacture all sizes, and expect to keep constantly on hand the best tile made, and to sell at prices to suit the times. He was married, Aug. 31, 1877, to Emma F. Runyon; they have one child—Lottie.

STARR & WHISLER, tile manufacturers, Shenandoah; keep constantly on hand the best tile manufactured of all sizes, and with prices to suit the times. They have the best facilities for making tile, and there is no better clay in the State than they use for the purpose. They warrant their work, and respectfully solicit their share of public patronage.

STEWART, FRANCIS W., was born in Sandusky City, Erie Co., Aug. 30, 1840. At the age of 13 months, he was sent to his grandmother's (Mrs. Susan Jenks) in Huron Co., to live, his mother having died when he was only 9 days old; he lived with his grandmother until the age of 7 years; his father having married again, he went to live with him in Cleveland; lived there two years, then went to live with Lewis Harrington, his uncle, in Greenfield Township, Huron Co.; he lived with him twelve years at that place, when his uncle moved to Fairfield Township, and stayed there six years; then went to Michigan; remained there five years, then returned to Huron County, where they stayed two years, and from there he came to this township and has since resided here. He was married, Jan. 26, 1873, to Phœbe Mann, who was born in Huron Co., April 12, 1839; she lived in Huron Co. thirty-eight years, the balance in this township; they have one child—Elleva. Mr. Stewart has generally farmed during life, which business he still carries on, on the farm he now owns.

STONER, GEORGE, was born in this county and township July 27, 1832, and has remained here and has always paid his attention to farming; he is the fifth son of Henry and Catherine Stoner, who are both dead. He was married to Miss Mary Jane Madden March 8, 1855, the day Buchanan took his seat in the Presidential chair; they have two children—Susanah C. and Emma Jane, who are still living, the oldest being married and now resides in Michigan with her husband, Adam Fike.

STURTS, HENRY, was born in Bedford Co., Penn., Oct. 3, 1823, where he resided until the age of 13 years, when his parents removed to Lancaster Co., where they remained a few years, when they removed to Knox Co., where they stayed about two years; thence Mr. Sturts removed to this county, and located in this township, where he has, the most of the time, resided, during which time he has paid his attention to farming. About the year 1855, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Robewalt; they have two children—John G. and Harriett C. The latter is married to Mr. Joseph Delancy, of Cass Township.

ST. JOHNS, GILES, was born in this county on the 14th of March, 1839, where he has since resided, and has always paid his attention to farming; he has resided in this township fifteen years. In the year 1864, on the 31st of October, he was married to Miss Sarah Bricker; they have a family of three children, Sarah A., Eva R. and Cora May.

TERMAN, HIRAM, was born in this county on the 8th of May, 1842; he has always resided here, with the exception of three years and two months, which time he served in the late war; he enlisted in December, 1861, on the 26th day, and was mustered out on the 4th of January, 1864; he was a member of Co. F, 82d O. V. I.; he participated in all the battles the regiment was called upon to engage in, until the battle of Gettysburg, on the 1st of July, when he was taken prisoner, and remained as such for a period of over seventeen months; was first taken to Belle Island; thence to Andersonville; from there to Savannah, and thence to Uealon Junction, from where he was paroled. Mr. Terman is a farmer by occupation, and has always followed that. In the year 1868, he was married to Miss Nancy J. Boals; they have two children—Walter B. and Harry W.

THOMAS, JOSEPH R., was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., on the 5th of June, 1824; he resided there until the age of 14 years; from there he removed to Dauphin Co., where he resided until the year 1851, when he removed to this county, where he has since resided. Mr. Thomas is, by profession, a shoemaker, and is considered by all who claim to be judges to be proficient at the business; he now carries on the business at Ganges; he manufactures all kinds of boots and shoes, warrants his work and sells at prices to suit the times. In the year 1854, on the 28th of January, he was married to Miss Catharine Cullter; they have a family of four children, two of whom are still living—Annie and Joseph C.; Jacob died in 1855, aged 8 months; William S. died in 1871, aged 6 years; he met his death, nearly in front of his father's residence, by a horse running over him while the little fellow was trying to get his hat, which the wind had taken from his head; Willie was a remarkably smart boy of his age, and was beloved and lamented by all. Mr. Thomas has been married twice; by his first wife he had two children. In the late war, Mr. Thomas was a member of Co. F, 82d O. V. I.; he was enrolled in the month of September, 1862, and discharged in June, 1865; he participated in all the numerous battles the regiment was called upon to engage in.

THOMAS, JACOB, was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., March 6, 1804, where he lived until the age of 30 years, when he removed to this county, where he has since resided. He has followed fence-making and manufacturing rakes, which vocations he still follows; he claims his rakes meet with a more ready sale than any produced in the county. His son Franklin James, who resides at home, is a young man who says he is bound to be a scholar.

THOMPSON, JOHN, is the third child of Thomas and Mary Thompson, who settled in this township over fifty years ago; Mr. Thompson was born on the adjoining farm he now owns, Dec. 23, 1828, which place has been his home ever since, with the exception of three years he spent in Wood Co. He was twice married; first to Susan Miller, who bore him one child, named Thomas; he was married to his second wife May 19, 1874; her name was Anna Marvin; she was born in England, and came to this country when 15 years of age, she was born Feb. 16, 1840. Mr. Thompson is a carpenter by trade, but he has generally followed farming as his business, only working at his trade from time to time, as occasion demands.

TOMLINSON, WILLIAM H., was born in this township June 11, 1839, where he has since resided; he is the eldest child of Joseph and Mary Tomlinson; his father came to this township about fifty years ago; his mother was born in the township, near Rome. Mr. T.'s step-grandfather, William Young, resides in La Fayette, Butler Township, and says he is 100 years old; he has often seen Gen. Washington; he first voted for Thomss Jefferson, third President; he says he saw Hamilton and Burr fight the duel July 11, 1804, and attended Hamilton's funeral, who died from wounds received in the duel. Mr. Tomlinson was married, Feb. 12, 1863, to Irene M. Turbett, who was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., June 18, 1845, where she resided until the age of 10 years, when her parents removed to this State and located in Crawford Co., about two miles from the county seat, where she resided five years, when her parents removed to this county, where she has since resided; they have two children, one of whom is still living—Norris J.; the other one died in infancy. Mr. Tomlinson has never paid much attention to political matters, although he now represents this township as Trustee. He has followed different vocations; at present he is general real-estate and collecting agent, aside from having the management of his farm.

TRESH, ADAM, was born in Germany Oct. 10, 1841; when at the age of 13 years, his parents removed to this county, and located at Newburg, where he resided until 1870, when our subject came to this county, where he worked getting out staves, dividing his time between this and Huron Co. for three years, when he bought the farm he now owns, and has since occupied it seven years. He was married, March 17, 1870, to Phœbe A. Kinsell, who was born in Greenwich Township, Huron Co., Aug. 21, 1849; they have two children —Charles A. and Margaret J. Mr. Tresh is a cooper by trade, but since he bought this farm, he has given his attention exclusively to farming.

VALENTINE, ANDREW, was born in Bedford Co., Penn., April 12, 1830, where he resided until the age of 7 years, when his parents came to this State, Coshocton Co., where he remained four years, when he came to this county and township, where he has resided the most of his time; his vocation has been that of farming. In 1874, Nov. 5, Mr. Valentine was married to Miss Susan Amanda McCormick; they have two children, one of whom died Sept. 26, 1878, the other a little boy, named Henry M., is still living; the little girl, Rebecca Ann, died at the age of 3 years and 19 days. Mr. Valentine entered the service in the late war Oct. 1, 1862, was a member of Co. F, 20th O. V. I., was discharged July, 1863; his time had expired, but during service he was seriously afflicted with the fever, besides he received a severe wound in the right leg, just below the knee, while performing his duty, and carried the bullet for over eighteen months after his discharge; after he received the wound, Mr. Valentine tells that he escaped to an old cedar-tree, where he remained for four days, being unable to move, and that the snow was ten inches deep a good part of the time; during the short time Mr. Valentine served, he met with a great many hardships, and was called upon to perform many acts; at one time while the Confederate Gen. Morgan made his famous raid into Ohio, he was called upon while at Camp Denison, together with what troops were there, to go after him, and as there were but few officers in charge, although he was suffering from the wound, he did not flinch when duty called, he officiating as Captain; when in sight of the enemy, they not showing much fight, he took a select body of men and forced a surrender of fifteen men, only losing one man killed; he took his men back and reported to headquarters; owing to his disability they would not allow him to go out again for a few days, soon after he was called upon by the officers in charge to go into Morgan's camp as a spy; he went right through Gen. Morgan's camp, had a talk with the General and his brother, as with many others; by the information he obtained, Morgan and his men were soon put to flight; soon after that Gen. Morgan was killed, and our subject soon came home.

VALENTINE, JACOB, was born in Bedford Co., Penn., Jan. 25, 1804; he resided there until 1839, when he removed to Coshocton Co., where he remained four years, when he removed to this township, where he has since resided; he has always paid his attention to farming. In the year 1825, on the 12th of May, he was married to Miss Rebecca De Vore; they reared a family of nine children, six of whom are still living, and named Andrew, Philip, Henry T., William A., Julia, Ann and Catherine; Charity died the 26th of March, 1863; Martha E. died on the 29th of April, 1873, and one child died in infancy. Mr. Valentine also lost his wife on the 5th of December, 1875, who died at the ripe age of 67 years 5 months and 14 days; she was a devoted wife and mother; was beloved by all who knew her. His son, Henry, who now carries on the farm, was born in Coshocton Co., this State, on the 14th of April, 1840, and removed here with his parents when 2 years of age. He, with his father, are considered amongst the surviving pioneers of the county, and can recall many hardships and privations. They, together with others, had to contend with that the present as well as the future generations will never know.

VANHORN, WILLIAM, was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Aug. 17, 1808; lived there until 5 years of age, when his parents removed to Washington Co., same State, where they lived about four years, when they went back to Beaver Co., and stayed there a few years, when they removed to this State, and settled in Columbiana Co.; they resided there a few years, when they came to this county, where Mr. Vanhorn has since resided. Mr. Vanhorn is a carpenter by trade, which business he followed until about the year 1859, since which time he has been in the mercantile business. In the year 1840, he was married to Miss Mary Frounfeeter; two children were born to them, named Gustavus A. and Mary Hellen; both are married. Of late years, Mr. Vanhorn's health has been somewhat impaired.

VANHORN, BARNARD, was born in Columbiana Co., this State, on the 10th of June, 1817; he resided there until the age of 19, when he removed to this county and has lived in this township for a period of thirty-seven years, where he has principally been carrying on the coopering business. In April, 1843, he was married to Miss Sophia Clinesmith; they have a family of ten children, nine of whom are still living—Elizabeth, Ann, William F., Mary A., Almira, Andrew, George, Franklin, Charles and Susanah; the one deceased is Eli, who died at the age of 5 years. After his marriage he settled in Harrison Co., Ohio, where he lived one year, and in the summer of 1879 he moved to Richland Co., and is at present living three-quarters of a mile west of Adario. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have one child, Pearl May.

CHURCH, JAMES, farmer; P. O. Olivesburg; he was born in Virginia, in 1793; when he was about 7 years old, his parents moved to Wetzel Co., W. Va.; his father, Henry Church, was an English soldier under Lord Cornwallis in the Revolutionary struggle, and was taken prisoner by the Light Horse Cavalry while he and some others were out on a foraging expedition; he took the oath of allegiance and joined the American cause; he lived to be 109 years old. The subject of this sketch remained at home until he was married, Oct. 3, 1813, to Susanna Helms, of Pennsylvania; after his marriage, he settled in Virginia, where he lived about five years, and then moved, with his wife and two children, to the present site of Windsor, in Mifflin Township, where he lived about one year; he then bought a tract of land of Ebenezer Williams, which he improved seven years, and then sold out and bought where he now resides, in 1831; he cleared the land, which was very heavily timbered; Mr. Church can recall many of the hardships and privations of early pioneer life. Mr. and Mrs. Church have raised eight children, five of whom are dead; he has one daughter at home yet—Sarah A., who is in her 52d year, and one Mrs. A. J. McCloy, a resident of Mansfield.

CLABERG, ISAAC, farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in this county May 12, 1822; his parents came to this county from Fairfield Co., in 1816, and bought the tract of land where Mr. Claberg now resides; they moved into the woods and put up a shanty to live in until they could build themselves a cabin, after which they went to clearing off the timber, which consisted principally of oak, beech and sugar. The subject of this sketch lived at home until he was 37 years old, when he married Harriett Porter, of Butler Township; her parents came to this county from Pennsylvania about 1835; Mr. and Mrs. Claberg have two boys, who are 15 and 17 years old. Mr. Claberg has done a good deal of hard work in his time, and has helped to clear a good many acres of land; he is an industrious and thriving farmer, who believes in living up to the times. He has been honored with the office of Township Treasurer, and other minor offices in the township; he is in his 58th year, and bids fair to live many years yet.

CLABERG, JACOB, farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born March 11, 1814, in Fairfield Co., Ohio, and is a son of Abraham and Mary Claberg, who came to this county in the spring of 1816; they were the second family that settled in the present boundaries of Butler Township; Abraham entered the first land that was entered in the township, but did not move until some time after. The subject of this sketch is the eldest of a a family of seven children; he remained at home until he was married, in the fall of 1839, to Elizabeth Urich, of Ashland Co.; she died in 1840, and in the spring of 1845, he married Susanna Sneer, who was born Oct. 14, 1819, in what is now Butler Township; after his marriage, he settled on the present farm, which his father had entered some time before. Mr. Claberg has held some of the minor offices in the township, and is at present one of the Commissioners of the county; his chances for an education were very limited, as schools were scarce in his day; he can remember many incidents and privations of pioneer life, and is respected and honored by all who know him. Mr. and Mrs. Claberg have five children—William L., Isaac N., E. M., T. J. and Mary E.; E. M. is yet at home.

FUNK, JACOB M., farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Sept. 22, 1812, and is a son of Tobias and Mary Funk; he is the third of a family of twelve children. He remained at home until 1833, when he was married to Susan Wheeler; after his marriage, he went to a place near Nashville, Tenn., where he followed his trade, millwrighting. At the commencement of the Mexican war, he entered Gen. Taylor's army as scout, where he did some very valuable service, and was with Gen. Scott when he entered the City of Mexico; at the close of the war, he moved to New Orleans; when the cholera broke out, he took boat for Pittsburgh, and, his wife and two children dying on the way, he remained at Pittsburgh until 1854, when he married Catherine E. Canly, of Franklin Co., Penn., when he moved to Ohio, and, at the beginning of the rebellion, entered as Provost Marshal and scouting service, and served during the whole conflict; he was always doing valuable service, and ran some very narrow escapes in penetrating the rebel lines; he was at Gen. Lee's headquarters while at Chambersburg; he was wounded several times, having had his left arm and right leg broken by minie balls; he has lived in different parts of the State since the close of the war, and has been living on the present farm since the spring of 1878. Mr. and Mrs. Funk have three children—Upton T., Anna E. and David H.; of these, Anna is married.

HANNA, T. WILSON, farmer; P. O. Savannah; he was born in this county June 26, 1826, and is a son of William and Rachel C. Hanna. William Hanna came to this county about 1824 or 1825, from Harrison Co., Ohio, and settled on a tract of land in Blooming Grove Township, that his father had entered some time before. He was married in 1835, and in 1851 he moved to the farm that T. W. Hanna now owns and lives on, in the northeast part of Butler Township, where he lived until 1874. The subject of this sketch is the eldest of a family of three children. He remained at home until the fall of 1857, when he married Amanda M. Gault, of Washington Co., Penn., whose father, Samuel Gault, came to this county in an early day. After Mr. Hanna's marriage he settled on his present farm. Mr. Hanna has held the office of Justice of the Peace five years, and other various offices in the township. He is at present engaged quite extensively in raising fine-wooled sheep. Mr. and Mrs. Hanna have two children; Dwight C., who is a member of the Freshman Class, at Wooster University, and J. C., who is attending the academy at Savannah, Ashland Co.

HETLER, CHRISTOPHER, farmer; P. O. Greenwich; he was born in this county July 6, 1842, and is a son of Andrew and Mary Hetler, who came from Pennsylvania and settled in the south part of Weller Township. He is the fourth of a family of seven children. He remained at home until he was married, Jan. 17, 1863, to Margaret J. Keller, of Franklin Township. After his marriage he settled on his father-in-law's farm, where he remained two years, when he emigrated to Southern Illinois, where he remained one year; he then removed to Franklin Township, where he remained six years, and then to Weller Township, and in the spring of 1878, bought and moved on his present farm in the north part of Butler Township. Mr. and Mrs. Hetler have three children, Amos M., Mary E. and Sadie M.

HETLER, SAMUEL, farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; he was born in this county Oct. 19, 1839, and is a son of Philip and Catherine Hetler, who were of German descent, and who removed from Pennsylvania in 1832 or 1833, and settled in the south part of Weller Township. Mr. H. is the eldest of a family of seven children. He remained at home until he was married, in the fall of 1860, to Sarah A. Wolf, of Franklin Township, daughter of John C. and Hettie Wolf. After his marriage he settled on his father-in-law's farm, where he lived a few years. In 1869, he bought and moved to his present farm, in the west part of Butler Township. He is an industrious and thriving farmer, and works at his trade in winter, making grain cradles. Mr. and Mrs. Hetler have eight children—Verona E., Ann E., Sarah J., William E., Oliver J., Rosella M., Verona E., is married.

HUNTER, C. C., farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in Richland Co. Aug. 3, 1852; he is a son of Joseph P. and Angeline Hunter, of Blooming Grove Township; he is the fourth of a family of ten children; he remained at home until he was married, in 1874, to Linda Kirk, daughter of M. Kirk, of Butler Township; in the spring of 1875, he settled on the present farm. Mr. Hunter is a thorough farmer and a gentleman, and believes that it is to the interest of all farmers to be a member of the grange. Mr. and Mrs. Hunter have two children—Lucinda and Lena A.

KIRK, MICHAEL, farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in Brook, Va., Nov. 30, 1814; he removed with his parents, when he was about 2 years of age, to Jefferson Co., Ohio, where they spent the rest of their days. Michael remained at home until he was 30 years old, when he moved to Richland Co., in what is now Clear Creek Township, Ashland Co., where he lived about eighteen years; he then bought where he now resides, in Butler Township, about one-half mile west of Adario. He was married on the first day of the year 1845, to Lucinda Hickman, of Columbiana Co., whose parents were formerly of Pennsylvania; Mrs. Kirk is a daughter of Jeremiah Hickman, one of the old pioneer Methodists, and a sister of Judge Hickman, of Minnesota; Mr. and Mrs. Kirk have a family of seven children, some of whom are graduates of the Berea University. Mr. Kirk has been honored with a great many offices of the township, and is also a good, faithful granger. He is a pleasant gentleman to meet, and has a fine family.

KIRK, JAMES, farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in 1842; he is a son of the late Edward and Mary Kirk, of Butler Township, who came to Richland Co. in 1841, from Jefferson Co., Ohio, and settled where Mr. Kirk now resides, about half a mile southeast of Adario. The subject of this sketch remained at home until his marriage, in 1864, to Miss Sarah Ford, of Butler Township; previous to his marriage, he had enlisted in the 16th N. Y. V. C., and served nine months, when he was discharged on account of disability; after his marriage, he settled on the old homestead until 1871, when his wife died, after which he went to Kansas, where he married his second wife, and where he lived until 1876, when he returned to Richland Co. and settled where he now resides, with his mother, on the largest farm in this part of the county, which is under a good state of cultivation.

McKIBBEN, W. C., farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Aug. 20, 1827; he is the son of Hugh B. and Isabella McKibben, who moved to this county in the spring of 1828, and settled in what is now Ashland Co., where they spent the rest of their days. The subject of this sketch lived at home until the spring of 1853, when his father bought a tract of land about three-quarters of a mile northeast of Adario, in Butler Township, and where he partly made his home until March 31, 1863, when he married Cordelia Smith, of Huron Co. In the fall of 1863, after his marriage, he settled on the farm where he now resides. Mr. McKibben tried hard to get an education, when a young man. He was an ardent admirer of Gen. Fremont, and has taken a very active part in politics. Mr. and Mrs. McKibben have eight children—Albert A., William, Francis, Amanda M., Ernest D., Mary E., John H., Nettie J. and Perry.

McWILLIAMS, J., farmer; P. O. Savannah; he was born in Richland Co. Jan. 17, 1848; he is a son of Charles and Agnes McWilliams, who came from Scotland in 1843, and settled in Butler Township, where they lived about three years; they then moved to Ashland Co., where they still live. The subject of this sketch lived at home until the spring of 1875, when he married Nettie Farquahonson, of Ashland Co.; after his marriage, he settled on the farm where he now resides, in Butler Township, about two miles northeast of Adario. Mr. and Mrs. McWilliams have two children —James B. and Agnes Irene.

MORRIS, B. F., lumber dealer; P. O. Shenandoah; he was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Oct. 18, 1841; he is a son of Benjamin Morris, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this work. The subject of this sketch remained at home until the call was made for men by President Lincoln. He enlisted in McLaughlin's squadron of cavalry in Mansfield, and held the office of Sergeant Dispatcher in the brigade; while serving in that capacity he was wounded by a ball entering at the elbow, and coming out at the wrist; the shot was supposed to have been fired at Gen. Stoneman, while forming in line of battle; the wounded were taken prisoners by the rebels at that battle, and when the rebel doctors were examining them to send all that were able to travel to Richmond, he called the Union doctor, and told him to save him if he could. Mr. Morris crawled in an old house that stood near, and pulled some old clothes over him, and when they came to him the rebel doctor asked the Union doctor what was the matter with this fellow. He said he was almost dead. "I expect he'll die this blessed minute." They passed, and thus he saved himself from going into a rebel prison; he finally reached home, and got his discharge in the summer of 1865. He was married on the 27th of November, 1865, to Miss Mary Oberlin, of Butler Township. Mr. and Mrs. Morris have four children, whose names are William A., Della W., Chester and Orphia R. Mr. Morris is an energetic business man, and is at present living about one-half mile east of Shenandoah. He partly owns and operates a steam saw-mill where he lives, and has a half-interest in 218 acres of coal land in Columbiana Co.

MORRIS, G. B., farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; he was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Feb. 10, 1845; he removed with his parents, Benjamin and Jane K. Morris, to Richland Co. in 1847. He remained at home until he was 24 years old, when he married Eliza J. Urich, of Weller Township, Jan. 21, 1869. After his marriage, he bought and settled on a farm adjoining the old homestead, where he has since lived. Mr. Morris believes that the best in the way of stock and farming implements is the cheapest, and has a pleasant home. They have one child—Charley E., who was born Oct. 26, 1869.

MORRIS, BENJAMIN, farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; he was born in Washington Co., Penn., Nov. 13, 1811. He is a son of Jonathan and Sophia Morris, who moved, about 1831, to Beaver Co., where they lived about twenty-five years, and then sold out there and moved to Columbiana Co., Ohio, where they lived about seven years, and moved to Mahoning Co., where they lived twelve years. Getting too old to work on a farm, Mr. Morris divided his property among his children, intending to come to Richland Co. to live with his son; Benjamin, but died at his daughter's, in Mahoning Co., at the age of 84 years. The subject of this sketch remained at home until he was 29 years of age, when he married Jane R. Black, of Chester Co., Penn. After his marriage, he settled in Beaver Co., where he lived about six years, when he moved with his wife and four children to Butler Township, in the spring of 1846, and settled on the farm where he now resides. They have raised five boys, whose names are Barcella F., Jonathan T., Gideon B., William H. and Isaac P.—all of whom are married. Mrs. Morris died Feb. 22, 1871, and in 1876 he married Cynthia Spohnhour, of Shelby. This has been a remarkable family for longevity; Jonathan and Sophia Morris, at the age of 80 years, had a family gathering of their eleven children, who were all living: aggregate time of life in the family, 668 years 3 months and 18 days. They have been a very patriotic family; five of the family fought in the rebellion, and also five in the Revolutionary struggle, some of whom lost their lives in both wars. William H. Morris lives with his father on the old farm; he has been in California twice, and can recall many stirring scenes; he was born March 22, 1847. When he was 26 years old, he married Neotia Cline, Feb. 20, 1873. Mr. and Mrs. Morris have three children, whose names are Ada J., Effie C. and Hattie P.

MURRAY, EDWARD, farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in what is now Ashland Co. Nov. 7, 1824; he is a son of Edward and Rebecca C. Murray, and is the fifth of a family of six children. He remained at home until he was married, Dec. 23, 1847, to Mary E. Colman, of Ashland Co. After his marriage, he settled on his father's farm, where he lived six years, and then bought and moved where he now resides, in Butler Township, about two and a half miles northeast of Adario. He is a thriving farmer, who believes that the best in the way of stock and farming implements is the cheapest, and has his farm under a good state of cultivation. Mr. and Mrs. Murray have four children —John, Diadem, Joseph and William.

NELSON, ELMORE, farmer; P. O. Olivesburg; he was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, April 3, 1839; he is a son of Andrew and Rachel Nelson, who came to this county in 1853, from Wayne Co.; he remained at home until he was married, Jan. 26, 1860, to Angeline Ward, of Richland Co.; after his marriage, he settled on the old homestead, where his wife died June 15, 1861, and on Aug. 24, of the same year, his little boy, Charles, died. On the 9th of September, 1861, he enlisted in the 15th O. V. I., Company G, and was taken prisoner Sept. 20, 1863; he was in the Richmond and Andersonville prisons, and experienced all of the horrors of those pens until the 10th of November, 1864, when he and four of his comrades made their escape by giving the guard $100 and a silver watch; while in prison, he helped many of his comrades in distress, so that many will bless him as long as they live; he finally reached home on the 10th of December, 1864, and on the 28th of March, 1865, he married Mary A. Rutt, of Ashland Co.; after his marriage, he settled on his father-in-law's place, where he lived about three years, and then bought the farm where he now resides, of M. Kirk, in Butler Township. Mr. and Mrs. Nelson have six children, whose names are Henry S., Cora, Alice, Myrtie, William A. and Edward T.

RICHARDSON, JAMES M., farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in Vermont in 1819, June 29, and is a son of Josiah and Anna Richardson, who came to this State in the spring of 1834, and settled in Lorain Co. The subject of this sketch is the third of a family of six children; he remained at home until he was married, in the summer of 1849, to Maria Grimes, of Ashland Co.; after his marriage, he moved to Litchfield Co., where he lived three years, and in 1853, he moved to this county, Butler Township, and has lived on the present farm about twenty-six years. Mr. Richardson's father, Josiah Richardson, served under Brown about three years in the war of 1812. Mr. Richardson has four children—Vianna C., A. Clark, Emma and Charles A.; of these, Emma is married.

ROBISON, G. W., farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in Juniata Co., Penn., Oct. 4, 1832; he is a son of James and Rebecca Robison, who came to this State in 1835 and settled in Ashland Co., where they lived about two years, and then moved into Richland Co. and settled on the farm where Jackson White now lives, in Butler Township, where they resided until the fall of 1868, and then they moved to Indiana. The subject of this sketch is the tenth of a family of thirteen children; he lived at home until the spring of 1861, when he settled on a farm in Butler Township, where he lived about three and a half years, and then moved on the old homestead, where he resided until the spring of 1872, when he emigrated to Virginia; he lived there ten months, and not liking the society, he came back to Butler Township, and still resides here. Mr. Robison was married in 1855, to Mary E. Stratton, whose mother is still living, at the advanced age of 85 years; Mr. and Mrs. Robison have one child—Thomas R.

SAMSEL, JACOB, farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; he was born in Olivesburg Aug. 6, 1836, and is a son of Peter and Mary Samsel, who came from Germany in 1836; he remained at home until he was 16 years old, when he went to learn the cabinet-making trade, which he followed one year, and then had to give it up on account of his health; he then went back on the farm at home, where he remained until he was married, June 7, 1858, to Sarah J. Oberlin, of this township; after his marriage, he bought where he now resides and has since lived. In May, 1872, his wife died, and left him two children, whose names are Franklin B. and Emma J. After several years, he was married to Eliza A. Glenn, of Weller Township; they have one child—Bertha C. Mr. S. has held the office of District Clerk nine years in succession, and other minor offices in the township, and has, by his industry and strict attention to business, made for himself and family a fine home; he believes that the best, in the way of stock and farming implements, are the cheapest.

SECHRIST, GEORGE B., farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; he was born in Dauphin Co., Penn., June 10, 1827; he is a son of Peter and Mary Sechrist, who came to Richland Co. in the spring of 1839, and bought a tract of land in what is now Butler Township, where Mrs. Sechrist still resides. The subject of this sketch is the second of a family of six children; he lived at home until he was 22 years old, when he married Anna L. Taylor, of this county; after his marriage, he moved to Blooming Grove Township, along the Huron Co. line, where he lived about one year, when he moved to his present home. Mr. S. has never paid much attention to politics, but has held some of the minor township offices. Mr. and Mrs. Sechrist have two children, whose names are Silas P. and Otto P., both of whom are married; Otto has been married about eighteen months, and lives on the farm with his father; Silas lives in Cleveland. Mr. Sechrist is a breeder of fine Spanish sheep, which he expects to make a specialty in the future.

SHELLER, H. B., farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in this county Feb. 14, 1837; his parents came to this county in 1824, from Pennsylvania, and settled on a farm in what is now Ashland Co., where his father died when he was quite small; he was the only child, but, his mother marrying again, he had three half-brothers, one of whom was lost in the war of the rebellion; the other two are living in the West. The subject of this sketch lived at home until he was 20 years old, when he went to learn the mason trade, at which he worked three years; then he followed threshing for seven falls, part of the time in Michigan; in the spring of 1863, he went to Williams Co. and bought a farm, where he lived about three months, and then came back to Butler Township. He was married in the fall, and moved on his father-in-law's place, where he resided about two years; he then moved back to his farm in Williams Co., where he lived about two years, when he sold his farm and bought where he now resides. He is at present living with his second wife; he has four children, whose names are Charles Oscar, Perry Thomas, Marretta and Addie Eveline. Mr. Sheller is an industrious and hard-working man, and has a nice home and a good and highly improved farm.

STARR, ELIZABETH, MRS. She was born in Huntingdon Co., Penn., Sept. 12, 1787; she is a daughter of Robert and Ann Mitchell, and removed with her parents, in 1797, to Beaver Falls, and was married, Aug. 27, 1810, to Robert Starr; in the spring of 1818, she removed to this county, and settled on her present farm in Butler Township. She is of Irish descent, her grandfather coming from Ireland when he was 18 years of age; she comes of a remarkable family, both for their longevity and patriotism, some of her uncles serving in the Revolution under Gen. Washington. Mrs. Starr has lived beyond the allotted time of mankind; she is in her 93d year, and has a remarkable memory for one of her age; she has been blind for the last fifteen years, yet she can tell any one by their voice whom she ever knew before she lost her eyesight.

TUCKER, THOMAS, farmer; P. O. Savannah; he was born in Washiugton Co., Penn., Jan. 12, 1812; he is a son of John and Catherine Tucker, and removed with his parents to Richland Co., in what is now Ashland Co., Orange Township, in 1815. Mr. Tucker is one of a family of nine children, of whom he is the eighth; he remained at home on the farm until he was married, in December, 1831, to Sarah Vananken, who was born in Pike Co., Penn., in 1810, July 24. After his marriage, he entered 80 acres of the present farm, and moved the May following his marriage into a cabin that was very poorly built. They lived at the mercy of the musquitos about a month, until they could get their cabin finished. Mr. Tucker can recall many incidents of pioneer life, and has cleared a great deal of land in his time. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker have raised eight children, seven of whom are living—James L., T. A., Sarah J., J. C., Margaret M., D. V., Martha and Nancy A. D. V. Tucker was born Jan. 7, 1846; was married in December, 1877, to Miss A. C. Fackler, daughter of Henry and Catharine Fackler, of Butler Township. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker have one child—F. Tucker. After D. V. Tucker's marriage, he settled on the old homestead, now a highly improved farm.

TUCKER, THOMAS A., farmer; P. O. Savannah; he was born in Richland Co, in 1836, June 26, and is a son of Thomas and Sarah Tucker, of Butler Township; he remained at home until he was married in August, 1870, to Elizabeth McMillen, of Butler Township. The next spring he settled on his present farm, in the northeast part of the township. Mr. Tucker has paid the most of his attention to farming, although he has been to the West a few times to buy stock for the market. He has paid some attention to raising heavy draft horses, and has some at present that will rank among the finest in the county. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker have two sons—Charles M. and Robert H.

VIERS, Q. D., farmer; P. O. Greenwich; he was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, Nov. 22, 1806; he is a son of Bazil and Anna Viers, and is the fifth of a family of twelve children; he remained at home until he was married, in the spring of 1830, to Jane Parker, of Summit Co., near Akron. After his marriage he settled in Summit Co., where he lived four years. In the summer of 1835, he emigrated to this county and settled on his present farm in the north part of Butler Township. He has had eight children, seven of whom are living—Elizabeth M., Lorain, Martin, Thomas, Nancy, Margaret J. and L. Milton.

VIERS, T. P., farmer; P. O. Greenwich; he was born in Summit Co., Ohio, Feb. 22, 1834, and is a son of L. D. and Jane Viers; he is the third of a family of eight children; he remained at home until he was 24 years of age, when he married Miss Maria Hall, of Huron Co.; after his marriage, he settled in Greenwich Township, Huron Co., where he lived two years, when he moved to Wood Co., where he lived seven years, and then came to Richland Co. and settled on his present farm. Mr. and Mrs. Viers have two children—Jacob L. and Henry T.

WHISLER, NATHAN, tile and brick manufacturer; P. O. Shenandoah; he was born in Richland Co. June 26, 1846; he is a son of Jacob and Nancy Whisler, who came from Berks Co., Penn., about the year 1835, and settled in Franklin Township, where they still reside. The subject of this sketch is the youngest of a family of fifteen children; he remained at home until he was married, in 1867, to Margaret E. Hammond, of this county; after his marriage, he moved to Hancock Co., Ohio, where he followed farming and lived about three and a half years, when he moved to Allen Co., where he resided two years, when he moved back to Richland Co., and is at present living about three-fourths of a mile east of Shenandoah and engaged in the tile business. Mr. and Mrs. Whisler have five children—Jacob, Cora A., Allen, Elva R. and Willard.

WHITE, MILTON, farmer; P. O. Adario; he was born in Columbia Co., Penn., Feb. 15, 1833, and is a son of John and Elizabeth White, who came to this county in the spring of 1838 and settled in what is now Cass Township, where they lived until 1867, when they moved to Butler Township, where they spent the rest of their days. The subject of this sketch is the fourth of a family of ten children; he remained at home until he was married, in 1857, to Mary A. Miller, daughter of Samuel and Catherine Miller, who came from Cumberland Co., Penn., in 1839, and settled in Blooming Grove Township; after Mr. White's marriage, he settled in Cass Township, where he lived about seven years, and then he moved, with his family, to Michigan, and, in 1866, moved back to Richland Co. and at present live in Adario. Mr. White has followed farming and milling as a general thing. Mr. and Mrs. White have six children—Samuel J., Lily M., Charles Grant, Elnora K., Jennetta and John E. Mr. White served in Co. H, 163d O. N. G.; he enlisted May 2, 1864.

WOOD, NAMAN; farmer, P. O. Adario; he was born in Ashland Co. June 26, 1844, and is a son of the late John and Maria Wood, of Butler Township; he remained at home until June, 1862, when he enlisted in Co. H, 84th O. V. I., where he served about three months, when he came home, and in April, 1864, he re-enlisted in Co. A, McLaughlin's squadron, and returned home in November, 1865. He remained in the county until 1873, when he married Elmira Van Horn, of Rome, Blooming Grove Township; after his marriage, he settled on the present farm, about one and a half miles north of Adario, where he now lives.

WOOD, MARIA, MRS.; P. O. Adario; wife of the late John Wood; she was born in Richland Co. Oct. 2, 1818, and is a sister of Jacob Clayberg, of Butler Township. John Wood was among the first settlers in this township; he came with his parents, in 1817, from Beaver Co., Penn. A short time after John Wood and Maria Clayberg were married, they settled in Ashland Co., where they lived about two years, and then bought and moved to the present farm, about two miles north of Adario. Mrs. Wood has raised seven children —Maman, Mary, Coridan, William, John J., Hulbert H. and Lorian; Hulbert and Lorian are at home yet; the rest of the family are married.

ZEIGLER, JOHN M., was born in Butler Township July 21, 1840; he is the oldest child of Henry and Margaret Zeigler, of whom mention is made elsewhere in this work. He was married, Feb. 14, 1866, to Elizabeth Jane Cleland, who was born in Blooming Grove Township April 23, 1846; they have had two children; one is still living, named Effie M.; the other one died in infancy. Mr. and Mrs. Zeigler have always lived in the county; Mr. Zeigler has paid the most of his attention to farming, although he is by profession a carpenter, and has worked at it some; he now owns a farm in good repair.

CASS TOWNSHIP.

ADAMS, DANIEL, pioneer, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Bedford Co., Penn., March 10, 1824; his father and mother, with their family of seven children, came to Ohio about 1828, and settled in Wayne Co., where they lived about ten years, and then moved to Blooming Grove Township; they settled in the woods. The subject of this sketch remained at home until he was married, and then moved to Huron Co., where he stayed two years; he then came to Cass Township, and moved on a farm near Planktown, where he lived two years; he then moved to Planktown, where he lived one year, and then moved to where they now reside, in the spring of 1855; his parents had nine children, five of whom are living. He was married to Miss Sarah A. Nelson Feb. 21, 1850; she was born in Perry Co., Penn., Aug. 22, 1822; her mother died in April, 1829; her father then left Pennsylvania with a family of five small children, and came by wagon to the then new country of Ohio; he came to where Shelby now stands, at which time there was no town there. He married there during the winter, and, in the spring, he moved to Blooming Grove Township, where he died in 1866; his children are all living but one. Mr. and Mrs. Adams have five children, all of whom are living; Catharine J., married to E. B. Rose; Annie Mary, married to George O. Dickinson; Elizabeth, Sarah Alice and Charles Ellsworth are at home.

BACKENSTO, HENRY, pioneer and retired farmer, was born in Dauphin Co., Penn., Oct. 31, 1825; his father came to Ohio about the year 1830; brought his family by wagon, and settled in Franklin Township, Richland Co., where he remained until he died in 1851. Henry was the fourth of eight children; he received his education in the subscription schools of the county; at 16 years of age, he took charge of a thrashing machine, which he followed for six years; his father gave him an 80-acre tract of land, which was covered with timber; he built a cabin on it, and moved into it in the fall of 1847; he, in a few years purchased several other tracts; bought a tract of land near Shiloh, and then sold his farm in Blooming Grove Township; in the year 1863, he moved to Shiloh, where he now lives; in 1873, he built a brick block in Shiloh, which he still owns. He came of a thrifty stock of Pennsylvania farmers; when he paid for his dwelling where he now resides, he had $15, which he earned when a boy between 8 and 12 years of age, making broom-handles and whipstocks. He was married to Miss Sarah Clayburg Oct. 28, 1847; they have nine children, four of whom are living.

BEELMAN, CHRISTIAN, retired farmer; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Dec. 10, 1806; his parents belonged to the class of thrifty people known as the Pennsylvania Germans. He spent his boyhood days on the farm; at 21, he went to learn the trade of carpenter with George Beelman, of Pennsylvania; after learning the trade, he worked at it while he remained in Pennsylvania. Was married to Fannie Beelman in April, 1831; had three children; John A Beelman and Eliza Ann are still living; his wife died in Pennsylvania; he, with a number of his friends and relatives, viz.: John Beelman and his three sons; George Beelman, wife and two children and Joseph, his brother; Andrew Sheely and his wife, Mrs. Rebecca Sheely, and two daughters, started in the year 1836 for Ohio; they embarked in wagons for the wilds of the new country, coming via Pittsburgh, and crossing the Ohio River at Steubenville: the journey was by way of Massillon, Canton, Wooster and Mansfield, thence to Bucyrus; stayed three weeks, but not liking the county, they left, John Beelman purchasing a tract of land in Huron Co., north of Plymouth, where they settled; he still follows his trade; worked in Plymouth, where he lived about eleven years; in the year 1846, he purchased the farm he now lives on, and, in 1848, moved to it; he had the usual experience of those who purchase in a new country; he built the present buildings, and otherwise improved the farm, until now it is under a high state of cultivation, and a comfortable place to enjoy the remaining days of his declining years. He was married a second time, to Sarah Sheely, in June, 1837, who had six children, viz.: Rebecca J. Beelman, living at home; Henry A. Beelman, now in Michigan; Ann A., married to William Douglas, lives in Shiloh; Emma A., married to La Fayette Davis, lives at home; Charles and Edward, in Michigan. Mrs. Rebecca Sheely, mother of Mrs. Beelman, now lives with her daughter; she was 85 years old Nov. 18, 1879.

BEVIER, LEWIS, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Richland Co., Ohio, Jan. 31, 1825; his father, Andries Bevier, came from Cayuga Co., N. Y., town of Owasco, in the year 1824, and settled on the farm on which his son now lives; the farm at the time was but little improved, having about 10 acres cleared. The subject of this sketch spent his young days on the farm with his father, and, after his father's death, which was in February, 1846, he and his brother, Jeremiah E. Bevier, took the farm and kept the family together on the old homestead; he bought out the heirs as they became of age; he came in full possession of the farm in the fall of 1858, and has put the principal part of the buildings on the farm and has it under a good state of cultivation. His father came to Ohio with his family in a two-horse wagon, and endured all the hardships of a new country; had to go many miles to market, but by industry and economy he succeeded in making for himself and family a comfortable home. Lewis was married to Miss Amanda Condon Jan. 18, 1859; they have had four children, three of whom are living and one dead; John P. was born Aug. 24, 1860; Annie Annette, June 21, 1862; Fredric Lewis, Oct. 2, 1864.

BRIGGS, MARIA, widow of William Briggs, was born in Lincolnshire, England, Oct. 2, 1829, and emigrated to America in 1849. Was married to William Briggs March 23, 1854. William Briggs was born in Lincolnshire, England, March 31, 1823, and emigrated to America with his father, he coming while William was young; settled in Richland Co., Plymouth, now Cass Township, and was one of the pioneers. William Briggs died May 22, 1868; had one child—William R. Briggs, born June 2, 1863. The subject of this sketch deserves much praise, as she has taken care of the farm and raised her boy almost to manhood and has been successful to a marked degree.

BUSHEY, JACOB, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Oct. 6, 1824, and came to Ohio with his father, who emigrated with his family in 1835; he remained with his father helping him to clear up the farm until he was 16 years of age, when he learned the carpenter trade with his father and worked at it most of the time for nineteen years, and then worked at the saw-mill business some nine years; he sold out to his partner, S. Wentz; he bought the farm he now lives on in 1860; moved to it the following year; remained nine years, then moved to London; lived there eight years, following his trade, and again, in 1878, he moved on the farm where he now lives. Was married to Miss Elizabeth Fireoved Nov. 25, 1845; they have nine children, all of whom are living, showing that they have inherited the sound constitution of their parents; in fact, it is remarkable to see a family of so many and all living and enjoying excellent health.

CRAWFORD, T. &. J. & CO. (Taylor Crawford, John Crawford and Porter Crawford), millers and proprietors of Shiloh Steam Flouring, Saw and Planing Mills, were born in Huron Co., Ohio; they moved to Richland Co., Ohio, when they were boys; they were all raised on a farm and received their education in the common schools of the county. Taylor Crawford was born Nov. 28, 1846; John Crawford, Sept. 19, 1848; Porter Crawford, Dec. 20, 1853. Taylor and his brother John, seeing an opening for a flouring-mill in Shiloh, purchased the ground and built the present mill in the fall of 1872; they carried it on for ten years; they then traded it for land in Huron Co.; they purchased the saw-mill at Shiloh and removed it to the flouring-mill furnishing power for the mill; in the mean time they took in their brother Porter as partner; in the fall of 1878, they purchased the flouring-mill, since which time they have been doing business under the firm name of T. & J. Crawford & Co.

CLOWES, JOHN Q. A., M. D.; born in Allegheny Co., Penn., May 18, 1845. His mother was of Irish and his father of French extraction. He spent his boyhood days with his father in the cabinet-shop, going to school in the winter, and reading medicine and phrenology at intervals, and often gave lectures to his school companions on the science of the mind; his father and mother dying when he was about 17 years old, he then devoted his entire time to the study of the "healing art," first with B. F. Reynolds, M. D., of Harmarville, Penn., then with Dr. G. F. Jacoby, Jr., of Pittsburgh, Penn., attending the St. Franciscus Hospital, and did all the dispensing of the hospital and Dr. Jacoby's private practice, and often, as the Doctor said, won laurels for himself in dispensing physic; in the fall of 1867, he attended his first course of lectures at the Philadelphia University of Medicine and Surgery; the following spring of 1868, he returned from Philadelphia to the city of Pittsburgh, and resumed the study of medicine with Dr. Jacoby, and again, in the following fall, he returned to Philadelphia and attended his second course of lectures, and graduated on the 23d of February, 1869; he also, while attending lectures, was a constant attendant at the Blockley Hospital, of West Philadelphia, and the Pennsylvania Hospital Clinics; after graduating, he returned to his former home at Harmarville, and remained until June, 1869; got the Western emigration fever, and went West as far as Bloomington, Ill., and stopped a few days at Normal, Ill.; but not being impressed with the idea of success, considering the climate of Illinois, he returned East to Ohio, landing in the city of Mansfield on the morning of the 3d of July, 1869; started on foot for the north part of the county, stopping frequently at farmers' houses, making inquiries what the prospect would be for a harvest hand, but, taking his dimensions and his general appearance, the farmer's reply would invariably be, "We don't want hands at the present;" that evening found him at the hotel at Olivesburg, supper ordered and lodging for the night; next morning, walked to Rome, Ohio, and located there for six months, and became discouraged at not making more than a living practice; he sought a new field in the eastern part of this State; dissatisfied with the prospects, returned to Rome, and thence to Dunkirk, Ohio; worse than dissatisfied, returned again to Rome, Ohio. He finally took the advice of Mr. Amon Chew, Sr., after the fashion of the old legend—

"Stick to your farm and you'll suffer no loss;
For a stone that keeps rolling will gather no moss."

This advice was taken as from one whom he respected as a man and a father, and from 1870 to 1874 he had a successful career as a country practitioner of medicine. In the mean time, Feb. 22, 1871, he was married to Miss Mary Helen Van Horn, of Rome, Ohio, to whom were born twins, Estella and Rosella, Aug. 3, 1872, and on Jan. 9, 1874, another daughter, Nellie Florence Clowes, was born. Dr. Clowes' biography would be incomplete without mentioning, in connection with his medical career, the organization of the Clear Grits, in Rome, Ohio, a society whose object was the promotion of the temperance cause; he being one of eight in number who first organized that society, he received the appellation of one of the "eight bummers," "John, the Doctor," etc., and only through a written prescription on parchment from him was any member allowed to drink intoxicating liquors; in this connection, a joint-stock company was organized, and commenced the publication of a weekly newspaper at Rome, Ohio, called the Ohio Clear Grit; the publication of this newspaper was removed to Shiloh, Ohio, and in 1874, the Doctor also removed to Shiloh and started the Shiloh Review, with W. H. Gilmore and H. R. Clowes, his brother, as senior editors. He sold out his interest in the newspaper business, and is giving his undivided attention to the practice of medicine, making a specialty of chronic diseases.

DELANEY, JACOB, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Perry Co., Penn., Jan. 20, 1821; his father came to Ohio about 1828; the subject of this sketch attended the schools of the county, but, as the county was new, his advantages for education were limited; he was put to work while young, learning the carpenter's trade with James Crawford, working at this business for nineteen years; he purchased his present farm in 1848, where he has since resided; he started in the world without a dollar, and, by economy and industry, has a beautiful home, with the comforts of life. Mr. Delaney was married to Miss Sarah Crawford Jan. 4, 1843; they have had seven children, six living. Mrs. Delaney died March 18, 1876; his son Merit died June 6, 1878; he was a bright and promising young man. Mr. Delaney is now married to Mrs. Ellen Jane Douglass.

DELANCY, MARY, MRS., widow of Francis Delancy and pioneer, was born in Chester Co., Penn., Aug. 18, 1793; when she was about one year old, her parents moved to Perry Co., Penn. She was married in 1810, and remained in Pennsylvania until 1828, when she with her husband and family came to Ohio; they were two years in Jackson Township; they then removed to where she now lives; this was about 1831. She lives with her son, Peter Delancy; she is active, for such an old lady; she is one of the oldest residents of the township; she has had nine children, seven of whom are living, the youngest being 51 years of age.

DICK, JOSIAH, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Bedford Co., Penn., in October, 1822; his father, George Dick, Sr., emigrated from Pennsylvania when Josiah was about 5 years old; his father belonged to that class known as Pennsylvania Germans, who are thrifty and economical, and his son has inherited that characteristic to a large degree; he lived at home, helping his father, until he was 31 years of age. In the mean time he married Miss Elizabeth Swartz, April 29, 1847. He left his father's farm and rented one for himself, clearing it up for the wood; lived on this farm seven years and made some money, with which he purchased the farm he lives on, and set to work to clear up and ditch it and extensively improve it; being successful, he, after a few years, purchased a portion of the adjoining farm, known as the Forbot farm, and, some years after, purchased the balance of the same farm; he improved it and put it under good cultivation, and raised excellent crops of grain on it; he was soon enabled to purchase another tract, and now he has some 649 acres of improved land in Richland Co., beside a one-half interest in a farm in Minnesota; he still carries on farming quite extensively in Cass Township. Thus starting in life poor, having for his capital perseverance and industry, he has acquired a handsome fortune and is one of the solid men of the county; his family of seven children are all living.

DICK, GEORGE, SR., farmer; was born in Bedford Co., Penn., Oct. 10, 1796. On the 20th day of March, 1820, he was married to Miss Sarah Nichols, of Bedford Co., Penn., who was born in June, 1797; in the fall of 1827, they immigrated to Stark Co., Ohio, where they remained eighteen months, from which place they moved to Wayne Co., Ohio, where they lived three years, and from there they came to their present home, where they have lived forty-eight years; on the 20th day of March, 1880, their offspring celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of their wedded life; there were born to these parents eleven children, seven sons and four daughters; there are living six sons and one daughter; the living are—Josiah (Cass Township), farmer; Harman, Superintendent of Construction on the C., C., C. & I. Railroad; Lew, a farmer (Cass Township); George, a farmer, in Jackson Township; David, a farmer, in Hancock Co., Ohio, and Hiram, at home; Jacob is dead; the daughters, Eliza is the wife of William Boyd, and lives in Seneca Co., Ohio; Sarah, Mary and Susan are dead; there were present at the anniversary, children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, including sons-in-law and daughters-in-law. Mr. and Mrs. Dick commenced poor in the world, but, by honest industry, they succeeded in life; they implanted the same principles of honesty and industry in the lives of their children, so that they have all succeeded, and of whom it is often said: "They are a remarkable family."

DICK, LEVI, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born July 3, 1826, in Bedford Co., Penn.; he came of that industrious class of people known as Pennsylvania Germans; his father moved to Ohio when the subject of this notice was young; he remained at home, working on the farm, until he was 21 years of age; he then began the carpenter trade, at which he worked about four years; he then again went to farming, and in October, 1852, purchased the farm on which he now resides, depending entirely on his own exertions to pay for it; he has acquired a handsome competence, and has a pleasant home; he has the esteem and confidence of his neighbors, and exerts a large influence in the affairs of the community; he is unassuming in his manners, and is kind and affable to all with whom he comes in contact. He was married to Miss Catharine Ann Swartz Sept. 27, 1849; they had six children, three of whom are living—Mary Jane (living at home), Sarah Ellen (married to D. Malone), and Belle (lives at home). There is now on the farm of Mr. Dick an apple-tree planted by "Johnny Appleseed." It is now seven feet and eight inches in circumference.

FICKES, WESLEY, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, May 4, 1834; his father, Samuel Fickes, moved from Wayne Co. and settled in Weller Township, Richland Co., where he now lives. The subject of this sketch is the second of five children, his sister, the oldest, being dead; the others are living; being the oldest boy, it naturally fell upon him to help his father on the farm and such work as is usual in a new country; he moved to the farm on which he now lives in 1858, his father then owning it; he purchased it in 1867; the present buildings were erected in 1861, and are beautifully located near the township road; his farm is well improved, and bears the marks of care and good cultivation; the farm was entered in 1816 by Joseph Holmes, who sold it to Samuel Carothers, who sold it to Lewis Lybarger, and he to Samuel Fickes. His parents were of German descent, and he has the characteristics of that class of industrious people; honorable in his dealings with his fellow-man, he has the respect of his neighbors and acquaintances, exerting a large influence in his vicinity; he received a common-school education, and is intelligent, having quite a library. He married Miss Sarah Miller; they have two children—Boyd W., born Oct. 13, 1859; Austin I. J., born Oct. 29, 1862; they are both bright, intelligent boys, and promise to be useful and influential men.

FIREOVED, SOLOMON, pioneer and retired farmer; he was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., March 16, 1791; his father came from Prussia; his mother was an American; when he was about 3 years old, his father left Lebanon and moved to Cumberland Co., Penn., settling near Carlisle; at 16 years of age, he went to Carlisle to learn the trade of harness-making with Joseph Egolf; he stayed two years and a half, and returned to the farm; he remained about a year and a half. In the year 1811, he was married to Miss Catharine Swartz; they had two children—George and Isaac. His wife dying, he enlisted, March, 1814, in Carlisle, Penn., in Capt. George Hendel's company, 86th Rifles; soon after, he left Carlisle and marched to Pittsburgh, Penn., via the old stage route, across the Alleghanies; the snow was quite deep on the mountain, and the march was very tedious; from Pittsburgh, they marched by way of Erie, Penn.; crossed the Niagara River at "Black Rock," July 5, 1814, and was in the battle of Chippewa the same day; he was in the battle of Lundy's Lane July 25, 1814; he was wounded at the close of the fight by a buckshot, and, on the following day, was taken to Buffalo, to the hospital, where he remained until Aug. 26, 1814, when he was discharged. After returning from the army, he followed his trade for several years, and then went to farming. His second wife was Elizabeth Haak, of Cumberland Co., Penn.; they had nine children, five of whom are dead. In 1837, he left his native State for Ohio, and settled in Cass Township, Richland Co., where he farmed for a number of years, on the farm on which his son John now lives. In 1846, he went to London, Cass Township, where his wife died Oct. 4, 1860. He is a remarkable man for his age; has had an excellent constitution and has always been temperate in his habits, so that he is now hale and hearty, and can walk to Shelby, a distance of three miles, and return, with apparent ease; he is the oldest man in the township; he is spending his days with his son-in-law, Jacob Bushey.

FIREOVED, ELIZA ANN, MRS., widow of Levi Fireoved; her maiden name was Eliza Ann Bucher; she was born in Dauphin Co., Penn., March 8, 1828; her father, Peter Bucher, moved from Pennsylvania in 1829, and settled in Richland Co., where Eliza spent her childhood, with her parents, until she was married to Levi Fireoved, Dec. 21, 1848; they had seven children—Solomon P. Fireoved, born Sept. 15, 1850; John Albert, June 7, 1853; William Henry, March 6, 1856; Amos Franklin, Dec. 16, 1858; Levi Orin, July 14, 1860; two infants, born and died shortly afterward; Solomon P. Fireoved, died Aug. 5, 1852. Her husband, Levi Fireoved, died June 18, 1863; Amos Franklin Fireoved, died June 27, 1863; she has thus tasted her cup of sorrow, but has the consolation of the remaining children; her son Levi Orrin is the only son at home.

FIREOVED, JOHN, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Oct. 26, 1824; his father, Solomon Fireoved, removed from Pennsylvania in the year 1838, to Richland Co., Ohio; he came with him; he remained at home on the farm until he was 21 years of age. He was married, Dec. 24, 1845, to Miss Mary Wentz, a daughter of Henry Wentz; they have seven children, all living—Levi Fireoved, born Sept. 5, 1840 (is an engineer and resides at Crestline, Ohio); Hannah C., born March 6, 1849 (is married to Daniel Sanders, and resides in Ft. Wayne, Ind.); Solomon H., born May 1, 1852 (lives in Cass Township); Mary E., born Aug 14, 1854; Sarah A., born July 31, 1856, and Samantha J., born May 22, 1858.

GILMORE, W. H., cider manufacturer; he was born in Juniata Co., Penn., June 7, 1841; his parents removed from Pennsylvania in April, 1844, and arrived in Planktown May 1 of the same year, then to Blooming Grove, where they lived until the fall of the same year; moved to Butler Township and purchased a farm in the woods. They cleared it up and lived there some six years, then sold and moved to Blooming Grove Township, where they remained six months. In the mean time, they purchased the farm in Butler known as the "Chapman farm," and moved on it April 21, 1851. The subject of this sketch remained on the farm until December, 1869; he took charge of the farm at an early age, and in connection with the farm he commenced the manufacture of cider in 1861. He removed to Shiloh in 1869, and in connection with his other business he dealt in hay for two seasons, after which he attended exclusively to the cider business. About the 1st February, 1875, he bought the Shiloh Times, then published in Shelby, from Hon. S. S. Bloom, and took in as partners Dr. Clowes and Bro., at which time the Clear Grit and Times were consolidated, and out of which grew the Shiloh Review. They ran together under the firm name of W. H. Gilmore & Co., about one year and a half. He then purchased the interest of the Clowes Bros., and published it, as editor, until April, 1878. He then sold one-half interest. He repurchased it Dec. 1, and was editor and proprietor until March, 1879, when he sold the paper to J. C. Higgins, and gave his attention to his other business. He controls the stock yards of Shiloh, and is also land and excursion agent for the Kansas Pacific Railroad. He is what might be called a self-made man. Starting in the world without material help, he has by industry and strict adherence to business principles acquired for himself a good business. He is a man of keen business tact. He is liberal in his views, and takes hold of any enterprise which will add to the interest of the community in which he lives. He was married to Miss Margaret E. Hammond May 11, 1869. They have one child, a bright, promising boy, who was born Jan. 9, 1873.

GUTHRIE, N. S., retired farmer and pioneer; was born March 3, 1816, in Harrison Co., Ohio. His father, William Guthrie, came to Richland Co., Sept. 25, 1816, with his family of eight children. He settled in Blooming Grove Township when there were five families there, where he had entered two quarter-sections of land. He built a cabin, and his wife and three oldest boys then helped him to clear one acre of land, and put it in wheat, which they did. They had no fodder for the cattle. They subsisted on browse. His family was compelled to live on corn that had been frosted, which the cattle refused to eat. The meat they had was game. The first thing that he (N. S. Guthrie) recollects of doing was to gather some basswood-leaves for his mother to make a Dutch oven lid. During the winter of 1825–26, he went to school barefooted. His first book was made out of a shingle, with the alphabet on one side and words of two letters on the other. He was engaged in farming until he moved to Shiloh, Dec. 15, 1875, where he now resides. He was married to Miss Sarah Turbett April 30, 1840. They had twelve children, nine living, viz.: Oliver T., born Aug. 10, 1844; Ransom F., Oct. 22, 1845; Artimissa, March 27, 1847; Arkinson B., Aug. 14, 1848; Aberson, Dec. 27, 1849; Lucilia, June 23, 1851; Rebecca A., April 16, 1856; Emma I., April 23, 1858; Frank D., Jan. 23, 1863.

GUTHRIE, JAMES, grape and small-fruit grower, was born in Richland Co., Ohio, May 31, 1842; he spent his boyhood on his father's farm, attending the common schools of the district. He enlisted Sept. 7, 1861, in Co. I, 15th O. V. I., and served with the Army of the Cumberland, being in twenty-seven battles, besides a number of minor engagements; he was taken prisoner by John Morgan, at Stone River, Tenn., and was paroled on the field; he came home, but returned again about the 1st of April, although he need not have done so, as there was no exchange of prisoners, but wished rather to be in active service than be subject to a camp life at Camp Chase; returned to Murfreesboro, but was sent back on account of not being exchanged; he remained at home about one month, and again returned to his regiment at Murfreesboro and participated in all the engagements, never missing duty; he was discharged at the expiration of enlistment; returned and rented his father's farm; farmed eight years and then bought a tract of land near Shiloh, where he now resides; he put on improvements, building a comfortable dwelling; planted a vineyard of 1,350 vines, which are now in fine bearing condition, besides some 600 vines of recent planting; his farm bears marks of good cultivation and careful attention. His neighbors, irrespective of party, have kept him in offices of trust for the township for eleven years, thus showing that he is a man who has the confidence of the people; he is now one of the Trustees of Shiloh Select School. He was married Dec. 14, 1866, to Miss Susan Ehret; had three children—Amanda Ann; Carrie A., born July 4, 1871; her twin brother, John, died Oct. 4, 1871.

HENCH, SAMUEL, merchant, was born in Perry Co., Penn., Aug. 14, 1813; his father died when Samuel was but a few years old, and the raising of the family devolved upon his mother, who was compelled to put the children out; his mother bound him to John Bull, of Perry Co., Penn., for five years, to work on a farm; he had but limited advantages to attend school; he was indentured to Jacob Iches, of Perry Co., three years, to learn the milling trade; he followed milling at different places for twenty-five years; he was appointed Postmaster at Roseburg, Perry Co., Penn., by W. T. Barry, Postmaster General, May 24, 1834; he served three years; he came to Ohio in the fall of 1849 and settled in Richland Co., Ohio; he moved to Shiloh in the spring of 1861; he was appointed Postmaster March 22, 1864, by Mr. Blair, Postmaster General, and served very acceptably for thirteen years and six months. He was married to Miss Eliza Delancy, of Perry Co., Penn., Aug. 14, 1833; they had one son—Peter, born Sept. 26, 1834.

HENRY, CYRUS, pioneer, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born Dec. 18, 1812, in Stark Co., Ohio; he is of German extraction; his parents came to Richland Co., about 1828, and settled near where the subject of this sketch now resides. When about 19 years of age, he went to learn the shoemaking trade at Mansfield, where he remained about four years; he again returned to where he now lives, and has been farming and working at his trade ever since. His parents being poor, he was thrown entirely upon his own resources; he started in the world without a dollar, but by dint of hard labor and economy, he was enabled to buy the farm on which he lives; at the time he purchased it, it was covered with timber; he has succeeded in making for himself a pleasant and comfortable home. He was married to Miss Adaline Ensign, March 14, 1833; they had ten children, seven now living; his wife died March 21, 1874. He was again married, to Mrs. Abbie Gregg, Feb. 24, 1876; they had one child. He has the esteem of his neighbors, and is looked upon as a man of strict integrity.

HERSHISER, JOHN, pioneer; he was born in Bedford Co., Penn., Oct. 30, 1791, and is the second oldest man in Cass Township. He came to Ohio in 1829, and settled on the farm where he now lives; his farm at that time was almost entirely covered with forest, but, bringing with him the sturdy industry of his native State, he soon had considerable cleared, and under cultivation. He is one of those quiet men who exert an influence in the community in which they live. He was elected Justice of the Peace, and served for twelve years; he was solicited to serve longer but declined to do so, as the interest of his farm required his attention. During the time he was Justice of the Peace, he married forty-two couples. He was married to Miss Elizabeth May, Sept. 14, 1813; they had eight children, seven of whom are living. His children are well to do; his sons being farmers, except John, who is a carpenter. He has survived his wife many years; she died in September, 1855; he lives with his son, Leonard May Hershiser, on the old farm, and is passing the closing days of his life with that serenity which follows a well-spent youth.

HIGGINS, JOHN C., editor of the Shiloh Review; was born in Wayne Co., July 28, 1854. He learned printing in Orrville, Ohio, and worked as a journeyman on many of the leading papers of the State. Since his taking charge of the Review, he has increased its circulation, and made it a welcome visitor to the households of the patrons; he has brought up the paper in tone, and made it one of the leading weeklies of the county.

HUNTER, ELIZA, MRS., widow of John B. Hunter, was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Oct. 2, 1812; her maiden name was Ellis; she spent her youth on her father's farm; she was married Oct. 9, 1831; they have three children, all living; her husband died in August, 1836; she was therefore left alone with three small children, for whom she had to provide, but being a woman of excellent health, she managed to provide plentifully for them; she remained in New York after her husband's death, until 1844, when she came to Ohio, being accompanied by her brother, Sydney Ellis, and settled in Greenwich Township, Huron Co., where she shortly afterward purchased 10 acres of land; not getting possession of the little land for several months, she in the mean time worked for her neighbors at whatever she could find to do; after she moved into her home, she followed weaving for many years, and as there was plenty of work, she wove during the day, and in the evening did her housework; she thus succeeded in making a comfortable living for herself and children. She, with her family, went to Kansas, in 1857, and preempted land and returned to Kansas City, Mo., and engaged in hotel-keeping for two years; thence to Leavenworth, Kan., where she kept hotel one year. She returned to Ohio about 1860, and moved to Shiloh in 1869, where she is now living with her daughter, Mrs. Thorp, enjoying good health.

HUNTER, S. S., foreman and manager of Breneman's dry-goods and clothing store, Shiloh. He was born in Onondaga Co., N. Y., Feb. 10, 1834; about the age of 16 years, he went to work at the carpenter trade and remained at that about six years; he then went to Kansas City, Mo., and was engaged in a hotel about two years and a half; he then resumed his trade for a short time in Missouri; he went to New Orleans and worked at his trade for about six months; thence to Copiah Co., Miss., where he stayed about two years, engaged in contracting and building; he left Mississippi for Ohio, March 4, 1861; after arriving in Ohio he followed his trade up to the close of the war; he then farmed for three years, after which he removed to Shiloh, and took charge of the grocery and provision store of John Breneman; he was out of business for one year, after which time he took charge of the present business. He was married to Miss Julana C. Breneman Dec. 29, 1864; they have six children, five boys and one girl, all living.

HUSTON, TRACY, MRS., widow of Jesse Huston; she was born in Adams Co., Penn., March 4, 1811; her maiden name was Tracy Miller; she came of Pennsylvania German parentage, and inherits the characteristics of that people; she came to Ohio with her first husband, Adam Louck, about 1839; they lived one year in Stark Co.; they then came to Richland Co., where Mr. Louck died, in 1848; she was again married to John Clay, and removed to Ashland Co., where she remained five years; Mr. Clay dying, she was again married to Jesse Huston, with whom she lived until he was killed by a horse running away with him in Shiloh in April, 1879; having no children, she took Isaac Hollenback (who now lives on her farm), when he was about two months old. He taught school for twelve terms, and is highly respected by the community, thus showing he was instructed well in his youth.

LONG, DAVID, an early pioneer and retired farmer; was born in Knox Co., Ohio, Nov. 29, 1811. When he was 4 years old, his father, John Long, came to Richland Co. and settled where Richland (better known as Planktown) is now, about 1815; at that time there were no neighbors nearer than three miles, and the next nearest were five miles; he entered the land and built the first log cabin in the upper end of the township; he formerly came from York Co., Penn.; the first school taught in the township was in the log cabin which was built by Mr. John Long, when he had settled in the county; he died in 1842, aged about 77 years. David Long, the subject of this sketch, remained at home until he was about 20 years of age, and then went to farming near Richland; farmed for several years, and then moved to where he now resides—this was about the year 1839—where he has since remained; he was the ninth child of a family of ten children; he has seen two generations pass away, and has experienced the hardships of an early pioneer life. He joined the Methodist Church at an early age, and has been a consistent member of that denomination ever since, taking a lively interest in the work. There are six of the family still living—David Long, aged 68; twin sister, 68; W. W. Long, 71; Mrs. Murry, 74; Mary Wooly, 83; Hugh Long, 84. David Long was married to Miss Emily Rose Oct. 13, 1836; they had four children; his wife died Nov. 4, 1870.

LYBARGER, LEWIS, pioneer, farmer and stock-raiser; was born in Bedford Co., Penn., April 19, 1819. His father removed from Pennsylvania with his family, which consisted of himself and wife and five children, leaving one in Pennsylvania, who was married; this was in 1830; he went to Knox Co., Ohio, and remained eighteen months, and then came to Richland Co. and settled in Cass Township—then Plymouth—and purchased a quarter-section of land, covered with timber; he was therefore compelled to commence as an early settler; he lived and died where he first settled. The subject of this sketch lived on his father's farm and worked it until he purchased the farm on which he now resides, January, 1856; he built the buildings which are now on the farm; he is a man of quiet demeanor, and has the respect of the community in which he lives. He was married to Miss Margaret Walkup Feb. 24, 1842; they have ten children—Andrew, born Dec. 10, 1842; Valentine, Jan. 19, 1845; Oliver, Jan. 8, 1847; Barton E., Sept. 8, 1851; Lydia J., Dec. 13, 1853; Esther Belle, March 8, 1856; Harrison, Sept. 7, 1858. Margaret Walkup, wife of Lewis Lybarger, was born Dec. 10, 1818, in Richland Co., Ohio; her father entered the farm on which they now live; at that time the Indians were numerous, and they frequently visited her father's house; they often exchanged game for corn-meal, etc.; Mrs. Lybarger remembers very well when the Indians left Ganges; she was attending school, and remembers seeing them go by on their way West; Mrs. Lybarger relates that one of the Indians expressed a desire to live with her father, Mr. Walkup, and learn farming; he would hold the plow while Mr. Walkup would drive, but when the sun would shine very warm he would soon leave for the woods.

McCARRON, FREDERICK, blacksmith; he was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, Sept. 22, 1841; his parents moved to Knox Co., Ohio, when he was young, and he spent his boyhood on the farm; about the age of 18 years, he went to learn the trade of blacksmith, at Shenandoah, this county; he worked at that about two years and a half, and then returned to Knox Co., where he stayed about one year and a half; he then returned to this county and remained about one year. He enlisted in the spring of 1864, in Co. K, 126th O. V. I., for three years; he was in the battles of the Wilderness, Cold Harbor, Spottsylvania, Fairfax Court House and in front of Petersburg, and with the army until the surrender of Lee; he was discharged at Columbus, Ohio; he was hurt on his way home from the army by being knocked off the cars by a bridge; this was at Wheeling, W. Va.; he suffers from this accident very much, occasionally, as it was a contusion of the head. When he returned home, he went to farming; he, after some time, worked at his trade in Morrow Co.; moved thence to Shiloh, in 1871, where he has since remained. He was married to Miss Percilla Hunter Nov. 28, 1865; they have six children, four living—three boys and one girl.

MILLER, SAMUEL, farmer; was born in Blooming Grove Township Dec. 16, 1842; his father, Samuel Miller, immigrated to Ohio from Cumberland Co., Penn., in August, 1839; he settled in Blooming Grove Township, where he remained twenty-one years, and then came to Cass Township in September, 1862. He was born in 1808, and was married to Miss Catharine Shaffer, who was born in 1811; they had thirteen children, six sons and seven daughters; those living are John, farmer, lives in Blooming Grove; Mary Ann, married to Milton White, and lives in Butler Township; Samuel Miller, the subject of this notice, was married to Sarah A. Wentz April 22, 1875; Chester C., born July 30, 1876; Harry Blaine, born March 10, 1880; Catherine, married to Charles Moore, farmer, and lives in St. Clair Co., Mo.; Diannah, married Levi S. Wentz, farmer, and lives in Cass Township; Elizabeth J., married Solomon Fireoved, lives in Cass Township; Henry T., farmer, lives in Barry Co., Mich.; Adaline, married to John J. Shoup, farmer, Huron Co., Ohio; James M., Cass Township. Mr. Miller is a reader of good books; he is one of the leading young men of the township.

NEWMAN, JOHN M., farmer; was born in Richland Co.; his father, Henry Newman, was also born in the county; his grandfather, M. Newman, was one of the pioneers of this county. Mr. J. M. Newman was married to Miss Eva Miller, of Jackson Township, Jan. 28, 1880.

NOBLE, HARVEY, retired farmer; he was born in Washington Co., Penn., May 12, 1806; his father died when Harvey was about 13 years of age, leaving his mother with four children; his older brother having gone to learn his trade just previous to the death of their father, it devolved upon him to maintain his mother, and he was, therefore, compelled to work at anything he could find to do: about the age of 17, he started, with some of his neighbors, for Ohio, of which he had previously heard a good report; he returned home in about three months and remained about one year, when he returned to Ohio and entered 80 acres of land, now owned by N. S. Guthrie, in Blooming Grove Township; he has owned, in different places, 850 acres of land; he has been industrious and economical; was one year without a dollar, but still persisted, until at last he accomplished his object—the possession of property. He was married to Miss Margaret Little, of Washington Co., Penn., March 8, 1827. They had eight children, six living at the present time; his wife died July 2, 1865. He was again married, to Mary J. Hopkins, September, 1867; they had four children, three living at the present time. His mother died while living with him, at the advanced age of 97 years. Mr. Noble has a good mind for a man of his age, but, meeting with an accident some years ago, he is partially disabled from walking.

OPDYKE, C. L., pioneer, farmer and stock-raiser; was born in New Jersey, Hunterdon Co., Sept. 21, 1827. His father, John Opdyke, came to Ohio in the spring of 1836, and settled in Plymouth Township. He remained with his father about two years, and then returned to New Jersey, where he remained until he was about 17 years old; he then returned to Ohio and remained with his father until he was married. After he was married, he moved to his own farm, which he had bought in 1849. He now owns some 329 acres of good land. He is held in high esteem by his neighbors, who look upon him as a straightforward man. He is Township Trustee, and a member of the School Board of Shiloh. He was married to Miss Sarah Moss Nov. 10, 1853; they had nine children, eight living and one dead.

OZIER, NELSON, stock-dealer; was born in Union Co., Penn., Jan. 4, 1823. His father, Stephen Ozier, came to Richland Co. about 1824; he came to Mansfield and remained a short time; he then moved to Petersburg, Richland (now Ashland) Co.; he remained there about one year, and then moved to Olivesburg, Richland Co., where he died. After his father's death it devolved upon Nelson and his brother, John Ozier, to provide for their mother, two sisters and younger brother, who were at home. The subject of this sketch worked at anything he could find to do by which he could make a living. Some four years after his father's death, the entire charge of providing for the home fell upon him, as his brother got married and went to work for himself. At a very early age, his natural business tact commenced to develop, and he, therefore, conceived the idea of doing business for himself. He accordingly bought six barrels of eggs for the Mansfield market, and started full of expectation of a handsome profit, but he had the misfortune to upset the wagon and break the eggs, so that his first investment proved a failure. He returned home somewhat disheartened. He shortly after had an opportunity of taking charge of 100 head of cattle to drive to Lancaster, Penn., which he did. After his return to Ohio, he soon found an opportunity to buy stock and wool for D. B. Sexton, of Cleveland. He remained with him until 1850, when he engaged in buying stock on his own account and delivering them to Buffalo and other points East. He followed shipping stock of different kinds until 1856, at which time he commenced to deal exclusively in sheep and wool, buying and selling as many as fifteen thousand in a year. He has been engaged in the business ever since. For a number of years his brother, David Ozier, has also been in the same business with him. In the fall of 1864, he was nominated for the office of Sheriff of Richland Co., by the Republicans, and was elected, although the county gave a Democratic majority on the State ticket. After his term of office, which he filled very acceptably, he still continued his present business. He moved from Rome to Shiloh in 1875, at which place he still resides. He was married to Miss Margaret Snapp, of Rome, Ohio, March, 1852; they have two children.

OZIER, FREDRICK, was born in the town of Rome on the 2d of August, 1858, but has resided the most of his existence at Shiloh. His occupation principally, has been that of a dealer in horses, cattle, sheep and hogs; he is considered to be one of Shiloh's best citizens.

PETTIT, MERRIT, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in this county Nov. 24, 1835; his father died before he was born; he was with his mother until he was 10 years of age; his mother marrying again, he was thrown upon his own resources at an early age, but, being of a determined mind, he overcame all obstacles. In the fall of 1861, he moved to Huron Co., Ohio; he stayed eighteen months, then moved to Planktown, Richland Co., where he stayed about two years, and then went to Huron Co.; he stayed about one year, and sold his farm and returned to Cass Township, Richland Co.; he stayed one year, and then moved to Indiana, bought a farm, stayed two years, and returned to Richland Co., where he now lives. He was married to Miss Mary A. Ruckman Jan. 26, 1861; they had three children—Christina, born Nov. 21, 1862; Amelia, born Oct. 12, 1866, and Nancy, born March 12, 1868. Christina Broach, widow of Peter Broach, a pioneer of Richland Co., was born in Hampshire Co., Va., March 27, 1804; her father, Thomas Pettit, came from Virginia in 1814, and settled near Mansfield, where he died. She was married to Peter Broach Aug. 30, 1826; they moved, a year afterward, to where she now lives; they stayed some time with Ephraim Vail, until they built a cabin, which was located about fifteen feet south of where the dwelling now stands, in which she and M. Pettit reside; she has good health, and remembers well things which happened sixty years ago.

PITTENGER, M. R., Justice, Shiloh.

ROSE, MARY M., MRS., widow of Andrew M. Rose; was born in Cass, then Plymouth Township, June 29, 1819; she is one of the oldest citizens living, who was born in and still lives in the township; her maiden name was Green; she spent her youth on her father's farm. She was married to Andrew M. Rose, July 18, 1839, and has lived in the county ever since, except two years when she resided in Lorain Co., Ohio. Mr. Rose was born in Belmont Co., Ohio, Feb. 7, 1817, and died in Richland Co., Sept. 5, 1872; he came to Richland Co., when a boy, with his parents; they had six children, five of whom are living.

ROSE, ELMORE Y., farmer, was born in Richland Co., Ohio, Dec. 15, 1844; he spent his youth on the farm; he enlisted May 2, 1864, for 100 days, in Co. H, 163d O. N. G. and served with the command; he was discharged with the regiment, and returned home, where he remained until February, 1865, when he again enlisted in Co. A, 187th O. V. I; he served with the regiment and was discharged Jan. 20, 1866; on his return home he learned the trade of shoemaking, and worked at it since, except two years and a half, when he was farming. He was married to Miss Dorcas Backensto March 15, 1868; they have one child, Burtie E. Rose, born March 11, 1869.

ROSE, ENSIGN B., farmer; he was born in this county, March 28, 1843, and was raised on a farm; at the age of 19, he enlisted in the 2d Heavy Artillery, Co. D, July 25, 1863; he was with the Army of the Cumberland; he was in the ordnance department at Knoxville, Tenn., about thirteen months, and the balance of the time was with the regiment; he was discharged with his regiment Aug. 23, 1865. After he returned he worked for two summers at carding and spinning; he then went to farming, at which he has since been engaged. He was married to Miss Catharine J. Adams Jan. 8, 1873. They have three children.

ROSE, HIRAM S., blacksmith; he was born in this county, April 23, 1841; he was raised on the farm; he received a common-school education; he enlisted in the 1st Ohio Independent Battery and served with the army of the Potomac most of the time; he was in fifteen regular engagements with his company; he never was off duty; he was discharged with his company; after he returned home, he went to farming and, in 1873, he moved to Shiloh, where he has since lived, engaged at his trade. He was married to Miss Mary Hunter Nov. 1, 1866.

ROSEBOROUGH, J. E., M. D., was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, Feb. 16, 1834, his father dying when he was 4 years old; he remained at home, attending the common schools until he was 14 years of age; he attended school at Wooster, Ohio, at intervals, for several years; his means being limited, he taught school, and did anything by which he could obtain means to pursue his studies; he attended school at Vermillion Institute, at Hayesville, for a part of two terms; he followed teaching for several years. He went to Iowa in the year 1857, and taught numbers of terms; while in Iowa, he took up medicine, and read about six months; he spent some time in Prof. Hughes' office, at Keokuk; he taught school again one term, and then went to Cincinnati, Ohio; he spent some time in Commercial Hospital, for medical information; he then went back to Wayne Co., Ohio, and commenced reading medicine as though he had never read; he read with Dr. L. Firestone, of Wooster, for three years; he attended lectures one term at Ann Arbor, Mich.; while there, he graduated in the chemical department; he went back to Iowa and practiced medicine for about one year; he returned to Burlington, Fulton Co., Ohio, and practiced one year; he went to Congress, Wayne Co., and practiced a short time with Dr. J. Georget; he then went to Charity Hospital Medical College, at Cleveland; he graduated there in the spring of 1864, and came back to Wayne Co., Ohio; he practiced some time with Dr. W. C. Moore, of Wooster. In the spring of 1866, he removed to Shiloh, Richland Co., Ohio, where he now resides, and has been in successful practice ever since, except two years, when his health failed; he went to Henry Co., and engaged in the wood, butter and egg business; he returned to Shiloh to resume his practice. Previous to the war, he taught school in Kentucky one year, then went to Mississippi and sold books for some years. He went into the army at the first call for three months; at the expiration of his time, he returned to Wooster and received a commission as First Lieutenant; he raised a company and joined Co. C, 120th O. V. I.; he remained in the service about one year, and resigned on account of ill health. Before going out with his company, the citizens of Congress Township presented him with a sword and sash, in acknowledgment of his saving the township from the impending draft by raising the company. After he came home, the citizens elected him Captain of militia, and he was afterward elected and commissioned Lieutenant Colonel of the same. He was married, Oct. 4, 1870, to Miss Celesta Cleland, of Shiloh; they have had five children, four of whom are living. The Doctor is known in the north part of the county as the "Happy Compound man," on account of a medicine known as "Happy Compound," of which he is proprietor.

SHUPE, J. N., proprietor of Exchange Bank and produce dealer, was born in Zoar, Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, Jan. 25, 1836; spent his boyhood with his parents; he received a common-school education; he lived successively in Ashland, Ashland Co., Ohio, Sharon Township, Richland Co., and moved with his father to Shelby and remained there for some fifteen years; he clerked in the grocery store of J. May, of Shelby, for some time; about the age of 20 years, he moved with his father to La Fayette, Ohio, and clerked for him in a dry-goods and grocery store; he remained in La Fayette about four years; removed to Rome with his father; he attended store there two years, and then went to Cleveland; opened a commission house under the firm name of Glenn, Burnham & Shupe; was one year in business there; he went from Cleveland to New York; attended grocery store one year on commission, and clerked in the Western Gleaner newspaper office for six months; he returned to Shiloh and engaged in the grocery business again under the firm of Shupe & Son; sold out, and went into dry goods and groceries; remained in that about three years, but not being successful in storekeeping, he was compelled to go into bankruptcy. He went into the produce business in the fall of 1867, at which he has since been engaged; seeing an opening for banking in Shiloh, he also engaged in that in the fall of 1874. He is a self-made man, starting in the world without a dollar, he has, by strict adherence to the principles of business, built a paying trade. He was married to Miss Maggie J. Sarett Jan. 5, 1864; they had two children—Minnie May, born Feb. 13, 1867, and Harry, Jan. 23, 1876; his wife died Feb. 12, 1876. He was married again, Feb. 26, 1878, to Miss Emma R. Little, of Pittstown, N. J.

SNYDER, CURTIS S., carpenter, contractor and builder; was born in Juniata Co., Penn., Nov. 5, 1850; attended common schools until he was 17 years old; commenced his trade in 1868, with his brother; he remained three years; he went to Williamsport, Penn., in the spring of 1871, thence to Titusville and thence to Oil City, Penn., working at his trade a short time in each place; he returned home a short time, and started for the West, arriving in Shiloh Nov. 1, 1871; he went back to Pennsylvania in the following spring, and was married to Miss Nannie E. Orr, of Juniata Co., Penn., April 4, 1872, and on the 8th of the same month returned to Shiloh, where they have since remained; they had four children—Lizzie Irene was born Dec. 31, 1872; Richard Malvern, Feb. 24, 1875, died May 27, 1875; Maggie May, born June 2, 1876; Lathie Maud, May 24, 1878. He has built twenty-three houses in Shiloh, besides numerous jobs in the surrounding country. He can at all times be found ready to contract work.

STINE, HENRY, farmer; he was born in Berks Co., Penn., May 18, 1818; his father, Adam Stine, emigrated from Pennsylvania in the year 1833; he went to Clark Co., Ohio, but did not like the country or the customs of the people, and soon moved his family to Richland Co., where he afterward lived; he died Oct. 4, 1876, aged over 81 years. Henry lived with his parents, during their lifetime caring for them. His mother was confined to her bed eight years, hence there devolved upon him more than usually falls to the lot of one man who struggles to do his duty. He was married to Miss Amanda Bertorf in the year 1857; they had eight children, six of whom are living.

SWARTZ, JACOB, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., May 2, 1820; his father came to Ohio Oct. 5, 1835; settled in Plymouth, now Cass Township; he remained with his father until he was 30 years of age, assisting to clear and improve the farm. He married Miss Mary Rasey, of Bucyrus, of Crawford Co., Ohio, and then went to farming on the farm he now lives on; farmed nineteen years on it as renter; purchased it in 1869; he has, since purchasing the farm, greatly improved it, putting the buildings on some eight years after he bought. He came of Pennsylvania German descent; is honest, industrious and economical; his farm is under a good state of cultivation; his wife is an excellent helpmeet, ann they have all life's comforts.

WENTZ, SOLOMON, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Perry Co., Penn., Nov. 12, 1821; he spent his boyhood on a farm and in learning the carpenter trade, until he was 19 years of age; he then went to Juniata Co., Penn., and remained there one year; he then went to Schuylkill Co., Penn., and remained one year; returned to Perry Co. and remained one year, and then emigrated to Richland Co., Ohio; walked from Perry Co. to Pittsburgh; took steamboat to Steubenville, Ohio, and thence by foot again; after arriving, he worked at his trade for some five years, and then engaged in the saw-mill business, purchasing one-third interest, and, the second year, one-half interest; worked at that for several years; the mill finally burning, he disposed of the remaining machinery; purchased the farm he now resides on in 1865; moved the house, the same year he bought, from London; he came of German Pennsylvania stock, and is an excellent farmer and a good citizen, honest in all his dealings. He was married to Miss Catherine Fireoved, of Cass Township; they have seven children—Mary Jane Wentz, born July 9, 1851, married Henry J. Sheely; Sarah Catherine Wentz, born Nov. 28, 1853, married to Frank Darling; George F. Wentz, born July 28, 1856, lives in Chicago; Solomon A. Wentz, born Dec. 2, 1857, died March 24, 1862; Annie Laura Wentz, born March 29, 1865; Clara Susan, born Oct. 3, 1867; Charles Delbert, born Sept. 15, 1873. The last three yet live at home.

WHITE, SAMUEL, farmer and stock-raiser; was born in Columbia Co., Penn., Feb. 12, 1807; spent his childhood on his father's farm until his mother's death, which was about the year 1830. Was married to Miss Jane Vault Nov. 30, 1830; had two children while in Pennsylvania—Mary Elizabeth White, born Nov. 18, 1831; Sarah Jane White, born July 4, 1834. Having heard of Ohio as a beautiful country, he concluded to emigrate and leave his native State for the wilds of that new country; so, having made all the necessary arrangements, he, with his wife and one child (Mary Elizabeth having died), bade adieu to friends and neighbors and started for Ohio, in a two-horse wagon, via Pittsburgh, and, after sixteen days' journey, they landed in Mansfield, when the town was scarcely as large as Shiloh now is, having only $90 in money; being persuaded to go farther West, he started on foot, leaving his family near Mansfield, and went as far as Indiana, and thence to Michigan; but, not liking the country, the weather being extremely wet, he returned to Richland Co., and, having some acquaintance in Plymouth (now Cass Township), he took his family and started north. Liking the appearance of the country, he purchased an 80-acre tract in the northern part of the township, living there nearly three years; but, being sickly a good part of the time, he concluded to leave that locality and move farther south, which he did, settling on the farm he now owns in the year 1833; he experienced all the hardships of a new country; at that time, everything was very scarce, and wheat was worth $2.50, oats, $1, potatoes, $1.25, and everything in proportion; this was when he first came out. He at first purchased 40 acres, and added from time to time such as he could buy of adjoining land, until now he has a large farm, well fenced and improved. His children are William C., born Oct. 18, 1836; John F., born May 17, 1840; Anna E., born Oct. 1, 1842; Henry N., born Nov. 2, 1847.

WILLET, ABRAHAM, retired farmer and an "old pioneer;" was born in Columbia Co., Penn., March 1, 1801; he lived with his parents until he was married to Esther Aikman, of Columbia Co., Penn.; had two children, one of whom died in infancy; Margaret married in Pennsylvania. He rented a farm and remained on it one year. His wife died in September, 1826; after the death of his wife, he went back to his mother's farm; remained there three years; he then married Catherine Hazlett, of Columbia Co., Penn.; he again rented a farm in Columbia Co., lived one year on it, then removed on a farm near Bloomsburg, Penn., and stayed there three years; hearing favorable reports of the then new country of Ohio, and wishing to obtain for himself a farm and to gain a competence for his declining years, he sold his farming implements, and, bidding adieu to friends and neighbors of his native county, he started with his little family in a two-horse wagon, coming via Pittsburgh, settling in Richland Co., Ohio; he bought an improvement right of a 50-acre tract in Plymouth, now Cass; he paid all the money he had except $28; the improvements were of the kind usually in a new country, consisting of a log house and stable; he went to work with the characteristic energy of the most of his class of pioneers, to carve for himself a home and competence; he soon felt able to buy another tract of 58 acres adjoining him, and continued from time to time to buy until now his farm is one of the best in the township, if not in the county; the improvements are good and the land under good cultivation; his family are all living near him. His second wife died in the year 1843, leaving a family of small children. He, after some time, married Miss Leah Bevier, of Richland Co.; had one child—Ransom Willet, who grew to manhood, being 26 years and 10 months old when he died. This was a hard blow, as it fell unexpectedly, when the "boy" was in the vigor of his youth and had the promise of long life. Mr. W. is enjoying good health and spending the closing days of his life in happiness and plenty.

WILLET, HANNAH, MRS., widow of William Willet. She was born in Columbia Co., Penn., May 5, 1797, her maiden name was Webb; she is of English extraction; her father was one of the party of surveyors who ran the first State line between Pennsylvania and New York State. Her youth was spent upon a farm. She was married to William Willet Jan. 29, 1818, and lived with her husband until the fall of 1834, when she emigrated to Ohio, bringing their family of five children with them, who are all living; Mr. Willet had, however, been to Ohio and purchased the tract of land, on which they settled after coming out, and on which she still resides; William Willet was born May 24, 1793, and died in 1858; he learned the trade of tanning in Bloomsburg, Penn., and while he resided there followed it; after he moved to Ohio, he turned his attention to farming and tanning; in 1836, he built the tannery now occupied by his son, Abram Willet, probably the first tannery of any pretensions that was in the present limits of Cass Township; the old home stood where the present comfortable dwelling now stands; Mrs. Willet is a pleasant and affable lady; she has suffered much from rheumatism, but, notwithstanding this, she is bright in her mental faculties; she enjoys a large circle of friends, and is spending her days in a pleasant home with her son and two daughters.

Mr. Urich has lived in this township since his marriage and owns a well-improved farm.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

BARBER, M. M., Justice of the Peace, and farmer; he was born in Union Co., Penn., Nov. 8, 1824. At 14 years of age, he went to learn the trade of printing, in New Berlin, Penn., in the office of the Evangelical Association, which has since been removed to Cleveland, Ohio; he worked at printing some six years, learning the various branches of the trade; the business not agreeing with his health, he left the office, and, with his wife and father-in-law, in 1846, started for Ohio, and settled near where he now resides. He was elected Township Clerk in 1848, which office he has held ever since, except one year; in 1850, he was also elected Justice of the Peace, which office he has since held, being elected ten successive times of three years each; he has also been delegate to numerous political conventions; he enjoys the confidence of the community, and his decisions are rarely reversed; he is a Director of the Buckeye Fire Insurance Company of Shelby. He is a man of quiet demeanor. Politically, he is a Democrat. He was married to Mary Ann Garret Sept. 9, 1845, in Union Co., Penn.; they had ten children, nine of whom are living; Mrs. Barber was born in Union Co., Penn., Aug. 3, 1826.

BARNES, PATRICK, farmer; he was born in Franklin Co., Penn., in 1814, and spent his early days there; he was put out to work about the age of 10 years with his uncle; his parents being poor, he was thus compelled to go out in the world; he remained with his uncle until he was about 19 years of age, when he went to work at the carpenter trade with William Mackey, of Franklin Co., Penn., and served two years, and then at journeyman's work; he followed his trade until he came to Ohio, about 1844; he had previously come out, however, and worked for several months; he settled in Jackson Township, and followed his trade, contracting and building, until within the last few years. He was married to Miss Catharine Picking, in February, 1843; they had ten children, eight of whom are living; his wife died in May, 1879. He is spending his remaining days on his pleasant farm, about three miles east of Shelby; he built a number of the buildings in his neighborhood, and was considered a reliable workman.

BRICKER, ISAAC, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., July 24, 1823; his father, Capt. Henry Bricker, was known by that name from the fact that he raised a company of men and started for Baltimore, at which place there was a battle going on between the American and British armies; before he arrived, however, the fight was over, and he returned home with his company; he still kept his company organized, ready for any emergency. He was born in Lancaster, Penn., in January, 1790, where he lived until the year 1831, when he, with his wife and five children, emigrated to Ohio and settled in Jackson Township, about three and a half miles southeast of Shelby, where his son Isaac now resides. After he purchased the property, he commenced the erection of a place to live in; there was an unfinished building that had been intended for a schoolhouse, which he completed for a dwelling; this stood near where the present dwelling now stands; he then commenced the arduous task of clearing up the farm and improving. He was active in all the affairs of the county and township, which he adopted as his home, but refused all offers to take any part as an officer in the affairs of the community. He had the esteem of the community in which he lived, being honest, plain and blunt, never fearing to speak his mind freely. He died in 1855, leaving a family of five sons. His wife, whose maiden name was Rachel Kneesle, survived him some fifteen years. The subject of this sketch spent his youth on a farm, attending such schools as were in the community at that time. In 1849, he was taken with the "gold fever," and he, with five others, started, joining a party at Independence, Mo.; they crossed the overland route. He remained there three years, working in the mines, and was successful in accomplishing his purpose. He returned home by way of the Isthmus; he remained about six months in Ohio and Pennsylvania. He again returned to California by way of the same route he came, and engaged in the same business, that of mining; he remained three years, and was again successful. He returned to Ohio and purchased land; he bought out the heirs of the "old homestead," where he spent his youth, and where every scene was dear to him. He is a man of public spirit, and fills the position of one of the directors of the National Bank, of Shelby; he is also one of the managers of the Buckeye Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Shelby; he superintends quite extensive farming, and is one of the most successful in the county. He speaks his mind fully, and, while he is strong in his opinions, he is open to convictions. He was married to Miss Caroline Sipe in April, 1856. They had fourteen children, twelve of whom are living.

BRINER, JOHN, farmer; he was born in Perry Co., Penn., May 23, 1813; he spent his youth on a farm. His father, John Briner, hearing of Ohio, resolved to settle there, where land was cheap and where he might get each of his children a home; so, having made all necessary arrangements for the trip, he started in his wagon for his new home; he settled on the farm now owned by the widow of Henry Briner, in Jackson Township; this was in 1832; he died at an advanced age, on the farm. The subject of this sketch remained at home until 1835, when he moved on the farm now occupied by him, and built a log house near where the present homestead is now located; he cleared most of the farm and built all the present comfortable buildings; he has been an active worker, a good manager, and, as his children get married, he is enabled to give each of his sons 80 acres of land and his daughters 40. He was married to Miss Sarah Henry Dec. 25, 1834; they had twelve children, nine of whom are living, six of them being in Williams Co., Ohio. Mrs. Briner was born in Perry Co., Penn., Nov. 25, 1811; her father emigrated to Harrison Co., Ohio, and, in 1833, moved to Jackson Township; he remained in Ohio for a number of years, but, being desirous of seeing the land of his birth, the home of his childhood, he resolved to take a trip East, and was on that ill-fated train which collided near the village of Thompsontown, Juniata Co., Penn., and where so many met a quick and certain death; after the collision, the wreck took fire, and it is supposed that he was wedged in between some timbers where he could not extricate himself, and he, with many others, fell a victim to the flames; the doors of the cars were also locked, and this may have prevented the escape of some. Mrs. Briner had six sisters and five brothers, all living but one; the oldest is 70 years and the youngest 50 years of age.

CAIRNS, JOSEPH, farmer; P. O. Spring Mills; he was born in Mansfield in October, 1837. Some time after, his father moved to Jackson, on the farm now occupied by his three sons. The subject of this notice has remained on the farm ever since. He moved to where he now resides in 1864; he takes an active interest in the affairs of the county and township; politically, he is a Democrat, and is an influential member of his party. He has held several offices in the township, and, by advice of his friends, he allowed his name to go before the people for a prominent office, but his father being desirous of receiving the nomination for the same office, he withdrew his name. He was married to Miss Sarah Kuhn, of Plymouth Township, May, 1862; they have had ten children, seven of whom are living.

CAIRNS, JOHN G., farmer; P. O. Spring Mills; he was born in Mansfield Jan. 27, 1840. He spent his youth on a farm. He enlisted in Co. E, 32d O. V. I., July 27, 1861, for three years. The regiment to which he belonged was with the Army of the Tennessee; he participated in all the battles with his regiment, and, while in the siege of Vicksburg, he was with a party of men who were in the trenches in front of the rebel batteries, where, by order, they were compelled to keep up a constant firing; the guns becoming very dirty from constant use during the day, they would rebound at each discharge, and as they were so situated against the side of the ditch, they had no way by which they could protect themselves, but had to stand the rebound against their shoulders. He did the firing of two guns, while the other man did the loading. From this he received a very serious injury in his shoulder, from which he has never fully recovered. He was discharged at Chattanooga in September, 1864. After his return home, he went to farming. He resided about six years in Madison Township. He is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in the affairs of the party. He has held the office of Assessor for two terms. He was married to Helen M. Livensparger March 14, 1865; they have had eight children, five of whom are living.

CLARK, CALVIN, farmer; he was born in Washington Co., Penn., Aug. 23, 1802; his parents emigrated from Pennsylvania, with their family of six children, in the spring of 1815, and settled two miles south of Mansfield, where they took up 160 acres of land; they remained there about three years, and then sold out and moved three miles north of Mansfield, where they purchased 160 acres; they remained there some seven years, and then went to live with their son, Calvin. When Calvin was about 20 years of age, he left the farm, and he and one of his brothers went to brick-making; he worked at that for some two years, and then took a lease of 30 acres of land which is now embraced between First and Fourth streets, in the western part of Mansfield, and is now covered with residences; he leased this land in 1822 for the term of seven years, getting all he could raise on it during that time for clearing and fencing it; he built a log house, which is yet standing; it has since been weather-boarded and somewhat remodeled; when he first came to Mansfield, there was not a frame building in the village; after leaving the lease, he moved into Sharon Township, about one mile south of where Shelby now stands, where he cleared considerable land; he purchased where he now lives in 1829, and, two years later, moved on it, where he has since resided. His brothers and sisters are all dead, and he alone is left of a large family. Religiously, he is a Presbyterian; he is most agreeable and courteous in manners, and his character is unimpeachable; he enjoys the esteem and confidence of all who know him; he is a man of great mental strength for one who has been so active in the arduous work of pioneer farming and clearing away the forest; he can recollect dates of a few years ago as well as those of his early years; he is passing the evening of his life on his favorite spot, where, forty-nine years ago, he settled. He was married to Miss Mary Fulton, of Richland, in October, 1824; they had seven children, five girls and two sons; his children are all married and living in Richland Co., except Mrs. Ritchie, who resides in Williams Co. His wife died in October, 1874.

CLARK, SAMUEL, farmer; he was born in Richland Co., Ohio, in October, 1825; he has spent his life upon a farm, and takes an active interest in his chosen vocation. He is a Presbyterian in religion, and a Republican in politics. He is a man of quiet demeanor, and exerts an influence in the councils of party. He was married to Polly Jane King, of Richland Co.; they had a family of ten children, seven of whom are living. He enjoys the respect of his neighbors, and never intrudes his political opinion upon those who differ with him in that respect. Socially, he is like his father, Calvin Clark; he has led a temperate life, and has been a hard worker. Shortly after he was married, he moved to where he now resides; he has his farm under excellent cultivation.

COOPER, DANIEL, pioneer farmer and stock-raiser; was born in Sharon (now Jackson) Township Oct. 19, 1834; he remained with his father until he was 22 years of age, receiving his education in the district schools. Mr. Cooper married Miss Sarah Briner, who was born about 1828, in Perry Co., Penn., and, as a result of their union, had thirteen children, eight of whom are living—Alvina, Henry, Mary, Franklin, Diana, Daniel, Jane and Burgetta. Mr. Cooper, with his family, moved to Williams Co., Ohio, about 1846, remaining there seven years, when they disposed of their farm and moved to Hillsdale Co., Mich., purchasing 240 acres of land; remaining in Michigan nearly four years, he became discouraged with sickness, and again disposed of his land and returned to his native county, where he still remains, one of the stanch men of old Jackson Township, where he has been elected Township Treasurer for twelve or thirteen consecutive years.

COOPER, WILLIAM A., fruit-grower; was born in Richland Co., in December, 1835; his father, Jacob Cooper, was born in Connecticut, in 1793, and moved to Southern Ohio about 1815; he remained there until about 1820, when he came to Sharon, now Jackson Township, and located on the farm now owned by William Kerr. He was married to Miss Lydia Oakley; they had nine children, six of whom are living. His wife, who was born in 1800, died in 1866; he died in 1876, aged 83 years. Mr. Cooper died where he first settled. His son, William A., the subject of this notice, remained at home until he was about 20 years of age; he resided in Shelby about a year; in the fall of 1863, he moved to where he now resides; he gives his attention to fruit-growing. He was married to Miss Sarah Jane Swartz, July, 1859; they had seven children, five of whom are living; Mrs. Cooper died Feb. 16, 1877, aged about 35 years.

COOVER, ISAAC, farmer; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Oct. 1828, and spent his youth on his father's farm; he left his native State and came to Ohio in 1862, and lived near Ganges for some ten years; he then moved to Jackson Township, where he has since been living; he is a pleasant neighbor and an excellent farmer; he has the respect of all with whom he deals, as he is a plain, straightforward man. He was married to Mary Dickson, of Cumberland Co., Penn., 1853.

CRUM, ELIZABETH, widow of Isaac Crum, was born in Richland Co., Ohio, February, 1824, in Mifflin Township; her father, John Gates, emigrated to Ohio from New Jersey, about the year 1823, and settled in Richland Co., where he afterward lived; he died in 1860. Isaac Crum was born in Franklin Township, in October, 1817, and spent his youth on his father's farm; in the fall of 1856, he was elected Clerk of the Court of Richland Co., and served three years; he was re-elected in 1859, and served a part of the second term, when he died of consumption, in March, 1861, in Mansfield, aged about 43 years. He was politically a Democrat. Isaac Crum and Elizabeth Gates were married in October, 1844; they had seven children, four of whom are living.

DRAKE, JOHN, farmer. He was born in Northumberland Co., Penn., in June, 1806; his mother came to Ohio in 1825, and remained about one year in Stark Co., and then removed to Wayne Co., where she remained about five years; she brought her family of four children with her—William, John, Elizabeth and Jane; two sons having died in Pennsylvania; Nathaniel Drake, her husband, was born, lived and died in Pennsylvania; Mrs. Drake's maiden name was Nancy Hougland; she died in 1855, aged 67 years; William and Elizabeth are dead. While the family were in Wayne Co., John and William contracted to clear and fence fifty acres of land, and split 5,000 rails for an eighty-acre tract in Jackson Township; this is the property now owned by the subject of this sketch, and on which he now resides. In 1831, he, with his mother, came to this county and began the improvement of his land. He had the common experience of most of people who came to the frontier settlements. He has succeeded in making for himself and family a pleasant home. He is of English extraction. His forefathers came to America at a very early date. It is known that the family in England were very wealthy and influential, but on account of political troubles, some of them emigrated, and, unfortunately, the family history has not been handed down so as to keep up that connection which is necessary to establish a claim. There is a vast fortune in England for the Drake family, but at present it cannot be definitely settled. The family date as far back as 1560. Mr. Drake is a man of positive opinions and character, and not easily moved from a position until he is convinced that he is in error. He is a member of the Reformed Church; in politics, he is strongly Democratic. He was married to Miss Susannah Henry March 29, 1838, and as the result of their union they have ten children, all living—William Drake, the oldest child, is married to Miss Sidney Flora, and resides near Montpelier, Williams Co.; the second child, Elizabeth, is married to James Wareham, and resides in Jackson Township; the third child, Sarah Jane, married Aaron Rambo, and resides in East Lynn, Vermilion Co., Ill.; the fourth child, Daniel, married Mary Jane Trist, and resides in Shelby, she was born in Sidney, Australia; the fifth child, James, married Miss Eva Roushand, and resides near Bridgewater, Williams Co.; the sixth child, Jeremiah, married Miss Roust, of Jackson Township, and resides near Bridgewater, Williams Co.; the seventh child, Mary Ellen, married George H. Smith, and resides in Newton Co., Ind.; Nancy H. married Jacob Rowe, and resides in De Kalb Co., near Butler, Ind.; Susannah is at home with her parents; Samuel, the tenth and last child, is also at home with his parents.

FINICLE, GEORGE, farmer; was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Aug. 4, 1818. When about 16 years of age, his father, Solomon Finicle, with his family of five children, came to Ohio, and settled in Sec. 24, northwest quarter, where he lived for a number of years; he then moved to Shelby; he returned to Jackson after remaining in Shelby for a few years. He died at his son George's. The subject of this notice left home about 1843, and moved to Crawford Co., Ohio, where he remained about one year, and then returned; he then purchased the farm and improved it, making all the present improvements. He was married to Miss Rebecca Marks March 10, 1842; they had eight children, six living: Mrs. Finicle died in July, 1856. He was again married, to Miss Minerva McIntire, Nov. 9, 1856; they had three children, two of whom are living. He is of Pennsylvania-German parentage, and is an excellent farmer and respected citizen.

GUMP, JOSIAH, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Bedford Co., Penn., Nov. 29, 1824. His father, Benjamin Gump, hearing of Ohio and of its fertile lands, resolved to leave his native hills and bring his family to the frontier settlements and hew out for himself and family a home; he entered an 80-acre tract, and set to work to clear away the timber on which to build his new home; he hewed the logs, instead of leaving them round, as was customary in those early days; he first built the center, and some years after added additions to each end; the west addition was occupied as carpenter and cabinet-maker shop for some years; the main part of this building, now occupied by Josiah Gump, is perhaps one of the oldest in Jackson Township, having been built fifty-three years; the trees which surround this building were planted by the elder Gump, and now they spread their branches far and wide; there is a large and beautiful pear-tree standing at the west end of the dwelling which the old gentleman raised from the seed, and of which he enjoyed the fruit for many seasons; during the last years of his life, he was much afflicted with rheumatism; he spent an active life, worked hard, and was "gathered home" in 1870, aged 83; his wife, whose maiden name was Esther Smith, died some time previous; three children survive them—Josiah and two sisters. Josiah has spent his youth on the farm; he is a plain, unassuming man, honest and industrious. He was married to Matilda Cline in 1849; they had seven children; she died in 1864. He was again married, to Miss Eve Bushey, of Shelby, Dec. 25, 1866; they have two children.

HARTMAN, GEORGE. This pioneer was born in Adams Co., Penn., in August, 1801; he is of Pennsylvania-German parentage, and still retains their characteristics; was bound out to learn the weaving trade at 16 years of age; worked at that for some years; his parents died when he was young, and he was therefore thrown out upon the world early in life, which perhaps gave him much of that energy which he displayed in late years, as he has been one of the successful farmers. He emigrated to Ohio in 1828, and remained one year in Stark Co.; he then came to Richland Co., and entered an 80-acre tract of land in Sec. 27; built his first cabin about twenty rods west of his present house, in which he lived some eight or ten years, and then built the present dwelling; like most of the early settlers, he was poor, and was compelled to clear his land by his own industry; he was more fortunate, however, than some of his neighbors who came some years after, as he brought a wagon with him, one of the first in the neighborhood; was called upon frequently to loan his wagon to his less favored neighbors; he frequently would, when called upon, take his own team and go to market, not charging a cent for his services. Some years since, his son prevailed upon him to make his home with him, where he could be better taken care of; he remained several years, but the love of his old home still clung strongly to him, and he returned to his favorite spot which he first selected as his abode. He has a retentive memory, and has the full use of his mental faculties; is pleasant in his manner, and has the esteem of the community. He was married to Miss Catharine Stallsmith, of Adams Co., Penn., March 1, 1827; they had one child.

HARTMAN, JOHN F., farmer; P. O. Shelly; he is the only child of George and Catharine Hartman; he was born March 8, 1830, in Richland Co.; he spent his youth on the old homestead; he is one of the successful and solid men of the township; he is an excellent farmer (his farm contains 434 acres); he is well informed upon the general topics of the day, and takes an interest in the affairs of the township and county, and is an influential citizen. Politically, he is a Democrat. He was married to Miss Louisa Kuhn in March, 1853; they have six children, three sons and three daughters; after he was married, he lived for some years on the old homestead; he then moved to where he now resides, about 1860; he lived some years in the old house, and, in 1870, he built his beautiful and comfortable brick dwelling, which is perhaps the largest brick dwelling in the township.

HAYS, ESTHER C., MRS., widow of Almond Hays; she emigrated from Fairfield Co., Conn., in 1821; she and her husband came by wagon the entire distance; they started on the 18th day of June, and arrived on the 18th day of July; they settled on the farm where she now resides, about three miles southeast from the town of Shelby; they built the first cabin on the north part of the land, where the orchard is now located; the county was sparsely settled, there being but eighteen voters to six miles square; there was no clearing or opening on the farm at the time; it was in strong contrast to the home she left in Connecticut; wolves howled around the cabin, and the red man frequently presented himself for johnny cake. Mr. Hayes built a blacksmith-shop by driving four stakes in the ground, and covering it with elm bark, which remained some six months, when he built one of a more substantial character; some years after, he built another shop on the site of the present shop where his son now works; it was burnt down some years after; when they first moved into their cabin, they had no door for three weeks; they had no furniture, and when they wanted to warm themselves, they sat down on the end of the puncheons in front of the log fire. Mr. Hayes died April 15, 1856, aged 56 years; Mrs. Hayes was born Oct. 30, 1798, in Fairfield Co., Conn., and was married to Almond Hayes Oct. 9, 1820; they had six children, five boys and one girl; four boys are still living; she is a woman of clear intellect, and had she not been stricken with paralysis some years ago, she would be active, and could relate her trials much more freely; she is spending her days with her son, Lewis C. Hayes, who is a blacksmith, and in connection carries on wagon-making of all kinds; he was born in May, 1839, and has always lived in the vicinity. He was married to Miss Malinda Sanders in 1866; they have two children.

HESS, REUBEN, farmer; P. O. Shelby; was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, in January, 1841; his father was a minister of the Reformed Church, and came from Bucks Co., Penn., to Columbiana Co., where he remained some time and then removed to Trumbull Co., where he remained several years; he then went to Delaware, Delaware Co., Ohio, and preached some ten years in Delaware and vicinity; he then removed to Galion, Ohio, and preached one year; he then removed to Larue, Marion Co., where he preached one year, and then came to the charge in Shelby, where he preached two years; he purchased the southeast quarter of Sec. 28, Jackson Township, where he lived some five years; he moved to Madison; he also preached several years in Pennsylvania; he died in August, 1875; he spent an active life; he was a man of considerable force. The subject of this notice, Reuben Hess, is one of Jackson's successful farmers; he has acquired considerable land, owning 295 acres in one tract; he is a careful farmer. He was married to Miss Margaret Leppo Nov. 20, 1862; they have a family of interesting children. He moved to Springfield Township, where he remained one year, and then removed to where he now resides on the southwest quarter of Sec. 26.

HINES, LEWIS, farmer; he was born in Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, May 4, 1831. His father, Frederic Hines, emigrated to America in 1840, and remained three years, when he returned and brought his family; he settled in Lancaster Co., Penn.; about the year 1850, he and his son Lewis came to Ohio and remained one summer and returned to Pennsylvania, where he remained until 1861, when he emigrated with his family and settled two miles and a half east of Shelby, where he and his wife still reside; he is a careful reader, has a good memory and takes an active interest in the politics of his adopted country; he has the respect and esteem of all his neighbors. The subject of this notice remained in Pennsylvania until 1866, when he came to Ohio and located in Jackson Township, where he still resides; he, like his father, takes an active interest in the affairs of the country as well as the locality in which he lives. He is an ardent Democrat, but does not let his political preferences blind his reason. He was married, Nov. 20, 1854, to Margaret Bleacher, of Pennsylvania; they have five children, all of whom are living.

HOFFMAN, DANIEL, pioneer farmer; P. O. Shelby; he was born in York Co., Penn., March 26, 1798; about seven years after, his father, Frederic Hoffman, moved to Adams Co., Penn., and settled ten miles north of Gettysburg, where the subject of this notice remained until the fall of 1831, when he emigrated to Ohio and remained over winter two miles south of Mansfield; in the spring of 1832, he came to settle the southeast 80 acres of Sec. 23, which he had entered the fall previous; there had been no work done on the land before this time; he built his first log house a few rods west of where his present house now stands; it is still standing; he is the oldest man living in the township except one; when he came to Ohio, he had a family of three children. He was married to Miss Sarah Stallsmith, of Adams Co., Penn., Aug. 18, 1822; they had eight children, six of whom are living. Mr. Hoffman still retains his mental faculties and remembers things which happened recently as well as those of an earlier date. Politically, he is a Democrat, from which he never has swerved.

HOFFMAN, J. W., farmer; P. O. Shelby; was born in Adams Co., Penn., Dec. 8, 1829; his parents came to Ohio in 1831, so that he is now an early settler, although he is a comparatively young man. He helped his father to clear up the farm, and, about the age of 21 years, he commenced farming for his father. He farmed some five years, and then removed to Sharon Township, where he remained two years, and then moved on the farm known as the Rogers' farm. He then moved to where he now resides, which is a portion of the northwest quarter of Sec. 26. Some time after his first purchase, he added 11 acres, and, in August, 1879, he purchased a tract of 25 acres in Sec. 22. Mr. Hoffman is what might be called a self-made man. He started in the world without a dollar, and, by industry and economy, he has been successful. He has aided his children in life; he is considered an excellent farmer. He has been entrusted with several offices in the township; he is a member of the Reformed Church, and an Elder in that body. He was married to Miss Ellen Kuhn, of Plymouth, and as a result of their union they have had a family of eight children, six of whom are living—four daughters and two sons.

HOLTZ, GEORGE, farmer; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Perry Co., Penn., in April, 1830; his father emigrated to Ohio and settled in Jackson when George was a child. He spent his young days at home, and when he was but a small boy he was put to work, and helped clear up his father's farm. He was married to Miss Margaret Ott, in January, 1849, who was born in Germany in October, 1830. Her father emigrated to Ohio when she was a child, and settled in Jackson; they had five children, four of whom are living and married, and reside in Jackson. Benjamin Adams Lowe, son-in-law of George Holtz, was born in Liverpool, England, Feb. 2, 1852. When he was 17 years of age, he emigrated to America. He went West to Miami Co., Kan.; he traveled considerably through Kansas, Texas and Indian Territory; he then returned to England to see his parents and returned to the United States some few months after. He is a man of general knowledge, and is a close observer. He was married to Miss Mary Ann Holtz Feb. 19, 1878.

HORNBERGER, CATHARINE, MRS., widow of Benjamin Hornberger; was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., August, 1819; her father, Jacob Snyder, emigrated from Pennsylvania with his family of six children and settled in Stark Co., near Massillon, about 1829. Mrs. Hornberger remained at home until September, 1842, when she was married. Some five years after, her husband came to Richland Co. and purchased 80 acres in the northwest quarter of Sec. 27, where Mrs. Hornberger now resides. He died September, 1853, aged about 48 years. He was born in Franklin Co., Penn.; they had five children, three of whom are living. The children being small at the death of her husband, she was compelled to take the management of the farm and provide for the wants of her family, for which she deserves special credit. She is of Pennsylvania-German parentage. Her oldest son, Hiram, is married to Margaret Cox, and is engaged in railroading at Galion. Samuel, her next son, is married to Sarah May, and resides on the farm. Her daughter Sarah is married to Simon Shatzer, and resides near her. The two deceased were Rebecca and Catharine, aged 14 and 29 years respectively.

HUMMEL, J. M., farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Dauphin Co., Penn., in March, 1818; he spent his youth on a farm; when 18 years of age, he commenced the trade of saddlery with his brother in Hummelstown, Penn., and continued to follow that trade twenty-five years; desirous of obtaining a farm, he sold his property and emigrated, in 1864, with his family, to Ohio, where he purchased a tract of 80 acres in Madison Township, about two miles north of Mansfield; he remained there about eight years, and sold his farm and purchased the southwest quarter of Sec. 12, where he now resides; he came of Pennsylvania-German parentage; he is an excellent farmer, a pleasant neighbor, and has the respect of the community. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Hertzel in December, 1843; they had eight children, five of whom are living.

ILER, JOHN, farmer; P. O. Shelby; was born in Richland Co. Feb. 26, 1842; when he was about 6 months old, his father died and left a family of four small children to be supported by the mother; being poor, she was compelled to put her children out among strangers; she found a pleasant home for them with John F. Rice, the "old soldier," of whom a full notice will be found elsewhere in this book; his mother died when the subject of this notice was about 6 years old, so he was early deprived of the fostering care of a mother; he remained at his adopted home until the fall of 1862, when he enlisted in Co. C, 20th O. V. I., for nine months; after he returned home, he resumed farming. He is an ardent Democrat, and takes an active interest in the affairs of the community. He was married to Miss Mary Sheets, of Richland Co.; they have seven children.

KERR, WILLIAM, farmer; he was born in Washington, Penn., Nov. 7, 1810; his father, James Kerr, came to Ohio about 1810, and entered 160 acres of land in Sec. 1, Jackson Township; he then returned to Pennsylvania and at different times came to Ohio, entering some 800 acres; in the year 1820, he, with his family, consisting of himself, wife and four children, came to Ohio and settled where T. C. Dunlap now lives, some four miles east of where Shelby now stands; he cleared up the farm; in 1830, he built a grist-mill on Richland Run, probably the first water-mill in the limits of Jackson Township; it stood several years, and did quite a business; the first miller was Mr. Urie, who milled for several years, and was followed by William Kerr, the subject of this notice; he was followed by Mr. Sellers; the mill stood until 1853, when Mr. Kerr took some of the timber and put it into his barn which he was then building; the mill-race is still to be seen. James Kerr died in May, 1839; his wife survived him for a number of years and died aged over 80 years. William Kerr has resided near where he now lives ever since he has been in Ohio; he has always been engaged on the farm except the time he was occupied as miller. He was married to Nancy N. Crabbs in June, 1849; they had five children, four of whom are living; his wife died in 1862, and he was again married to Sarah Seaton in 1864; they have three children.

KIRKPATRICK, JEREMIAH, farmer; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Perry Co., Penn., in June, 1821; his father, Joseph Kirkpatrick, with his wife and family of six children, emigrated to Ohio in the fall of 1831, and remained over winter in Mansfield; he moved north to Jackson and entered an 80-acre tract of land in Sec. 22; he died in 1844; his wife survived him many years, dying in January, 1877, aged about 85 years. The subject of this notice remained with his parents, helping to clear up the farm and do such work as is usual in a new country; he received his education in the district schools of the county; he is a man of general information, and has the confidence and esteem of his neighbors; he is a consistent member of the Lutheran Church; he joined that denomination at an early age, and has very materially aided in building up that body in the community; he is a careful farmer, and his farm bears the marks of good management. He was married to Miss Catherine Flora Nov. 7, 1844; they had eleven children, nine of whom are living.

KIRKPATRICK, AMOS, farmer; P. O. Shelby; was born Aug. 3, 1850, in Jackson Township; he is a son of Jeremiah and Catherine Kirkpatrick; he remained with his parents until he arrived at the age of manhood; he worked at home and in the community until he was married to Miss Christiana Neal, April 23, 1874; they have three children—Elmer Luther, Joseph Lorenzo and Archie Melvin. Mrs. Kirkpatrick was born in Jackson Township March 20, 1852; she has always remained in the vicinity of where she was born; she received her educational training in the common school.

KUHN, MARY, MRS., widow of Jacob Kuhn, was born in Franklin Co., Penn., March, 1827; her father, George Shafer, emigrated to Ohio in 1839, and settled in Springfield Township, where he remained three years; he then purchased the farm on which his daughter, Mrs. Kuhn, now resides; he died in the fall of 1864,; his wife, the mother of Mrs. Kuhn, whose maiden name was Mary Deitrich, survived him until June, 1866. Jacob Kuhn and Mary Shafer were married in November, 1851; as a result of their marriage they had seven children, six of whom are living. Mr. Kuhn died Aug. 25, 1876; he was born in Franklin Co., Penn., and emigrated to Ohio, in 1847; he was a man of great force of character; he took an active interest in the Reformed Church, to which he was devotedly attached; he was among the first organizers of the church at Shelby, and was a leader in that body; he was a pillar of the church, and by his death the church lost one of its most active and influential members.

KING, MARY, MRS., P. O. Shelby.

LANDIS, JOHN M., farmer and stock-raiser, and also agent for Halliday's Standard Wind-mill, and also for farming implements generally; he was born in this county in November, 1837; his father emigrated to Ohio from Lancaster Co., Penn., about 1836, and settled in Richland Co.; he purchased the farm now owned by his son; he lived there during his lifetime, and died in March, 1874, aged about 63 years. The subject of this sketch first purchased a tract of land north of where he now lives, and in 1870, the tract on which he now resides; he improved the farm, remodeling the buildings, and has a very comfortable and pleasant home. He is one of those men whom nature has endowed with a natural mechanical genius; he can lay out a building and erect it without making a mistake, although he never learned any trade; this, perhaps, accounts for his love of machinery, which he can handle with ease, seeing at a glance how to work it to the best advantage; he has been selling machinery for eight years, and is widely and favorably known; he is a pleasant man with whom to do business, as he makes it a matter of principle, and states what he believes and knows to be true; he is favorably known. He was married to Miss Mary Ann Finicle in 1859; they have four sons, all living.

LANDIS, ISAAC M., farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in this county Oct. 9, 1842; at the age of 19 years, he enlisted in Company C, 20th O. V. I., and served for about one year, passing through the battles of Port Gibson, Jackson, Champion Hill and Vicksburg; after he returned home, he resumed farming; he farmed for two years, and then went into the hardware business in New London for three years; he then sold out and went into the saw-mill business, working in Wyandot for four years; thence to Seneca Co., where he lived two years; he sold out and removed to where he now lives in April, 1875; he had previously purchased the farm. He was married to Miss Ellen Finicle, of Richland Co., Dec. 22, 1864; they have two children—Carrie Ellen and Zuleika Olive.

LASER, C. C., Justice of the Peace, Infirmary Director and farmer; he was born in this county April 28, 1832; his father, John Laser, emigrated from Perry Co., Penn., in the year 1825, and settled in Cass Township. Mr. Laser was one of the Trustees of Plymouth Township, and when the township was about being divided, the name of Cass was proposed by Mr. Laser, after the illustrious statesman of that name, and of whom Mr. Laser was an ardent admirer; the name was adopted. He died in Cass Township in 1857; his wife died in the fall of 1877. Mr. C. C. Laser was elected Justice of the Peace in 1869, which office he has since held; he was elected Infirmary Director in the fall of 1876, and re-elected in the fall of 1879. He is of German extraction; his great-grandfather emigrated from Germany and located in Northampton Co., Penn., and on the breaking-out of the Revolutionary war, he enlisted, and was never heard of afterward, leaving his wife and son, Christian Laser, grandfather of C. C. Laser, who died in Cass Township about the year 1846. Mr. Laser makes a very efficient officer; he is possessed of good judgment, and is regarded as a very judicious and competent man. Politically, he is a Democrat, and in the councils of his party exerts a large influence. He was married to Miss Kezia Fesler Dec. 19, 1852; they have nine children, six boys and three girls.

MILLER, ISAAC H., farmer; he was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., May 22, 1816; he spent his youth on the farm; at 19 years of age, he commenced to teach school, which he followed five winters, working on the farm during the summer; in the spring of 1839, he, with his wife, emigrated to Ohio and spent some four years near Ganges; in 1842, he bought 40 acres, which is now the south part of his farm, and moved on it the following year; there was a cabin on the land when he purchased; he lived there six years, and then purchased the northern half of the 80 acres, and moved into the cabin which stood where his present dwelling stands (this was in 1849); this is situated about one and a quarter miles east of Shelby; he cleared up most of his farm; he is of Pennsylvania-German parentage, and has the characteristics of that people. By his industry and economy, he has made for himself and family a pleasant home. He is a close reader, and a man of general information. In politics, he is a Republican, and adheres closely to his party. He is pleasant in his home, hospitable and genial. He was married to Miss Catharine Echternach Dec. 25, 1838, who was born in the year 1818; her parents emigrated to America about the year 1832, and settled in Lancaster, Penn., where her father died; her mother survived him a number of years, dying at her daughter's, Mrs. Miller. They have had eleven children, seven of whom are living—four girls and three boys.

MILLER, BENJAMIN E., farmer; he was born near Ganges Oct. 24, 1839. He was married to Miss S. J. Finicle in May, 1862; they have seven children, all living; at about the age of 22, he moved near where Isaac Landis now lives, and some six months after, he moved on the J. M. Landis farm, where he remained one year, when he went to where he now lives, in Jackson Township. He is a man of general intelligence, and, like his father, Isaac H. Miller, is a Republican in politics, and adheres strictly to the views of his party. He is a genial gentleman, and has the entire respect of his neighbors.

MORTHLAND, ELIAS W., farmer, was born in Crawford Co., Ohio, in December, 1847; his father, Abraham Morthland, came from Pennsylvania, and settled in Crawford Co., Ohio; he was a minister for many years, and left a record of which his children may well be proud; he died June 22, 1876, aged about 85; his wife still survives him. Elias was married to Miss Rachel Wells March 5, 1867; they had two children. Mr. Morthland is a man of good social qualities, and has the confidence of his neighbors and acquaintances.

MORTHLAND, J. D., was born July 25, 1839, in Polk Township, Crawford Co.; he remained with his father until September, 1853, receiving his education at the district schools. He married Miss Elizabeth H. Copeland, Feb. 7, 1860. Mr. Morthland moved from Crawford to Richland Co. in September, 1853, where he has remained up to the present time, engaging in the boot and shoe business for a short time; becoming tired of the close, confining life, he disposed of his business and removed with his wife to a more congenial life on a farm. Abraham Morthland, his father, was born near Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Penn., where he followed teaming until he was 18 years of age, when he emigrated to Columbiana Co., Ohio, where he married Miss Susan Miller, and by their union had six children—four of whom are living—Hannah, John, Joseph D. and Susan Lucinda; he remained in Columbiana Co. about six years, where he continued teaming for two years, at the end of which time he disposed of his team, doing any work he could find during the remainder of his stay in Columbiana Co.; he then moved to Crawford Co., Ohio, purchasing 80 acres of land—commonly termed the Abraham Morthland homestead—where he remained until September, 1853, and from there came to Richland Co.; entering the ministry about the year 1839, he was always considered one of the leaders in the Baptist Church. His life has been worthy the imitation of children, relatives and friends. J. D., the subject of this sketch, is a man of more than ordinary ability, conscientious, energetic, pleasant and honorable.

MYERS, J. D., farmer; P. O. Shelby; was born in Stark Co., Ohio, April 24, 1828. When he was 6 months old, his father, Adam Myers, with his wife and seven children, came to Richland Co., and settled in Sharon, now Jackson Township, where the subject of this notice now resides; at that time, there was not an improvement between Spring Mills and where Gen. Wilson lived, which is now in the corporate limits of Shelby. The subject of this notice, so far as can be found, is now the second earliest living settler in what is now the territory of Jackson. The elder Myers built his log cabin on Sec. 27, about a rod south of the present dwelling; this cabin stood a number of years, and in its place was erected a more commodious dwelling in the shape of a hewed-log house, which was located about one rod north of the cabin, and on the site of the substantial and fine dwelling which Mr. Myers erected in 1875. His father was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., and his mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Howard, was born in Franklin Co., Penn.; they were married in Pennsylvania, and emigrated to Stark Co., Ohio, in 1824, and then came to this county in 1829. Mr. Myers, Sr., died in December, 1855, aged about 75 years; his wife died in April, 1859, aged 72 years. Mr. Myers is an excellent farmer, and fully understands the care of land; is a good citizen. He is a member of the Lutheran Church; politically, he is a Democrat. He is also a self-made man, as he commenced life without a dollar, and worked until he was 25 years of age for his father, considering it his duty, and feels that he has been amply repaid for all he has done for his parents, as he has been blessed with success in his efforts. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Feighner in September, 1853; they have had six children, four of whom are living—Sarah C., married to William Kirkpatrick, and resides in Shelby; Adam F., is an artist; William H. and Malissa, are at home.

NILES, ANN, MRS., pioneer, and widow of Eli Niles, whose maiden name was Fulton; was born near Bath, in the State of New York, Oct. 11, 1809. When she was about 14 years of age, her parents came from Ontario Co., N. Y., with a family of eight children, to Mansfield, where they remained over winter; in the spring they moved to Sharon Township, on land of Judge Gamble, where they resided about ten years, and then removed to Seneca Co., Ohio, where Mr. Fulton purchased two quarter-sections of land, on which they remained during his life. The subject of this notice was married to John Gelaspie in April, 1836, in Seneca Co.; they had one child, George, who was born in October, 1838; he met with an accident which resulted in death, by the explosion of a cannon at a jollification over the capture of Vicksburg, in Shelby, July 8, 1863; he died Aug. 1, 1863. Mr. Gelaspie died in April, 1839. November, 1848, she was married to Eli Niles; they had no children; he died in May, 1875. Mrs. Niles is a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church, which she joined when 23 years of age.

PICKING, J. W., carpenter, builder and farmer; P. O. Shelby; was born in Franklin Co., Penn., in April, 1835; his father, Henry Picking, with his family of six children, emigrated to Ohio in 1845 (three having previously come out), and purchased 40 acres of the southwest quarter of Sec. 10. Mrs. Picking died in the spring of 1873. Mr. Picking survived his wife until May, 1879; he was some 81 years old. The subject of this notice, about the age of 18 years, commenced the trade of carpenter with Patrick Barnes, which he has since followed in connection with his farm. He is a quiet citizen and a good neighbor. He was married to Miss Mary Cutler in February, 1857; they have five children. He moved to where he now resides in 1874.

ROBERTS, JESSE, pioneer farmer; P. O. Shelby; was born in Beaver Co., Penn., in July, 1806; his father, John Roberts, came from Virginia to Pennsylvania and settled near what is now the village of Frankfort, Beaver Co., at an early date in the history of that country; he died in 1876, aged about 96 years. His mother, whose maiden name was Ruth Dungan, died some years before. His grandfather served under Gen. Washington during the Revolutionary war. The subject of this notice remained in Pennsylvania until the year 1833, when he emigrated to Ohio and settled in Sharon, now Jackson, Township, about two miles southeast of Shelby, or which at that time was known as Gamble's Mills. He built a log house on the ground on which his present dwelling is now situated; he had the usual experience of early settlers. He takes an interest in the history of his adopted county; he is hospitable and genial in his manners. He was married to Miss Catharine Feighner in March, 1850; they had five children, two of whom are living. Mrs. Roberts was born in Franklin Co., Penn., in December, 1820; her father, Jonas Feighner, came to Richland Co. in 1827; he died in 1860.

ROUSH, SAMUEL, farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Berks Co., Penn., Jan. 1, 1806; his father, Godfrey Roush, emigrated to Perry Co., Penn., when the territory was included in Cumberland Co. He settled in the western part of the county. On the breaking-out of the war of 1812, he volunteered and marched from Carlisle, Penn., to Canada, where he was in the assault on Fort Mack and several other minor engagements. He remained in the army about one year, and returned home at the close of the war. He cleared up his land and remained in Perry Co. until 1834, when he, with his family, emigrated to Ohio and settled about one mile south of Shelby on the farm now owned by William Wareham, where he and his wife lived and died. The subject of this sketch was hired out until he was 20 years of age, his father using his wages. About the age of 20, he went to learn the trade of cooper, at which he served one year for nothing. After he worked one year at the trade, he then did anything by which he could make some money. He knew full well the value of money, and he saved all the money he made, except what would buy his clothing, so when he found himself able he purchased the 160 acres of land where he now lives. The primitive forest covered the entire tract, but, nothing daunted, he built a one-story log house near his present dwelling and commenced the arduous task of clearing away the timber. Some years later, he built another log house of two stories, in which he lived until he built his present brick residence. He belongs to that honest, hard-working class of Pennsylvania Germans. He takes just pride in relating his early trials. He was married to Miss Margaret Laser, of this county, in March, 1834; they had twelve children, nine of whom are living; his wife died in January, 1863.

SELLERS, JOHN E., farmer and stock-raiser; he was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Dec. 3, 1845, and spent his young days in the village of St. Thomas, attending school until about the age of 16, when he enlisted in Co. H, 2d Penn. V. I, for three months; after coming home, he went to learn the trade of cabinet-making, at which he worked for some time, but, as the excitement of war was running high, he quit the trade and, in August, 1862, he again enlisted in Co. H, 126th Penn. V. I., for nine months; he participated in the battles of South Mountain, Antietam, Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville; he was discharged, with his regiment, May 25, 1863; he returned home and remained till January, 1864, when he the third time enlisted in the 20th Penn. V. C. for three years, and served in the Shenandoah Valley; participated in the battles of that memorable time, closing with the battle of South Side Railroad, where he was wounded in the right ear and side of the neck; the wound was in a dangerous place, and perhaps an eighth of an inch closer would have taken his life; he was taken to the hospital at Washington, where he remained some time, and was transferred to Philadelphia, Penn., where he was discharged in June, 1865; he then returned to Franklin Co., Penn., where he resided a short time and emigrated to this county; he worked at his trade in Shelby until the spring of 1869; he then removed to where he now resides, in Jackson Township, where he is engaged at farming. He is a man of positive convictions, and does not fear to speak his sentiments fully, but always with respect to those with whom he comes in contact. He is an ardent Democrat; is an agreeable and social gentleman, and exerts an influence in his neighborhood; he is fond of reading, and is gathering a library of the standard books of the day. He was married to Miss Susannah Laser in November, 1868; they have three children.

SHADE, JEREMIAH, farmer, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Dec. 9, 1844; he spent his youth with his parents; he worked at the carpenter trade for some time; he commenced farming in 1868. He was married to Miss Rebecca Hull April 12, 1866; they have two children—Minnie Adie, born Jan. 28, 1868, and E. Wilber, March 14, 1875. Mr. Shade is regarded as an excellent farmer. Mrs. Shade was born in Jackson Township April 11, 1847, on the farm owned by Andrew Snyder. Her father, John Hull, came from Adams Co., Penn., in the spring of 1842, and settled in the southwestern part of Jackson; he died Sept. 15, 1865. His wife, whose maiden name was Stock, survived him until April 5, 1875. Jacob Shade, father of Jeremiah, was born in Perry Co., Penn.; he emigrated to Ohio in 1855. Mrs. Shade, whose maiden name was Mary Ann Messenger, was also born in Perry Co., Penn.; they had eleven children, eight of whom are living; they have retired from active farming and reside in Shelby.

SHELDON, MARIA, MRS., widow of Alvah Sheldon; she was born in Berkshire Co., Mass., Oct. 6, 1801; her maiden name was Cotton; she emigrated, with her uncle, to Penfield, N. Y., near Rochester, when she was about 23 years of age. She was married to Mr. Sheldon in September, 1825, and remained near Rochester some twelve years; they then moved to the town of Royalton, Niagara Co., where they remained nineteen years; they then emigrated to New Philadelphia, Ohio, where they lived three years; thence to Richland Co. in the fall of 1857, where she has since resided. Mr. Sheldon was born in Vermont Aug. 17, 1799; he died in Richland Co. in September, 1858. Mrs. Sheldon is a lady who stands well in the community; she is the mother of eleven children, seven of whom are living—four boys and three girls; six of them live in Richland Co. and one lives in Greene Co., N. Y. Her daughter, Mrs. Mary P. Porter, was born in September, 1839, in Niagara Co., N. Y.; she was married to John Porter in November, 1865. Mr. Porter died in October, 1866, leaving one son.

SHERRICH, THOMAS, farmer; he was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, Jan. 18, 1842; when he was about 4 years old his parents left Wayne Co. and settled in Jackson Township; some three years after his father died, and left his mother to take care of the family and pay some debts which were against the farm; and by economy and industry the farm was saved and the debts all paid; the subject of this sketch worked upon the farm until the fall of 1861, when he enlisted in Co. H, 64th O. V. I. for the term of three years; Capt. Lord commanded the company. They went into camp at Mansfield, and remained about six weeks; they then went to Louisville, Ky., and joined the army of the Cumberland, and he was in most of the engagements in which his regiment participated; the regiment belonged to the 4th Army Corps, Third Division; he was discharged at Cincinnati in February, 1864, having served three years and four months. He is an excellent farmer and an honorable and respected citizen. He was married to Miss Catherine A. Briner January, 1867; they had two interesting girls.

SNYDER, JOHN, farmer; he was born in Richland Co., December, 1838; he spent his youth in Ohio until the year 1854, when his parents went to Adair Co., Mo., where they lived and died; he remained in Missouri, working at the carpenter trade, until the breaking-out of the war, when he enlisted in the 5th Mo. V. I., and served some time; he then joined the cavalry, and then went into a battery of artillery, and was mustered into the Confederate service in Memphis, Tenn., in 1862, and was in several engagements in Missouri, including Pea Ridge, Lexington and Corinth, Miss.; he was taken prisoner at Champion Hill, Miss.; he was taken to Young's Point, thence to Camp Morton at Indianapolis, thence to Ft. Delaware, thence to Point Lookout, where he was paroled; he then struck north to York, Penn., where he worked at his trade on the N. C. R. R. for some time, and then returned to Richland Co., Ohio., his former home, where he worked at his trade until December, 1867; he has since been farming. He is a man of considerable originality; he is quiet in his manner, and does not interfere with the opinions of others; he was married to Miss Lydia A. Laser, of Richland Co., December, 1867; they had four children as the result of their union, three living; Mrs. Snyder was born in Jackson Township, in April, 1840.

STOVER, JOHN, pioneer farmer; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., in May, 1823. His father, John Stover, emigrated to Richland Co. with his family of six children in 1835, and settled about two miles and a half southeast of Shelby, near what is now known as Taylortown, where he purchased the farm which his son now owns; he died in January, 1852. The subject of this notice resides on the old homestead, where his father first settled; he never received any education, but by his natural ability he has acquired considerable property, and he is looked upon by his neighbors as an honest and reliable man; his ancestors were Pennsylvania Germans, and he has inherited their characteristics, that of honesty and industry; he is a careful farmer. He was married to Miss Leah Landis in February, 1853; three of their children are now living.

VINSON, J. W., farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Shelby; was born in Knox Co. June 21, 1833; he passed his youth on a farm; at the age of 21, he went to Dayton, where he remained a short time; he then went to Plymouth, Ohio, where he learned the trade of marble-cutting; he then went to Mount Hilliard, Knox Co., where he remained one year; then went to Shelby and engaged in marble-cutting, under the firm name of Hersheiser & Vinson, but the business not being profitable, the firm failed, and left considerable debts unpaid; after the failure, he moved to Jackson Township, on the farm which is known as the Lantz farm, where he remained five years; he was still struggling with poverty, and he resolved to make another effort in the marble business; he sold work for a party in Mansfield for a short time, and saved enough money to buy a small stock; he brought it home, and succeeded in selling it, soon thereby enabling him to purchase more material; his shop was located near where he now resides; this was about the fall of 1863; he followed the trade in Jackson about seven years; he sold work for different parties for about six years; his health failing him, he went to farming; he is a careful and successful farmer; he has a very pleasant home, and built one of the most comfortable and substantial dwellings in the township. Politically, he is a Democrat, and takes an active interest in his party. He was married to Miss Catharine Lantz in May, 1858; they had one child—Annie S. C., who is married to George Hartman; his wife died in the spring of 1863. He was again married to Mrs. Catharine Laser; they have one child—Curtis E. Mr. Vinson has, by dint of industry, succeeded in making himself a competence.

JEFFERSON TOWNSHIP.

ANDERSON, WILLIAM W., clergyman; he is a son of Rev. James Anderson, who was born in Pennsylvania, and was Pastor of the Lexington (Ohio) Presbyterian Church from the spring of 1854 to the spring of 1864. The subject of this sketch was born in Fairfield Co., Ohio, and was brought up in a village; during his early life, his mother taught a female boarding-school; in 1854, he came with his parents to Lexington, Ohio, and attended the high school of that place; in the fall of 1855, he entered Washington College, Pennsylvania, and graduated in 1859, and then entered the theological seminary of Allegheny City, Penn., where he finished his course in 1862; his first charge was in Chesterville, Morrow Co., Ohio, where he remained six years and a half; his next charge was at Shelby, Ohio, at which place he remained eight years, and then came to Bellville Jan. 1, 1877, and took the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church of that place, which position he now fills. Mr. Anderson was born Nov. 6, 1839, and was married to Miss Elizabeth H. FISHER, IRWIN D., merchant, Bellville, Ohio; he was born in Bellville Dec. 5, 1844, and, during his early life, assisted his father in managing a meat market; he received his education in Bellville, with the exception of one year at the Ohio Wesleyan University and one year at Elyria, Ohio. He was married to Barilla Elston, who was a daughter of William Elston, Sr., and she was born in Andover, Mass., Sept. 11, 1845; she came with her parents to Ohio in 1845; they were married Nov. 14, 1866, and the following are the names of their children: Burke, born Aug. 26, 1867; Willie, Jan. 23, 1869; Addie, Sept. 17, 1872; Fred, March 3, 1874; Rose, May 2, 1876; Mary E., Dec. 12, 1878. In 1867, Mr. Fisher formed a business relation with J. Weaver and embarked in the produce and grocery business; after they dissolved partnership, one of his brothers became his partner, and this firm in turn was succeeded by Fisher & Neily; in 1876, Mr. Fisher assumed control of the business and has successfully conducted it to the present, and the house of Irwin D. Fisher is one of the first groceries in the village; he was Village Clerk three years and Councilman four, and is a member of the Masonic Lodge. Mr. Fisher's father, Daniel Fisher, was born in Schuylkill Co., Penn., Oct. 24, 1816; he learned the tanner's trade; in 1840, he commenced to butcher in Bellville and continued in the business about thirty years. He was married, Feb. 13, 1844, to Mary E. Poppleton, who was born in Knox Co. June 18, 1824, and the children born to them were the subject of this sketch, Julia, Samuel and Frank.

FITTING, FREDERICK M, was born in Knox Co., one-half a mile south of Ankneytown, Oct. 27, 1810. His father came to this place in 1802, and, in 1813, moved into Jefferson Township, on Sec. 33; a few years later, he purchased land adjoining this on the west, on which he died. Casper Fitting came from Chester Co., Penn., to Knox Co. The subject of this sketch was brought up on a farm, and agriculture has been his main occupation in life, and he has made Bellville his home, with one or two exceptions, to the present; in 1830, he commenced to deal in Western land and has given his attention to it ever since; he now owns about 1,000 acres; in 1838, he became interested in a dry-goods store in Bellville, and continued in this line here and in Worthington Township about ten years; in 1847, he built the mill west of Bellville; in 1850, he took the contract of building the S., M. & N. R. R. from Mansfield to Bellville; he commenced work in January, 1850, and arrived at Bellville in August of the same year; he did a greater part of the grading, built the bridges and laid the iron; he also furnished the ties for the road six miles below Bellville; Mr. Fitting never received but a small amount of his dues, losing about $20,000; in 1875, he built an excellent residence in Bellville. He was married to Ruth Markey July 28, 1838, and to them two daughters were born, one of whom is living.

FREDERICK, CHRISTIAN. Mr. Frederick's parents, Jacob Frederick and Esther Prinkle, moved from Bedford Co., Penn., to Tuscarawas Co., Ohio, in 1813, where he was born. In 1828, he came with his parents to Knox Co.; his father died in Knox Co., in the 79th year of his age, and his mother is yet alive (1880) and is 85 years old. Mr. Frederick was brought up on a farm, and at the age of 29 began work at carpentering, laboring six months under instruction, after which he contracted jobs on his own responsibility; for thirty-five years it was his principal employment, during which time he constructed ten bridges across the Clear Fork, fifteen large barns and a large number of dwelling-houses and other buildings. After marriage, he resided sixteen years in Knox Co., and then moved into Jefferson Township and assumed control of the Greenwood mill, in which he put a carding machine, and in connection operated a saw-mill; in 1865, he bought a farm, being a part of Sec. 12, on which he moved and has lived to this date. He was born Nov. 16, 1817; Esther Divelbiss was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Oct. 30, 1822; her father's name was Michael Divelbiss, and her mother's Margaret Swank. Mr. and Mrs. Fry are members of the Lutheran Church.

GARBER, SAMUEL; the progenitor of an industrious and well-known family of Garbers. His father probably resided in York Co., Penn., when the subject of this sketch was born, and possessed an extraordinary taste for hunting; he usually kept a large number of horses and hounds, which worked in well with this sort of life; the horses were likely not kept solely for the purpose of hunting, as he made a business of purchasing "old skeletons," which he fattened upon a mixture made of red-ant hills, and some kind of forage boiled together. He enlisted during the war of 1812, and his relatives never again heard from him. He had three sons, named respectively John, Samuel and David. John moved to Iowa in an early day, where he died. David resides in this township, and his biography is elsewhere given. Samuel, whose name heads this sketch, was born May 8, 1804, and, during his early boyhood, his mother moved to Bedford Co., Penn., where he was placed in the care of a relative named Mock. He was then about 12 years of age, but the cruel treatment that he received could not be endured, and he returned to the care of his mother, who was then married to Samuel Brawlier. He remained in Pennsylvania, working on the shoe-bench and teaming over the mountains until 1821, when he emigrated with Jacob Mock to Ohio. He worked at shoemaking a short time in this country. He finally engaged himself as a laborer to John Leedy, and made his home with him, where he remained until he was married to Catharine Leedy, his daughter. This transpired Sept. 17, 1825. Their first years were spent on Sec. 28, Jefferson Township, 80 acres of which he entered. Selling this, he bought a part of Sec. 34, on which he lived until the fall of 1851, when he moved upon his father-in-law's farm. In 1863, he bought 192 acres of the northwestern part of Sec. 13, on which he has since lived. His wife, Catharine Leedy, was born April 9, 1809. Children—John was born Dec. 11, 1826; Levi, March 13, 1828; David, April 3, 1831; Lewis, June 11, 1833; Jehu, Oct. 29, 1835; Elizabeth, Jan. 10, 1838; Jackson, Jan. 17, 1841; Washington, April 12, 1843; Theodore, Aug. 9, 1845; Mary E., Feb. 14, 1848; Benton, April 16, 1850; Mina, Sept. 5, 1854. Deaths—Levi died April 27, 1850, of spotted fever, while attending school in Bellville, and was buried before his friends knew of his death; Mina, June 30, 1855; David, April 5, 1865. The mother died Oct. 24, 1879. Mr. Garber and wife passed their lives in industry, and they leave an exemplary record, as citizens and parents.

GARBER, LEWIS L., farmer; resides on a part of Sec. 33, four miles south of Bellville; he is a son of Samuel Garber, ; was brought up a farmer; worked at the carpenter trade from his 21st to his 25th year, and in 1873 commenced bricklaying as a trade, in connection with farming. He did the brickwork on the Jefferson Hall, and half on the Town Hall in Bellville; he built a fine residence on his farm in 1863, and rebuilt it in 1878; he was born June 11, 1832, and was married to Mary, daughter of John Mock, April 24, 1856; she was born Dec. 17, 1837. Children—Calvin, born Feb. 12, 1857, died six days after; Mary Alice, March 16, 1858; Hortense, Feb. 16, 1862; Alwilda, June 4, 1864; Luella, July 4, 1866; Jerry, Feb. 12, 1872; child not named, July 24, 1879. After marriage, they first lived on his father's farm; in 1860, he bought his present homestead. Mr. Garber was a charter member of the Jefferson Grange, No. 256. He and his wife are communicants of the Universalist Church.

GARBER, JOHN L., farmer; resides on a part of Sec. 33; he was born in Jefferson Township, and brought up on a farm. At the age of 20 years, he commenced to work at the carpenter trade. In 1848, he went with others to Iowa and worked at millwrighting. In 1851, he returned, and, in Richland and Knox Cos., built fourteen dwelling-houses, besides numerous other buildings. Mr. Garber was born Dec. 11, 1826. His companion, Mary Swank, was born Oct. 21, 1830; they were married Aug. 27, 1854; children—Zeruiah was born March 24, 1855; Elizabeth, Feb. 5, 1857; a son, Dec. 15, 1858; Samuel M., Nov. 29, 1859; Catharine E., April 16, 1861; Florence, Feb. 15, 1865; Verda, March 6, 1867; Charles, Feb. 23, 1869; Elvyra, April 27, 1871; Walter, July 11, 1873. After marriage, Mr. Garber bought a farm in Worthington Township, and moved on it in March, 1855. The next fall, he returned to Jefferson Township, and, in 1856, purchased the farm on which he now resides. He has been a successful farmer, and is well fixed. He built his dwelling-house in 1861. He is a charter member of the Jefferson Grange. He and his wife united with the Universalist Church shortly after marriage.

GARBER, DAVID L., deceased; he was born April 3, 1831, in Jefferson Township, in which he resided till death; he was married to Susan Leedy, April 8, 1852, who was a daughter of Abraham Leedy, and was born June 7, 1830; their children are Aaron, born Jan. 18, 1853; Elihu, Oct. 6, 1854; James Franklin, Oct. 12, 1856; Martha E., June 17, 1858; Jennie A., July 19, 1860; Levi, Sept. 19, 1862; Ezra, Aug. 15, 1864. Ezra died Jan. 10, 1865, and his father April 5, 1865. Mr. Garber pursued the avocation of agriculture and stock-growing during his life; he was member of the church of Christian Brethren. The four sons cultivate the farm known as the John Leedy farm, containing over 230 acres, and are the editors and proprietors of the Richland Star, published at Bellville. Jennie was married to Edwin Crain, Nov. 13, 1879.

GARBER, JEHU L., was born and brought up in Jefferson Township, on a farm; in early life he taught a few terms of school, and from that time he occupied no position to bring his name prominently before the public until he arrived at middle age; in 1873, the Grange movement commenced to receive the attention of farmers, and he became interested and took a prominent part in establishing Jefferson Grange, and became its first Secretary; he was also the first State Deputy; he was active in the formation of the Patrons' Mutual Relief Association, prepared its constitution, and the success of the institution is largely due to his efforts, and to this time he has been its Secretary; he moved on a part of Sec. 34 in 1864, and is giving his attention to stock-growing and agriculture. He was born Oct. 29, 1835, and his wife, Susan Rebecca Wallace, March 20, 1837; she was a daughter of George Wallace, and her birthplace was Dauphin Co., Penn.; her parents settled in Knox Co., Ohio, about the year 1852; they were married June 19, 1856, and their children are Ella, born Dec. 27, 1856; Irene, Dec. 18, 1858; Clara Alice, Sept. 17, 1860; Ida May, March 27, 1862; Horatio S., July 5, 1864; Charles, Oct. 15, 1866; William J., March 6, 1868; John M., June 7, 1870; George Wallace, July 7, 1874; Mertie E., April 16, 1876; Mamie Della, Sept. 3, 1878. Charles died April 16, 1867. Mrs. Garber became a member of the United Brethren Church when young; they both became members of the Universalist Church about ten years ago; Mr. Garber erected a large brick residence on his farm in 1875.

GARBER, JACKSON L., a son of Samuel Garber, was born in Jefferson Township, and brought up on a farm; he attended the Bellville High School during the winters of 1860 and 1861; the following winter, he taught school, and, during the summer of 1862, traveled in Michigan, Canada West, New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Indiana; he kept a grocery and bakery in Mt. HINES, BENJAMIN F., farmer and dealer in boots and shoes, Bellville, Ohio. He was born in Jefferson Township, and brought up on a farm; he commenced to work at the shoe trade in 1840, laboring on a farm in the summer and on the bench during the winter. He located in Bellville in 1844, where he remained several years; he then went to Mansfield and worked on the bench about one year, where the First National Bank is located; he finished his trade. He then returned to Bellville, and has kept a shoe store a greater part of the time since. For years, when he was acquiring a competency, he would labor hard upon the farm and make boots and shoes about half of the night. He was unexcelled as a rapid workman, and could make three pairs of common boots in a day, and do it every day in the week. He is now doing an extensive business in the sale of boots and shoes, and considerable manufacturing. Besides the shoe business, he continues to give his farm careful attention, and maintains his position as one of the progressive farmers of the community. He commenced life with an industrious hand and economical habits, and gathered here and there until his property valued many thousand dollars; being economical, he was also generous, and wherever a united effort was made to do a charitable work, or a work depending upon donations, he was ready to render valuable assistance. Mr. Hines was born Sept. 26, 1829, and was married to Mary Jane Armstrong Aug. 6, 1850; they have one child, C. Burton, who was born Feb. 16, 1860.

Cyrus died June 28, 1868; Samuel, Oct. 10, 1873. After marriage, Mr. Hoover lived upon his grandfather's farm six years, and then upon the farm he now owns. He, his wife and two children are members of the Lutheran Church, and he is an Elder. Two of his sons attended the Mansfield Normal School the winters of 1879–80, and the elder one is preparing to teach. Mr. Hoover is a member of a family of eleven children, six boys and five girls. His mother died June 20, 1879, aged 79 years and 17 days.

HOWARD, OTIS. Was born in Waldo, Me., March 23, 1817; he there learned the carpenter trade; in the fall of 1838, he came to Jefferson Township, and for some time worked at wagon-making and house carpentry; he then engaged in agriculture, and continued at it until 1860, when he commenced to manufacture churns, which received his attention about five years; in the year 1865, he came in possession of the saw-mill across the creek from the depot in Bellville, and in connection operated a planing-mill and turning machinery; he gave this his attention till 1875, when his son succeeded him, and he again took to making churns, and doing a line of miscellaneous carpentering. Mr. Howard entered into the matrimonial state with Rebecca Whitnah Dec. 25, 1844; she was born in Livingston Co., N. Y., April 5, 1823; they commenced to keep house in Jefferson Township and have since lived in it. They had two children—Henry W., born Sept 13, 1845; Emma R., Feb. 11, 1856. Mr. Howard has held various corporation and township offices, and his official career has been creditable and straightforward; he was elected Justice of the Peace in his township in 1879; he was also prominent in the society known as the "Franks," which was organized in Bellville by Rev. John Lamb, in 1849; he filled the chair as President during its existence, which was till 1855; mental improvement was the main feature of the body, and it was in this society that Congressman Judge Geddes, now of Mansfield, made his first adventure as a speaker or debater.

KANAGA, JOHN F. He was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., and came with his parents to Richland Co. when in his 11th year, in the spring of 1834, and settled where Plank's mills now stand; he remained there until one year after marriage; milling had been his occupation from boyhood up. He was married, March 26, 1846, to Sarah Donaugh, who was born in Mercer Co, Penn., and came to Richland Co. in 1833; she is the oldest one of the family living, and had three brothers and one sister, two half-brothers and two half-sisters. After marriage, Mr. Kanaga ran the mill one year, and then bought a part of Section 26, on which he has resided since, with the exception of a short time in Bellville; in 1849, he built a dwelling-house on his farm, and a barn in 1853. Mr. Kanaga and wife united with the Evangelical Church in 1849, and have done much for the advancement of the cause. One of his sons, Amos, is now a lawyer, and Joseph is preparing for the ministry. Mr. Kanaga was born July 1, 1824; and Mrs. Kanaga in June, 1822. He has filled the office of Township Trustee, and is a member of the Presbyterian Church, in which he now holds official positions. His first wife was, and his present wife is, a member of the same church.

LANEHART, WILLIAM A., furniture dealer, of Bellville; is one of the most live business men of Bellville, and a worthy citizen. At present, he is extensively engaged in manufacturing furniture of nearly every class, and constantly has his large storeroom packed in both stories. Mr. Lanehart was born in Prussia, near the Rhine. He commenced to work at cabinet work when 15 years old as an apprentice. His employer died when he had been at the trade two years. This placed him upon his own responsibilities to find work, and he labored in the principal cities of Germany —Frankfort, Hamburg, Cologne and other places. In the fall of 1847, he left the old country and came direct to Mansfield. Failing to find a situation there, he came to Bellville, and succeeded in getting work with H. Cowen. He remained with him three months, and then formed a partnership with J. Philips. This arrangement continued one and a half years, at the end of which time Mr. Lanehart commenced to manage a business for himself. In 1865, he discontinued the furniture business on account of ill health, and the next year moved on a farm about one mile east of Bellville. He remained on this farm about six years, and then purchased another, a part of Sec. 13, on which he lived five years. In 1876, he again opened a furniture store in Bellville, and, in 1877, built his fine storeroom. After Mr. Lanehart arrived in this part of the country, he became greatly discouraged, and would have returned to Europe had money been at his command to do so. Mr. Lanehart has held the office of Township Trustee, and is now Treasurer. William Lanehart was born Feb. 19, 1824, and was married to Margaret Eggleman Nov. 14, 1850.

LEEDY, JOHN (deceased). The progenitor of the Leedy family now in the United States came from Switzerland, and settled in Maryland; his name was Abraham Leedy, and there were five children in his family; one son, named Abraham, after his parent, is the father of the Leedys residing in Ohio. John, the subject of our sketch, was born in Maryland Sept. 10, 1779, and, when a few years old, his father moved to Bedford Co., Penn., and settled in Morrison's Cove; he was brought up a farmer, but early learned the art of distilling. On March 4, 1806, he was married to Elizabeth Keith, who was born near Coffee Run, Penn., and she was then 17 years old; her father's name was Lewis Keith, and her mother's Mary Saltsman. In 1810, Mr. Leedy visited Richland Co., and, in 1811, moved, landing upon Sec. 35 June 6; his wagon was used as a residence until a log cabin was erected; in 1812, he set up a still and commenced the manufacture of spirits, which was the first one put in operation in the county. The excitement caused by the Zimmer tragedy prompted him to leave his habitation in 1812, and he removed to the block-house at Fredericktown, where he remained about nine days. The forest was rapidly cleared away around his dwelling, and the ground devoted to agriculture; the still, which he operated in connection, proved a valuable auxiliary, as the grain could be converted into liquor, which met with a ready sale to the Indians; he remained upon the farm until 1836, when he left it and opened a hotel in Bellville, occupying the building in which the Exchange Bank is quartered; here he remained about six years, and then returned to his farm, and died Sept. 6, 1851. He owned 640 acres of land; was one of the first Trustees of Jefferson when it embraced three townships; bold and resolute, knowing no fear, and, in his years of age, weighed 360 pounds. His children are Lewis, Catharine, Susan, Mary, Abraham, Samuel, Margaret, Rosan, John, Sarah and David; they all grew up and were married, except David, who died young; the daughters all moved West after marriage, with the exception of Catharine, who married Samuel Garber, and died in Jefferson Township. Mother Leedy died in Indiana at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Spayd, and was interred with the remains of her husband near Ankneytown, Ohio.

LEEDY, LEWIS K., resides on and owns a part of Sec. 35; he was born in Bedford Co., Penn., March 12, 1807; he came with his parents to Jefferson Township in 1811, and has made it his place of residence ever since; he participated in the toils and hardships incident to a pioneer life, and also enjoyed its pleasures; when he arrived at the age of manhood, he commenced to teach music, using the system known as the "Buckwheat Notes;" he was pre-eminently the pioneer music teacher of the southern part of the county. He has held the office of Township Trustee several times, has been an active member on the Board of Education of the township, and a useful man generally. JOHNS, DAVID, farmer; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in Jefferson Co. in 1808, and came to Madison Township in 1814. He was married to Elizabeth Foglisong in 1832; they had twelve children, six sons and six daughters. Mrs. Johns died in May, 1861, at the age of 48. Mr. Johns was again married in 1862, to Amanda Stoutenbarger, by whom he had one son. When he came to this county, it was almost a wilderness, inhabited by Indians and infested by bears, wolves and panthers; the family located at Bean's Mills, near the block-house; here they built a log cabin; it was made after the old style, with a puncheon floor, clapboard loft, and was furnished in the plain custom of those times; they had split stools for chairs and split puncheon for a table; their bedstead was made of round poles attached to the wall by boring holes in the side of the building and fastening the poles in them; their neighbors were chiefly Indians, who were very friendly; on one occasion, about forty Indians came near their cabin and had a great jubilee, dancing, thrilling the air with their Indian whoop. Mr. Johns had the door barred, on one side of which was a loop-hole, while his trusty rifle stood near the bed. After the Indians had gone, he came into the cabin and said "they would have to move back, or they would all be killed." His wife replied "they could stand it if 'Daddy Bean' could." Asking the chief if they had better move back or stay, he replied, "No; you stay; you good white man; you make good corn." They raised their first crop of corn in 1815; then they sowed buckwheat and raised a good crop; they took it to a mill, where the village of Lexington now stands. Mr. Johns formed an acquaintance with John Chapman (Appleseed), who visited them very frequently; they have some fruit in their orchard which has grown from seed brought by him. Mr. Johns had one son—John B., in McLaughlin's squadron of cavalry, in the late war; he died April 8, 1862, on the Big Sandy River, in Kentucky; his remains were brought home and buried on his father's farm, Gen. McLaughlin attending the funeral.

MUSCROFT, S. J.; P. O. Mansfield; author of the "Drummer Boy of Shiloh;" he was born in Cincinnati, Ohio, Jan. 19, 1838; his parents came from Sheffield, England; his father was a cutler by trade; at the death of his parents, he was 4 years old, and was the sixth child of a family of seven. He was married to Mrs. E. Baker, daughter of John Hull, Sr., May 17, 1875; they have three daughters—Nellie Maria, Jessie Luelle and Georgia May. Mr. S. J. Muscroft is an old soldier, who served with credit in the Army of the West; every one remembers the beautiful story of the "Drummer Boy of Shiloh," so pathetically told in verse; how the two little girls found the young body, stark and ghastly, upon the battle-field, and, in their innocent and childish way, prepared it with their own garments for the partial burial which their pigmy strength would admit. This affecting story struck a sympathetic chord in the heart of Corporal Muscroft, and upon it he based the allegory which has delighted and amused tens of thousands of people in all sections of the country. There are but few among all these tens of thousands of people who know that the men who have been mainly instrumental in the success of the play were soldiers, and that they are familiar with all the details of the scenes and incidents which the "Drummer Boy of Shiloh" presents. In the first place, Mr. Samuel J. Muscroft, the proprietor, is a native of Cincinnati; he enlisted at Mansfield on Aug. 6, 1862, in the 102d O. V. I., a member of Co. B; he served with credit through the campaign, which began with Gen. Kirby Smith's raid; his command became a part of the Army of the Cumberland, under Gen. Rosecrans, at the battle of Bowling Green, Ky.; in the fall of 1863, he was on duty at the headquarters of Gen. Rousseau, and, being eager to join his comrades in the struggles which were imminent, he left the headquarters and proceeded to "the front" to join his regiment; but he was ordered to report back to Gen. Rousseau; he was taken sick, and, with others, was at Athens, Ala.; on the morning of Sept. 23, 1863, Muscroft took the train to report to Gen. Rousseau, and, at 2 o'clock of the same day, Athens was surrendered by Col. Campbell to Gen. Forrest; the boys in the hospital, under a hospital flag, were fired upon and many of them killed; a few of the brigade from Decatur and the entire command were captured at 4 o'clock, by Forrest, the Lieutenant Colonel and Major being killed; the prisoners were taken to Tuscumbia, Ala., where the officers were paroled and the men forwarded to Cahawby, Miss. Here they remained as prisoners of war for nine months, after the expiration of which they were removed to Vicksburg and exchanged, all save a few who were blown up on the steamer Sultana. It was the order of Gen. Rousseau recalling Muscroft that kept him out of all this misery and danger. The engagements in which his command participated were Frankfort, Ky., Clarksville (where Gen. Morgan's celebrated skirmish took place), Decatur, Athens, and at Nashville, at which place the men were taken out of the headquarters and put in the trenches. It will thus be seen that comrade Muscroft has seen some service.

McBRIDE, DUNCAN (deceased); he was born in Hampshire Co., Va., June 11, 1807, and moved with his parents to Richland Co. in 1817; they settled one mile north of what is now the village of Lucas, in their log cabin, which for a time had no floor but the earth; when a floor was had, it was the puncheon floor quite common in that day; a quilt was hung up for a door. Duncan McBride was of Scotch and Irish extraction, his father having emigrated to this country from the North of Ireland when but a small boy; one of the anecdotes related by him was concerning their experience with porcupines. In those days they put bells on their horses and turned them out in the woods. In hunting for them they were very apt to run across the quadruped aforementioned, and being always accompanied by their dogs (of which the number was not small), they were readily tracked; the consequence was, the mouths of the dogs would be filled with the quills of the porcupines. On their returning home, it was their work to take the bullet molds and pull out the quills. He used to add that the amount of yelling and howling was horrible. At an early age, went to Mansfield (then a small village) to learn the tanner's trade with a Mr. Pugh. Having learned the trade, and taken to himself a wife in the person of Miss Elizabeth Chew, in the year 1828 he moved to the village of Perrysville, and while there tanned skins for the Greentown Indians. In the year 1829, he again removed on a farm in Monroe Township, on the road leading from Mansfield to Perrysville, about one and a half miles east of Lucas, at the foot of Mohawk Hill, where he continued to carry on his trade, as well as till the soil, and where he continued to live till the time of his death, Oct. 18, 1862. He and his wife connected themselves with the Presbyterian Church of Perrysville, when rather young in years, and lived and died in that faith. He was quite prominent in the early history of the county; he has been heard to say that at one time he was acquainted with nearly every one in this county. He took an active part in politics, and was elected to different offices of public trust; the law of the land and the law of God were his delight and study, and it was said by those who knew him well, that he was as well versed in the law as the best lawyers of Mansfield. To him five children were born—Maria, the eldest, was married to James Marlow, and resides three miles west of Mansfield; Thomas died at the age of 26; Lydia died in infancy; William resides one mile south of Lucas; Washington resides four miles east of Mansfield. Mr. McBride died after a brief illness, and lies buried beside his fathers in the cemetery one mile west of Lucas, on a part of his father's farm reserved for that purpose. His wife, Elizabeth, was born Aug. 5, 1808, in Harrison Co., Ohio, near Cadiz, and moved with her parents to Richland Co. when a young girl; she died Jan. 9, 1874, and was buried by the side of her husband; she was a loving mother, and died saying that "she had gained the victory through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Mr. Swoveland has always been a resident of Mifflin Township. He is engaged in farming, and has a well-improved farm. He has erected a large house, with all the modern improvements, and has also built one of the most convenient barns in Mifflin Township.

WALTERS, HIRAM, farmer; P. O. Mansfield. The subject of this sketch was born in Mifflin Township, Richland Co., Ohio, on the 16th day of March, 1825; his father's name was Solomon Walters, and his mother's maiden name was Mary Starrett; his father was of German and his mother of Irish descent; he had six brothers and four sisters; has three brothers and two sisters now living. His father was one of the early settlers of the township, having emigrated here from Pennsylvania in 1822; his mother was a Virginian by birth; his parents resided on the farm now owned by Henry Hoover, in said township, from the time of their marriage up to the time of their death. His father died about 1857, and his mother about 1862. The subject of this sketch was married to Jemima Shaffer, second daughter of Samuel and Ruth Shaffer, of Mercer Co., Ohio, at the residence of her father, in 1855. They settled first in Mercer Co., where they continued to reside about eleven years, when they removed to Richland Co. and settled on his father's farm in Mifflin Township, which they subsequently purchased. He lived on this farm about five years, when he sold it to its present owner, and bought the farm on which he now resides, it being the southwest quarter of Sec. 29, in said township. Mr. Walters has been for about sixteen years extensively engaged in buying and shipping live stock, and, by paying liberal prices and fair and honest dealing, he has been able to gain the confidence of the people, and thereby has made this business, in which so many have failed, a success. When Mr. Walters was about 25 years old, he took a trip to the "Golden State," where he remained for about two years. He followed mining while there, and met with good success. It was there that he got his start financially. While homeward bound, the ship on which he embarked was overtaken by a severe gale, which totally dismantled her, and all on board came near finding a watery grave. Mr. and Mrs. Walters are the parents of eight children, seven sons and one daughter. By good management and close application to business, they have been able to secure a competence for themselves and family. They have a good farm, well improved and well cultivated.

WOLFE, T. G., miller; P. O. Mifflin, Ashland Co.; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn.; came to Ohio in the fall of 1878; he has two children—Willis T. and Sarah E. Mr. Wolfe is engaged as miller at the Snyder Mill; he is a practical mechanic and a first-class miller. This mill was built by John Yeaman in 1832. It still has the reputation of being one of the best mills in the county. They have connected with it an excellent saw-mill, using a circular saw manufactured by the Mansfield Machine Co. They are doing a very extensive business in sawing and lumber of every dimensions for building purposes. Mr. Wolfe is an enterprising and obliging gentleman, and he is the right man in the right place.

WOODHOUSE, JOHN, farmer; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in England Oct. 20, 1808; his parents emigrated from there in June, landing in Philadelphia in August, 1820; from there they came to Ohio by team, arriving in this county in October the same year; they then purchased the farm on which he now lives. Mr. Woodhouse was married, in 1832, to Elizabeth Jackson, who was born in England; their family consists of John J., who was born in 1833, and who now resides in California; Isaac N., born in 1838, and now resides in Bellville, Nev.; Sarah A., born in 1837, was married to William Douglas, who now resides near Shelby; Lydia H., born in 1840, was married to John Douglas, and they also reside near Shelby; Thomas P., who died in infancy; Mary, who died at the age of 8 years, and Elizabeth, who died at the age of 14 years. Mrs. Elizabeth Woodhouse died in 1858, at their residence. Mr. Woodhouse's second marriage took place in 1860, to Ellen Ray, who was born in the State of Vermont. Mr. Woodhouse came to this county when it was in a wild state; he was often sent, when a boy, on horseback, to the Newman mill when it was difficult to find the road; he has proved himself to be a worthy and excellent citizen.

YEAMAN, JOHN, sawyer; P. O. Mifflin, Ashland Co.; he was born in Mifflin Township Feb. 13, 1818; he is a son of John Yeaman, Sr., who was born in Washington Co., Penn., Dec. 8, 1779; he emigrated to Ohio in 1814; his father was killed by the Indians in Washington Co., Penn. Mr. Yeaman, Sr., was married to Ann McCready June 30, 1807; he entered three quarter-sections of land in this township; he cleared a small space and erected a cabin twelve feet square, with a clapboard roof and a ground floor; he slept a number of nights in the cabin where the Zimmer family resided and was murdered; he was a carpenter by trade, and built a saw-mill, in 1830, also a flouring-mill, in 1832, being the first in this part of the country; the first buhrs were nigger-heads. The first miller was a Mr. Cotter; the next was John Stafford; the people came a great distance to this mill. John Yeaman, Jr., was born a cripple, and, on this account, received a liberal education for those times; he engaged in teaching school at the age of 19; he taught thirteen terms; his father gave him a farm, where Nicholas Henry now resides; he now owns a small farm and steam saw-mill. Mr. Yeaman has been an active and enterprising citizen; a Republican in politics; also a member of the Presbyterian Church for a number of years.

VANTILBURG, J. B., farmer; P. O. Mansfield. He was born in Mifflin Township Jan. 19, 1825, and was married in 1851 to Margaret Jane Boals, who was born in Mifflin Township June 5, 1827; they have six children—Mary K. was born March 30, 1856; John Melvin, born June 19, 1860; Anna Maria, born June 7, 1862; Lucilla, born Nov. 15, 1864; William Francis, born Dec. 19, 1866; and Gaylord, born Sept. 20, 1869. The following members of the family are deceased: Eugenia, Henry, Joseph and Margaret Jane. Mr. and Mrs. Vantilburg joined the Presbyterian Church in 1857. Mary Vantilburg, Mr. Vantilburg's mother, was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., Feb. 11, 1798; she was married to John Vantilburg May 4, 1819; they had a family of children; she came with her parents from Harrison Co., Ohio, to Richland Co., April 5, 1813; they purchased a farm in Mifflin Township, this county, March 13, 1818; Mrs. Vantilburg has resided on this farm for sixty-two years and is still residing on the same farm with her son, J. B. Vantilburg; her husband was in the war of 1812, was engaged as an officer, continued till the close of the war; Mr. John Vantilburg died Jan. 9, 1871, at his home in Mifflin Township, this county; since the death of her husband, she has made her home with her son, J. B. Vantilburg. She has been a member of the Presbyterian Church of Mansfield for fifty-seven years, was one of the first members; through her influence and aid has done much to build up this society, and has so conducted her life, that she is regarded by her neighbors as an exemplary Christian, those that know her best respect her most; she is now one of the pioneers of Mifflin Township; can converse of the early settlers, and was acquainted with many of them; her memory is good, she can give dates and circumstances the most correct and precise of any one now living in this county. It affords much pleasure to her to relate reminiscences of the past. When the writer visited her in February, 1880, her 82d birthday, she was afflicted but her mind was rational, and her memory was vigorous, and she gave us much information to assist in making up the history of Mifflin Township.

MONROE TOWNSHIP.

ANDREWS, JAMES (deceased); he was born near Cannonsburg, Penn., Feb. 6, 1796; his father, Col. John Andrews, commanded a regiment of Ohio militia in the war of 1812; among the engagements he participated in was the battle of Fort Meigs. James Andrews was married to Miss Levina Carrick Feb. 11, 1822; she was born near Gettysburg, Adams Co., Penn., Jan. 19, 1797; her parents removed to Harrison Co., Ohio, about the year 1806. James Andrews and wife removed to Richland Co. in the spring of 1823; he purchased a quarter-section of land in Monroe Township, which is now owned by his son Samuel. James and Levina Andrews are the parents of seven children, six sons and one daughter; John G., the eldest child, was born in Jefferson Co. Jan. 29, 1823; James C., their second son, was born Aug. 4, 1825; he and his younger brothers and sister were born in Monroe Township; William R., their third son, was born Oct. 18, 1828; Mary Jane was born May 26, 1831; David, their fourth son, was born June 18, 1833; Joseph, their fifth son, was born May 21, 1838; Samuel, their youngest son, was born July 29, 1840. Mr. and Mrs. Andrews were consistent members of the United Presbyterian Church many years. He was of a kind and generous disposition. Mr. Andrews departed this life Nov. 18, 1850; his disease was cancer on the breast; he had it removed when it had attained to several pounds in weight, but this did not suffice to save his life; after enduring for many days agony the most intense and suffering the most intolerable, he was finally relieved by death; he was buried in the Pine Run graveyard. John, their eldest son, married Rebecca White; James, Rebecca Paxton; William, Elizabeth Stauffer; Mary Jane, Daniel McFarland; Joseph, Ella Simpkins. James and Mary Jane reside in Kosciusko Co., Ind.; John in Iowana Co., Mich., and Joseph in Pawnee Co., Kan. Joseph Andrews enlisted in Co. C, 64th O. V. I., in September, 1861, and served his country faithfully during the war of the rebellion; he participated in the battles of Stone River, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge, Franklin, Tenn., and many other minor engagements; he was a brave and intrepid soldier. David Andrews enlisted in Co. B, 120th O. V. I.; he died of disease contracted in the service at Milliken's Bend, near Vicksburg, May 5, 1863. Samuel Andrews enlisted in November, 1861, in the 6th Ohio Battery; he served fourteen months, when he was honorably discharged from the service on account of general disability. Samuel Andrews was married to Miss Amanda C. Wiles June 9, 1864; he brought his wife home to his mother's house, where they continued to reside, caring and providing for his aged parent during her declining years, and cultivating a portion of the old homestead; at her decease, he became the owner of this farm by purchase, where he still continues to reside; this is one of the best upland farms in the township; it is well watered, well timbered, and well adapted to the raising of all kinds of grain and grasses. Samuel Andrews and wife are the parents of seven children, four sons and three daughters—Harmon, Cary S., Minnie E., Alta T., Levina C. and Samuel L.; one died in infancy; Harmon is buried in the St. John's Cemetery. Mr. Andrews and wife have been active members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church for many years, and are much respected for their many virtues.

APPLEGATE, JOHN. His parents were born in Washington Co., Penn., and emigrated to Richland Co. in the year 1820; they located in Monroe Township and entered the farm that Mr. Applegate now lives on, and his father resided there until his death, which occurred Feb. 15, 1878; they had a family of eleven children. John Applegate was born Feb. 10, 1843; in getting an education, he went to district school until he was 14 years old, when he went to a select school in Lucas, taught by Dr. J. E. Strickler. He enlisted Oct. 15, 1861, in Co. E, 64th O. V. I., and was in all the principal engagements the Army of the Cumberland participated in, and re-enlisted Jan. 1, 1864, as a veteran, and served until the close of the war; he was mustered out and honorably discharged Jan. 4, 1866, having faithfully served his country over four years; after returning home, he rented his father's farm, and commenced farming in the spring of 1866. He was married to Miss H. C. Winters Feb. 11, 1868, and they have a family of three children—George W. and Stiles W., who are twins, and were born Jan. 10, 1869; Hattie E., born July 10, 1874. He moved into Ashland Co. April 3, 1869, and resided there until March 17, 1880, when he moved back to the old homestead (he having bought it the fall before), where he, together with his family, enjoys the many comforts of life, and the esteem of those around them.

BARR, SAMUEL, farmer; P. O. Lucas; was born in Bedford Co., Penn., May 25, 1823; he is the eldest son of David and Mary Barr; his mother's maiden name was Kaylor; his parents were both of German descent; they came to Ohio in the spring of 1830. David Barr left his family in Stark Co., during that summer, while he came to this county to hunt a location; he purchased the southeast quarter of Sec. 5, in Monroe Township; he removed his family to this township in the fall of the same year, but, their farm being unimproved, they did not move thereon till the following spring; in the mean time, they put up a house and removed a portion of the dense forest that encumbered their lands; in the spring, they removed to their farm and went to work in earnest to improve and cultivate it; by persevering industry on the part of all the members of the family who were old enough to labor, the wilderness disappeared and fruitful fields appeared in their stead. David and Mary Barr are the parents of seven children, three sons and four daughters; they are named in the order of their births, as follows: Samuel, Frederick, Nancy, Susan, Elizabeth, Ephraim and Mary. Ephraim died when about 18 years old. Elizabeth was married to Jeremiah Jones; she died Dec. 28, 1878, leaving a family of seven children, four sons and three daughters. Samuel Barr remained with his father, assisting him in improving and cultivating his farm, till some time prior to his marriage. Feb. 16, 1846, he was united in marriage to Miss Barbary A. Beasore, eldest daughter of Daniel and Mary Beasore, of Monroe Township; by this marriage, he had six children, one son and five daughters, named as follows: Mary Jane, John A., Salena A., Martha A., Susan E. and Emma A. Martha A. and Emma A. are dead, and buried in the Mount Zion Cemetery. Mary J. married William Durbin; John, Susan L. Dillon; Salena A., Charles Swigart; Susan E., W. S. Kerr. Mrs. Barr was a consistent member of the German Reformed Church for many years; she died Jan. 12, 1868, and was buried in the Mount Zion Cemetery. Mr. Barr married for his second wife Miss Susan M., eldest daughter of Alexander and Ruth J. McBride; they were married Dec. 20, 1868; by this marriage he has had four children, two of whom died in infancy; the names of the two living are Hattie and Courtney Scott. Soon after his first marriage, Mr. Barr rented one of his father's farms; he lived on this farm about five years; he managed, in that length of time, by the most careful management and close appliton to business, to amass means enough, as he thought, to justify him in buying a farm of his own; he purchased 120 acres of land in Mifflin Township, and removed his family thereon; he subsequently sold 60 acres of this land; when Mr. Barr removed to this farm, he found it very much out of repair; the buildings were old and dilapidated, the fence rotten and broken down, and the fields covered, to a great extent, with briars and brambles; he immediately set about making the necessary improvements; during his stay on this farm, he built a dwelling, bank-barn and other outhouses, cleared his fields of the briars and brambles that encumbered them, repaired his fences, and made many other valuable improvements; nor was his labor in vain; he bought the whole farm for $1,920, and sold the eighty acres for $5,000; after residing on this farm about nineteen years, he sold it, as above stated, and purchased the southeast quarter of Sec. 5, in Monroe Township, to which he removed his family and where he still continues to reside; this farm is highly fertile and very productive, and Mr. Barr, being a first-class farmer, has it under a good state of cultivation; it is well adapted to all kinds of farming purposes. Mr. Barr and wife are both active and zealous members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Lucas; they have contributed largely of their means toward the building of churches, the support of the ministry, and other religious and benevolent enterprises. For the last ten years, Mr. Barr has been an active member of Monroe Lodge, No. 224, I. O. O. F.; he has attained to the highest rank in his lodge. Mrs. Barr is an active and influential member of Morning Star Lodge, No. 36, Daughters of Rebecca. Mr. Barr has held offices of honor and trust, both in Mifflin and Monroe Townships.

BERRY, PETER, REV.; P. O. Hastings; Henry Berry, his father, was born in Huntingdon Co., Penn., in 1805; moved to Wayne Co., Ohio, in 1820, and from there to Richland in 1825. Was married to Miss Catharine Keller June 11, 1829, by whom he had eleven children, six sons and five daughters. Elizabeth, the eldest, was born Feb. 11, 1830; married to Zachariah Burkirk in 1848; died in 1849, and was buried in the Hersh Graveyard. Mary, their second daughter, was born Sept. 19, 1831; was married to John Hersh in 1850. Her husband died in 1854. Peter, their eldest son, was born in Monroe Township Nov. 2, 1833. Henry, their second son, was born in 1835; was married to Miss E. Hoover, when he was about 20 years old. Lived with her about twelve years, when she died. He was then married to Miss Hattie Wilcox, of Delaware Co. He lived with her four years and eight months, when he died. He was an itinerant minister of the Gospel; preached for the United Brethren Church eight years, and for the Methodist Episcopal Church two years. He died of consumption, and was buried at East Liberty, Delaware Co. Their third daughter, Christina, married C. L. Miller; lived with him about four years, when she died of consumption. Their fourth daughter, Sarah, married Henry Clever; they removed to Michigan, where they now reside. Their third son, John, enlisted in the army during the late war. Went into camp at Mansfield, where he remained one night, was taken sick, came home and died. He was about 20 years old when he died; was buried at the Hersh Graveyard. Their fifth daughter, Harriet, married Jerry Snyder. Her husband enlisted in the Union army during the late war, where he contracted a disease which caused his death. She died in 1877, and was buried at Four Corners. Their fourth son, William, enlisted in the thirty-day service, and died while returning home. Their fifth son, Philip, died at Palmyra when about 20 years old. Their youngest son, Jacob, died in infancy. Henry Berry, at an early day, purchased a small farm in the southwestern part of the township, where he continued to reside as long as he lived. His widow, who is now quite old and feeble, still continues to reside there. Peter Berry was raised on this farm. He worked on the farm till he was about 15, when he engaged to learn the carpenter trade with Christ Teeter and Isaac White. He worked with them two years, when he entered into partnership with Eli Berry, with whom he worked one year. From that time to the present, he has carried on the business himself. Dec. 12, 1854, he was married to Miss Rebecca Teeter of his native county, by whom he had three sons and three daughters—Adam, Eli, Sarah Ellen, Mary M., Alice and Harvey. Mrs. Berry died at the age of 31 years; she was buried at the Hersh Graveyard. Mr. Berry was married to Miss Nancy J. Hulit, of his native township, in 1856. By this marriage, he has had seven children, three sons and four daughters—Ermina Ercena, the eldest, was born Oct. 18, 1866; Lilly Etta, April 3, 1869; Silva Ariminda, Jan. 6, 1871; Olie Catharine, Oct. 25, 1873; Albert Pearl, Oct. 31, 1875; Ernest Everts, Oct. 3, 1877, and Charlie Leroy, July 10, 1879. Albert Pearl died April 1, 1877. Olie Catharine was killed by a falling tree Nov. 18, 1879; they were both buried at the Worthington Cemetery. Mr. Berry and his first wife united with the United Brethren Church in 1853. In 1855, having removed to a distance from their church into the vicinity of a Lutheran church, they united with the Lutheran Church; they remained in this church about five years, when they re-united with the Brethren Church, in connection with which Mrs. Berry remained till her death, and to which her husband still belongs. Mrs. Nancy Berry was a member of the Baptist Church for several years before her marriage. Shortly after her marriage she united with the church to which her husband belonged. In 1864, Mr. Berry was licensed to preach by the Sandusky Conference, of which he was a member till 1878, when a new conference was formed, called the Central Ohio, to which he has since belonged. He took charge of Shelby Station part of one year; the remainder of the time he has occupied a local relation. He is quite conservative in his religious views, willing, whenever he has the opportunity, to unite with his brethren of other denominations in their efforts to do good. He labors hard at his trade and at farming, to support his large family. He attends all the revivals in his section of country, and takes an active part wherever permitted to do so. He has preached at more than fifty different places.

BERRY, JACOB, farmer; P. O. Hastings; this worthy citizen was born in Center Co., Penn., March 26, 1800; his father, Peter Berry, Sr., was of English-German descent; he was born in the same place; he followed shoemaking, farming and butchering. He married Elizabeth Byerly, by whom he had six children, three sons and three daughters; in 1820, he came to Wayne Co., Ohio, where he invested $250 in land; he improved it, and sold at an advance of $600; then came to Richland Co. and bought 160 acres in Sec. 28, which he improved. He died here, at 63 years of age; his widow lived on this farm till her death, at 90 years of age. Jacob, the eldest of the family, was stout and hardy, and was taught not to fear hard work; he went with his father to Wayne Co. in 1820, where, April 13, 1823, he was married to Ann Mary Albright; this family came here from Center Co. a year in advance of the Berrys; they located near Canton, Ohio; Mrs. Berry was born June 6, 1797; her mother died when she was 6 years old; she had one brother and five sisters, four half-sisters and a brother, her father being married twice. Frederick Albright, Mr. Berry's father-in-law, died near Canton. Mr. Berry and wife were schoolmates when young; they came to Richland Co. in 1829, and settled where they now live; for $150, he bought 80 acres of land; twelve years after this, he bought the old homestead, for $1,800, exclusive of his share, and then sold it for $3,000 to his sons; his father died about 1841; he and Andrew Charles then bought 60 acres where the latter now lives, for $2,200; 40 acres of this belonged to Mr. Berry; he then paid $1,000 for 20 acres where D. McCready now lives, sold it, and bought the Collins farm of 80 acres for $2,250 cash; sold 15 acres to William Clusman and 4 to Mrs. Collins; he now owns 181 acres of good land. Mr. Berry and wife have had five sons and four daughters; all became men and women, except one boy, who died in infancy; their names are Elizabeth, Adam and Benjamin (twins), Eli, Margaret, Sophia and Catherine: Anthony and Samuel, the youngest, are dead: the latter was in the army eleven months: not feeling well, he went into the hospital, when a detachment of the enemy came up and fired through the window: he was shot in the head, and died instantly. Mr. Berry and wife have been members of the Lutheran Church sixty-four years; belong to Hersh's Church; has been Deacon and Elder a number of years; has also been Trustee.

BERRY, ELI, farmer; P. O. Lucas. Eli Berry, fourth son of Jacob and Mrs. Berry, was born in Monroe Township, June 8, 1830. The days of his boyhood were spent on a farm; he was permitted to attend school a few months during the year, and succeeded in acquiring a fair knowledge of the common English branches. About the time he attained his majority, he commenced to work at the carpenter trade; he worked at this business about ten years, and became a very good mechanic. He was married, April 17, 1859, to Miss Sarah Hays; Miss Hays was a daughter of Mr. John Hays, of Worthington Township, by his first wife, and grand-daughter of Capt. Cunningham; she was born Oct. 16, 1838. By this marriage, Mr. Berry had two children, a son and a daughter—Ira Sturges, born Jan. 19, 1860, and Huldy Maria, April 26, 1862. Mrs. Sarah Berry died June 5, 1866, and was buried in the St. Johns Cemetery. Mr. Berry was married to Mrs. Mary E. Goodale Dec. 10, 1867; Mrs. Goodale, whose maiden name was Rummel, is the oldest daughter of Louis Rummel, by his second wife, Anna Rummel. Miss Rummel was born in Wyandot Co., Ohio, May 23, 1841; she was married to Mr. Joseph Goodale, of Knox Co., Ohio, in December, 1862; her husband was a soldier in the late war; served with credit the full term of his enlistment; he contracted disease while in the army which caused his death; he lived but a short time after his return home; he was buried in the Ebenezer Cemetery, Knox Co. Mr. and Mrs. Berry are the parents of three children, one son and two daughters—Earl Douglas, born May 23, 1870, died Nov. 24, 1871 (is buried in the St. Johns Cemetery); Anna Zelma, born Sept. 25, 1872; Eva Joy, born July 24, 1877. Mr. Berry was a member of Monroe Lodge, No. 224, I. O. O. F., for many years. He and his good wife have been active and zealous members of the Disciple Church for many years; they have been very liberal in their contributions for the building of churches, the support of the ministry, and other religious and benevolent enterprises. The first land owned by Mr. Berry was the undivided half of the farm now owned by his brother, Benjamin, in this township; 1870, he sold his interest in this farm to his brother, and purchased a farm adjacent to the village of Lucas, known as the Marks farm: in 1873, he traded this farm for the one he now owns, it being the northeast quarter of Sec. 32, in Monroe Township; he has materially improved this farm since he became the owner of it; he is regarded as a first-class farmer; Mr. Berry has devoted his whole attention to farming for many years; he has made the business a study, and has acquired a pretty thorough knowledge of it; his farm is highly fertile and well adapted to most farming purposes. In their dispositions, Mr. Berry and wife are kind and social; they are ever ready to minister to the wants of the needy and distressed. By persevering industry and careful management, they have been enabled to acquire a considerable portion of this world's goods, and are now prepared, should they meet with no reverses of fortune, to pass their declining years in ease and comfort.

BOLES, R. S., M. D., Lucas; was born March 8, 1843, in Franklin Township, Wayne Co., Ohio; in 1853, his parents removed to Ripley Township, Holmes Co.; in 1866, he began the study of medicine with Drs. Bertolett & Todd, of Shreve, Wayne Co.; he graduated at Charity Hospital Medical College during the sessions of 1868 and 1869. He began the practice of his profession in the spring of 1869, in West Windsor, Richland Co.; in the spring of 1870, he removed to Lucas, where he still resides. He was married to Catharine Hale, of West Windsor, Oct. 19, 1871. His father, William Boles, died March 19, 1867; his mother, Margaret Boles, died March 2, 1871. He has three brothers and two sisters living. The Doctor is kind, jovial and friendly in his disposition, affable and pleasing in in his manners. He is well fitted for the profession he has chosen. Comparatively speaking, he has a very lucrative practice for a man of his age; in his practice he has been remarkably successful, and is now recognized as one of the prominent physicians of our county.

CHEW, SAMUEL, farmer; P. O. Lucas; he was born in Harrison Co., Ohio, near Athens, April 5, 1810; his father's name was William Chew; his mother's maiden name Lydda Hancher; his father was of Welsh, and his mother of English descent; his father, a farmer, emigrated to Richland Co. about the year 1818, a little northwest of the present site of Lucas; he remained on this farm four years, when he purchased the west half of the southwest quarter of Section 22, in Monroe Township, where he spent the remainder of his days. Samuel Chew was married to Miss Mary McBride, daughter of Thomas and Mary McBride, early settlers of Monroe Township, April 5, 1832; by this marriage he had ten children, five sons and five daughters—Archabald, born Jan. 15, 1833, married to Miss Elizabeth Swan Jan. 24, 1856, died a few years ago; Lydda, born Nov. 6, 1834, married to Newton Hersh Sept. 21, 1858, died in March, 1863, leaving three children—she was buried in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery, near Lucas; Mary Ellen, born Oct. 15, 1836, died May 13, 1854—buried in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery; Ann, born Oct. 22, 1839, married to Washington Gates March 11, 1860, resides in Wyandot Co.; William Washington, born July 4, 1841, married to Miss Fox, she dying, he married Louisa Fink, of Wyandot Co., where he now resides; Thomas M., born Nov. 5, 1843, married Mary Augustine in September, 1862; James W., born March 14, 1846, married Isabella Hersh in the spring of 1870; Alfred G., born June 3, 1850, married Susan Eirhart, died in September, 1865, and was buried in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery, near Lucas; Arvina E., born Nov. 28, 1851, died May 21, 1860; Olive A., born April 2, 1855, married John Eirhart May 23, 1877. In 1831, Mr. Chew purchased the southeast quarter of Section 15, in Monroe Township; there were no improvements on this farm at the time he bought it. It is now well improved, and in a very good state of cultivation. Mrs. Chew was a consistent member of the Lutheran Church for many years; she died Aug. 25, 1858, respected by all who knew her, and was buried in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery, near Lucas. June 28, 1860, Mr. Chew was married to Mrs. Mary A. Wright, relict of Moses Wright, formerly of Shelby, Ohio; her father's name was Joseph Gerard, and her mother's maiden name Rachel Prosser; her father was of French, and her mother of Welsh descent; she had one child by her first husband—Mary L. Wright. She married Alonzo P. Marvin, of Shelby, her native town; moved to Wyandot Co., where she died July 14, 1852, leaving one child, a daughter, Mabel; she was buried at Shelby. Mr. Chew has been a member of the Masonic Fraternity about thirty years.

COULTER, MELTZER (deceased), was born in Butler Co., Penn., Oct, 19, 1798; his father's name was Thomas Coulter, and his mother's maiden name Nancy Tannahill. Thomas Coulter was born Aug. 8, 1766, Nancy Tannahill Jan. 28, 1761; they were married Nov. 17, 1789; they came to Richland Co., in 1811; he entered a farm about three-fourths of a mile below the present site of the village of Perryville, being the one on which the Stringer mill now stands, which farm he cultivated and improved, and on which he continued to reside as long as he lived. He was married three times; his first wife died July 30, 1825. He was married to Mrs. Martha Rice Nov. 1, 1825; his second wife died Sept. 7, 1835. He was married to Mrs. Jane Perry Sept. 13, 1836. He died Oct. 28, 1844; he and his three wives are buried side by side in the Perrysville cemetery. Meltzer Coulter was about 13 years old when his parents came to Richland Co. He remained with his father, assisting him in his labors until he attained his majority, when he began business on his own account. He was married to Eliza Adzit Nov. 20, 1823, by whom he had four children, two sons and two daughters—Lycurgus, born Aug. 13, 1824, died July 25, 1835; Clarissa, born April 26, 1826, died Aug. 9, 1833; Samantha, born Nov. 15, 1828; Lecenius Milton, born March 19, 1831, married to Eliza Archer May 19, 1853; Syremus Newton, born June 15, 1834, married to Eliza J. Wilson, Sept. 21, 1854; the last-named son is a minister by profession. In the spring of 1826, Mr. Coulter entered the southeast quarter of Sec. 19, in Monroe Township; he put up a cabin on his farm, and went to work to remove the dense forest from a portion in order to prepare it for cultivation. Mr. Coulter's first wife died Aug. 8, 1834, and was buried at Perrysville; he married, for his second wife, Miss Abigail P. Crawford, second daughter of George and Mary Crawford, of Perrysville; they were married Jan. 14, 1836; by this marriage he had four children, one son and three daughters—Eliza R., Mary, Nancy J. and Thomas M.; Eliza R. died Sept. 14, 1842; Mary, Sept. 8, 1842; they were both buried at Perrysville. Mr. Coulter was an active and consistent member of the Presbyterian Church about forty years, and his last wife was a zealous member of the same church about thirty years. Mr. Coulter was one of the first men in his township to advocate the cause of temperance; he was also the first man in the township to vote the Antislavery ticket, and, notwithstanding the scoffs and jeers of fellow-townsmen, he continued to vote this ticket several years; he lived, however, to see his party triumphant. He died Feb. 28, 1875, and was buried at Perrysville. His widow still resides on the old homestead. Thomas M. Coulter, only son of Meltzer Coulter by his second wife, was married to Miss Elizabeth Gardner, daughter of George and Elizabeth Gardner, Dec. 25, 1870; she is of German descent; her mother's maiden name was Mentzer. Thomas M. and Elizabeth Coulter are the parents of five children, three of whom are living and two dead—Esther A., born Jan. 19, 1872, died May 17, 1874; Elmer Alonzo, born Jan. 19, 1874, died Jan. 21, 1875; Samantha Irena, born Dec. 1, 1875; Charley C., Feb. 1, 1877, and Mary Jane, Nov. 25, 1878.

CRAIG, LEMUEL, farmer; P. O. Lucas. His father, John, Craig, was born in Washington Co., Penn., Feb. 8, 1805; was of Irish descent, and a farmer by occupation; his wife, whose maiden name was Hannah Perry, was a Virginian by birth, was born Aug. 10, 1805; was twice married. married to Samuel Stewart Sept. 9, 1823; he was of Scotch-Irish descent; by this marriage she had six children—Mary Jane, born Sept. 14, 1824; Samuel P., born Sept. 9, 1825; Susannah, born May 15, 1827; Mathew D., born Aug. 7, 1828; Alvah, born Sept. 25, 1829, and John, born Aug. 9, 1831. Mr. Stewart came to Richland Co. in 1830, and July 22 of the same year, purchased the northeast quarter of Sec. 29, in Monroe Township, where he continued to reside until the day of his death; he died Jan. 8, 1831. John Craig and Hannah Stewart were married about the year 1834; they have two sons and three daughters, who have lived to be men and women—Lemuel, born March 9, 1835; Elizabeth, born May 29, 1836; Nancy and James, twins, born June 29, 1840, and Mary Ann, born March 2, 1847. Mr. and Mrs. Craig continued to reside on the farm where she first settled in the township as long as they lived; he died Jan. 22, 1869, and she Aug. 21, 1869. Mr. Craig was a member of the Lutheran Church, and was buried in the Pleasant Valley Cemetery; Mrs. Craig was a member of the United Presbyterian Church, and was buried in the Monroe Cemetery. Lemuel Craig was married to Drusilla Huston March 30, 1858, by Rev. W. A. G. Emerson; Miss Huston is the second daughter of John and Mary Huston; Mr. and Mrs. Lemuel Craig were both born and raised in Monroe Township, and have lived on or near the farm on which they now reside, ever since their marriage; Mr. Craig now owns 56 acres of the west side of the old homestead; has erected thereon a very good barn and neat and comfortable dwelling, besides making many other important improvements. Mr. Craig and wife have been active and zealous members of the Lutheran Church for about twenty-two years. He held the office of Township Clerk, and discharged his official duties to the satisfaction of all concerned.

CRAWFORD, DAVID (deceased); he was born in Greene Co., Penn., April 15, 1781; his father's name was John Crawford; his mother's maiden name was Issabella Parker; his parents subsequently moved to Venango Co., in the same State. He remained with them, working on the farm, until he was 25 years of age, when he removed to Washington Co., Penn.; he came to this county about 1815, and entered a quarter-section of land in the southeast part of Monroe Township; he then returned home. He was married, Oct. 1, 1818, to Lucy Applegate, second daughter of Aaron and Mary Applegate, of Allegheny Co., Penn. In the spring of 1819, he again came to this county, erected a cabin and cleared a field of 2 or 3 acres, planting it in corn and potatoes. He remained here until the 1st of July, when he returned to Pennsylvania, and, in September of the same year, removed his family to his home in Monroe Township, the county at that time in a wild and unsettled state; Abrams Baughman, Senior and Junior, Adam Wolfe and Solomon Gladden were his nearest neighbors. Mr. Crawford was a member of the Presbyterian Church originally, as were nearly all the old Crawford family. Some difficulties arose in the church, and he withdrew his name from the church book. About this time, he obtained some of the writings of Emanuel Swedenborg. Believing the doctrine expounded by the founder of the New Jerusalem, he, together with a number of his neighbors, formed an organization in that doctrine. He lived a consistent member thereof the remainder of his life. He was a great reader, and had a remarkable memory. He could relate, with great accuracy, historical events of which he had read years before. He withstood the privations, hardships and dangers incident to every new country—cleared up his farm and reared a family of six children, three sons and three daughters. After cultivating his farm for twenty years, in 1840, he had an attack of palsy that made him an invalid the remainder of his life. He died Feb. 1, 1860, at the age of 78 years 9 months and 16 days. His wife, Lucy, was born in Allegheny Co., Penn., May 7, 1794; she died Jan. 4, 1870, aged 75 years 7 months and 27 days. Their children were Mary, born in 1819; A. Harvey, in 1820; Issabella, in 1822; William T., in 1825; James, in 1827, died in 1850, and Amanda, in 1837. Harvey is living in Emlenton, Venango Co., Penn.; Issabella is living in Ft. Wayne, Ind., and the other three—Mary, Amanda and William—are living in Monroe Township. They are all married, except William.

CRAWFORD, WILLIAM T., farmer; P. O. Perrysville; was born in Monroe Townshiy March 16, 1825; he is the second son of David and Lucy Crawford, pioneers of the township. His boyhood was spent in assisting his father on the farm and in attending the district school in the winter season when his services were not required on the farm; ere he had attained his majority, his father became disabled, when the whole management of the farm devolved upon him; at the death of his parents, he bought the interest of two of his sisters and became the owner of two-thirds of the homestead, where he still continues to reside. He was a private in Co. B, 163d O. N. G.; went into camp at Mansfield May 2, 1864, and served with credit four months and twelve days, when he was honorably discharged, having served a month more than his term of enlistment. Mr. Crawford is passionately fond of music, and in his younger days was one of the leading singers of his neighborhood. He has been a member of Perrysville Division, No. 588, Sons of Temperance, about twenty years; has been a member of the Lutheran Church about fourteen years.

CULLER, GEORGE, farmer; P. O. Lucas; was born in Frederick Co., Md., Jan. 31, 1810; his father's name was Jacob Culler; his mother's maiden name was Barbary Long; they were both of German descent; they came to Richland Co. in the fall of 1825, and purchased the farm now owned by the heirs of Andrew Culler, deceased; they continued to reside on this farm, cultivating and improving it, as long they lived; they were the parents of eleven children, eight sons and three daughters—Michael L., Margaret, Sarah, Elenora, John, George, Jacob S., Isaac, Christopher, Andrew and Philip H., of whom George, Isaac, Philip H., Margaret and Sarah are living. They were very active and consistent members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church for more than fifty years, and were ever liberal in their contributions for the building of churches, the support of the Gospel and other religious and benevolent enterprises; they trained their large family of children to habits of industry, economy and strict integrity, all of whom subsequently became useful members of society and of the church. Mr. Culler died Aug. 2, 1843, aged 70 years 2 months and 8 days; Mrs. Culler died Sept. 9, 1856, aged 79 years 3 months and 14 days; they were both buried at Mount Zion. George Culler remained with his father, assisting him on the farm and occasionally working out at the carpenter trade, till May, 1836, when he was married to Miss Elizabeth Ernsbarger; in about a year after his marriage, he became the owner of the farm on which he now resides, which was, at that time, in a wild and uncultivated state; but, by the persevering industry of Mr. Culler, this dense forest was soon transformed into fruitful fields. By his first marriage, Mr. Culler had three children, all sons—Melancthon, Enoch H. and John J.; Enoch died when about 3 years old; John J. died while in the service of his country, at St. Louis, Mo., and was buried in Christ Cemetery, in that place. His first wife was an active and consistent member of the Lutheran Church for about ten years; she died Nov. 18, 1843, aged 25 years 10 months and 8 days, and was buried at Mount Zion. Mr. Culler married for his second wife Miss Elizabeth M. Wiles, eldest daughter of John and Catharine Wiles; she was born Nov. 6, 1827, in Frederick Co., Md.

DARLING, WILLIAM, Sr. (deceased), was born in Hardy Co., Va., Oct. 6, 1789; his father's name was Robert Darling, and his mother's name, Mary Passence; his parents removed with their family, to Muskingum Co., Ohio, A. D. 1806; this part of the State was at that time in a wild and uncultivated condition; William Darling remained with his father, assisting him in clearing and otherwise improving and cultivating his farm, until the breaking-out of the war of 1812, when he responded to his country's call, and served her with credit during the term of his enlistment. He came to Richland Co. in the spring of 1817, and purchased the quarter-section of land on which the "block-house" stood, in the fertile valley of the Clearfork, about one and one-half miles northeast of Newville, and near the site of the Indian village called "Helltown." Shortly after his arrival in the county, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ravenscraft, a young lady of his neighborhood; Miss Ravenscraft was possessed of a strong constitution and iron nerve, which rendered her a fit companion for the energetic and hardy pioneer to whom she was united in marriage, and which also enabled her to endure the toils, hardships and privations incident to those early days. Mr. Darling was one of the most energetic and enterprising men of his day; when unemployed, he was like a fish out of water; he spent his time in cultivating and improving his farm, until the accident befel him which is hereinafter described, which disqualified him for hard manual labor; after meeting with this accident, he turned his attention to the feeding, breeding and driving to the Eastern markets of fine cattle and other live stock; he introduced some excellent breeds of cattle into this part of the State, among which was the short-horned Durham, which he first introduced into this county. By hard labor, fine financiering and close application to business on the part of both himself and wife, Mr. Darling was enabled, in the course of time, to amass a very considerable amount of this world's goods; he was a very extensive land-owner; he acquired, by purchase, 1,185 acres of land in one body, in the rich and alluvial valley of the Clear Fork, lands that, for quality, are not surpassed by any in the county. Besides this extensive tract, he owned several other farms, in different parts of the county and State. William and Mary Darling were the parents of seven children, five sons and two daughters, named in the order of their births as follows: Elleanor, John, William, George Washington, Abraham, Catharine and Robert; all of this large family were remembered and richly provided for in the last will and testament of their father. The following is a true copy of an appendix to the will of William Darling, Sr. (deceased):

"Having been one of the pioneers of this part of Ohio, the maker of this will, having emigrated from Hardy Co., Va., in the year 1806, in company with his father and family, to Muskingum Co., Ohio, and endured all the hardships, trials and privations incident to the settling and improving of a new country, I do give and bequeath my love, respect and good will to all my old associates, and hope that, by the intelligence, energy and untiring industry of growing posterity, the prosperity of my beloved country may continue to increase as surely and rapidly as though we old pioneers were still here to look after our country's welfare; for, next to my love for my God and my family, is my love for my country—these blessed United States. May prosperity and peace ever be the lot of our happy, happy land."

The maker of this will settled on the farm where he now resides in the year 1817, and, seven years afterward, had the misfortune of having his right leg crushed by the falling of a log upon it, and was obliged to suffer amputation of the injured member. He then turned his attention to the handling of cattle, by which, together with his untiring devotion to business, his strict integrity and honesty, he became wealthy, and was beloved and respected by all who knew him.

DARLING, JOHN, farmer; P. O. Perrysville. He was born in Washington Township Aug. 14, 1819; he was the eldest son of William and Mary Darling. As will be seen by the biography of his father, he came to Richland Co. in an early period of its history; John being the eldest son, was inured from infancy to all the privations of pioneer life; his father was an extensive land-owner, stock breeder and dealer, so that he had plenty of work for his sons to perform; the burden of this work fell on the shoulders of John; he was obliged to work entirely too hard for his own good; his father was a man of great energy; always on the alert himself, he would not tolerate anything like idleness or inactivity on the part of his sons. As soon as John was old enough to handle a hoe or feed stock, he was put to work by his father, and from that day till the day of his marriage, he was obliged to toil from day to day, but little time being allotted him for literary pursuits or for purposes of recreation. He was married Jan. 16, 1851, to Miss Mary Jane Rea, the only surviving child of William and Eliza Rea; the marriage was performed by Rev. Richard Gaily, a minister of the United Presbyterian Church; John Darling's father gave him the southeast quarter of Sec. 36 in Monroe Township; Mr. Darling moved on this farm shortly after his marriage; it was then very much out of repair; the buildings were old and dilapidated, and the fences very much in want of repair; Mr. Darling's labors, therefore, did not cease with his marriage, or with his becoming the owner of a farm; here a new field of labor opened up before him; he went to work in earnest to cultivate and improve his farm, and the work of improvement has steadily advanced to this day; he now has one of the most productive and best cultivated farms in this section of the country; the old tumble-down buildings have given place to a splendid dwelling and large and commodious barn; his fences are in good repair, and everything about the premises bespeaks for its owner the title of a first-class farmer. John and Mary Darling are the parents of the following children: Mary Elizabeth, born March 13, 1852; William Washington, born Feb. 2, 1855; Irena Jane, born Oct. 13, 1857; Florella May, born June 4, 1859; Alfred W., born Oct. 2, 1863; Harman Lewis, born May 10, 1868; Emma J., born Oct. 23, 1870. Mary E. was married to Charles Culler, June 28, 1873; William W. was married to Mary E. Heck, second daughter of J. B. and Artemissa Heck, of Newville; Irena Jane died April 2, 1858; Florella, in May, 1860; both buried in St. Johns Cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. John Darling have both been active and consistent members of the Lutheran Church for many years, and have been very liberal in their contributions for the support of the Gospel.

DARLING, GEORGE W., farmer; P. O. Perryville. Geo. Washington Darling, third son of William and Mary Darling, was born in Worthington Township, Richland Co., Ohio, near the site of the old block-house, on the 25th day of December, 1822, just three days after his father's leg was amputated. As soon as he was old enough to handle a hoe or ride a horse, his father set him to work His father was a man who never tolerated idleness, or had any sympathy for a lazy person; his word was law, and, when he commanded, he expected to be obeyed. His father being an extensive landowner and farmer, as well as a breeder, feeder and dealer in live stock, he had plenty of work for his boys to do; so that the Darling boys of that day had but little time for idleness or play. Little George Washington trained from his boyhood to habits of industry. These same habits that attended the boy have attended the man through life. Farm labor was much harder to perform then than now. This was before the day of the reaper and mower, drill and riding plow; even thrashing machines had not then been introduced into this country. At that time, they used "Armstrong's" machines, and tramped out their grain with horses or thrashed it with flails, so that the Darling boys had to work hard at all kinds of farm work during the summer. Their father sent them to school in the winter season, but very irregularly. They always had a large herd of cattle to feed and attend to during this season of the year, and had to walk not less than a mile every morning to attend to them; and then the thrashing was all done in the winter time, and the boys had to stay out of school to ride the horses while tramping it out, so that George Washington's facilities for obtaining an education were quite limited. However, notwithstanding all these drawbacks, he succeeded, by exercising due diligence during the time allotted to him for study, in obtaining a pretty fair knowledge of the common branches. G. W. Darling was married to Miss Rebecca Jane McCullough, eldest daughter of Samuel and Nancy McCullough, of Newville, Ohio, on the 25th day of January, 1848, at her father's residence, by Francis Johnston, Esq. They lived for two years after their marriage on a farm owned by his father in Mifflin Township, shaking with the ague nearly all the time. From there they removed to the "old homestead," where they resided two years, when they removed to the farm where they now reside, it being the northeast quarter of Sec. 36, in Monroe Township. Mr. and Mrs. Darling are the parents of three children, two sons and one daughter—Robert Benton, born Nov. 10, 1850, married to Miss Amelia Parkison, youngest daughter of James Parkison, formerly of Worthington Township, on the 15th day of April, 1875, by John H. Jones, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Plymouth, Ohio; Samuel Franklin, born Nov. 28, 1852, married to Miss Mary Leiter, daughter of Lewis and Rachel Leiter, by Rev. T. F. Dornblazer, Pastor of the Lutheran Church at Lucas, Ohio, on the 18th day of May, 1873; Clara Artamissa, born Oct. 15, 1858, married to Harrod Judson, of De Kalb Co., Ind., by Rev. C. S. Ernsbarger, of the Lutheran Church, on the 15th day of January, 1878. Mr. Darling is the owner of an excellent farm; it is well improved and well cultivated; his buildings and fences are all in good repair, and everything is in tiptop order about his farm. Mr. Darling united with the M. E. Church at Newville in 1851, and remained a member of that church till 1853, when he united with the Lutheran Church at St. Johns. Mrs. Darling also joined the M. E. Church at Newville when quite young. She united with the Lutheran Church at the same time her husband did. They have been very active and zealous members of the church ever since they united therewith; they have contributed largely of their means for the building of churches and the support of the Gospel, and have the confidence and esteem of all who know them.

DARLING, ABRAHAM, farmer; P. O. Perryville; he was born in Worthington Township May 31, 1824; he is the fourth son of William and Mary Darling; from early youth, he was inured to labor and toil; he never owned a pair of boots till he was 18 years old; he frequently had to go barefooted till quite late in the fall, because it was impossible to get them made sooner, on account of the shoemaker's being so thronged during this season of the year. In the winter season, he and his brothers had to wade through snow to the depth of their knees, to feed the stock. Mr. Darling never owned a fine suit of clothes till he got his wedding suit. His clothing was of home manufacture. His first recollection of attending church was when he was about 15 years old, at which time he went to hear Rev. William Hughes, of Perryville. His first teacher was Thomas Andrews. This school was taught in a log cabin, in Subdistrict No. 1, of Worthington Township. He was married to Miss Rebecca A. Manchester, youngest daughter of Peter and Rebecca Manchester, of Holmes Co., Ohio, Jan. 9, 1851. The ceremony was performed by Francis Johnston, Esq., of Monroe Township. Soon after their marriage, they removed to the farm where they now reside. This is one of the best farms in the township, and probably as good as any in the county. The first dwelling he built thereon was a few years ago, entirely destroyed by fire, together with all its contents. Mr. Darling had his home and its contents insured in the Ohio Farmer, in the sum of $3,300, which amount was promptly paid by this company. He now has one of the most magnificent farmhouses in the township, and it is probably excelled by few in the county. Mr. and Mrs. Darling are the parents of seven children, four sons and three daughters; Mary Francis, the eldest, was born Dec. 14, 1851—married to Thomas Beavers, son of Hezekiah and Isabella Beavers, by Rev. T. F. Dornblazer, June 6, 1871. At the time of their marriage, Mr. Beavers was a druggist; he is now a dealer in live stock. William Allen, eldest son of Abraham and Rebecca A. Darling, born June 17, 1853, was married to Miss Lucetta A., eldest daughter of Emanuel and Margaret McMillen, of Ashland Co., Aug. 8, 1878. The ceremony was performed by Rev. H. L. Wiles, then of Lucas, now Wooster, Ohio. Luther Emmerson, their second son, was born March 31, 1857; is now engaged in teaching. Marion Malancthon was born Sept. 15, 1859; he is now attending an academy at Smithville. Arena May, their second daughter, was born May 1, 1862; she died in infancy. Emerilla E., their youngest daughter, was born Nov. 16, 1864, and also died in infancy. Walter Augustus, youngest of the family, was born Nov. 24, 1865. Abraham Darling and wife united with the Evangelical Lutheran Church at St. Johns about the year 1854, and during the ministry of Rev. W. A. G. Emmerson. Mrs. Darling formerly belonged to the Methodist Episcopal Church, having joined that branch of the church when she was about 14 years old.

DARLING, SAMUEL F., farmer; P. O. Lucas; he was born in Monroe Township Nov. 28, 1852; he is the second son of George W. and Rebecca J. Darling; he was raised on a farm; he was pretty thoroughly educated in the common English branches; he remained with his father, assisting him in his farm work, till March 18, 1874, when he was married to Miss Mary, daughter of Lewis and Mary Leiter, of his native township, March 18, 1856. Feb. 14, 1878, Mr. D. became the owner of a farm containing 60 acres, being a part of the southeast quarter of Sec. 16, in Monroe Township, on which he still continues to reside; his farm is well improved; his buildings and fences are in good repair; Mr. Darling understands his business; the fertility of the soil is kept up, and he rarely fails to raise good crops. Mr. and Mrs. Darling are the parents of three children—Kitty, born April 20, 1875; Linnie, May 20, 1877, and Mary, Nov. 29, 1879. In their dispositions this couple are kind, social and friendly, and have justly merited and won the confidence and esteem of all who have become acquainted with them.

DOUGLASS, JOHN J. farmer; P. O. Lucas; he was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., Dec. 22, 1821. His father's name was Samuel Douglass, and his mother's maiden name, ——— McCurdy. He is of Scotch-Irish descent. His father removed with his family to Worthington Township, Richland Co., in November, 1829; they continued to reside in Worthington till March 1, 1831, when they removed to Monroe Township, where the elder Mr. Douglass purchased the southwest quarter of Sec. 28, on which he settled with his family. Samuel Douglass was a very energetic and industrious man. John J., being the only son, was not permitted to remain idle. He was naturally gifted with more than ordinary intelligence, which he strove to cultivate and improve by all the means within his reach. He was possessed with indomitable energy and decision. He qualified himself for a school teacher, which profession he followed, while a young man, during the winter season for a number of years with good success. He was married to Sophah Schrack, daughter of David and Elizabeth Schrack, Jan. 1, 1850. He removed his wife to the "old homestead," which he had then become the owner of, where they still continue to reside. Mr. Douglass was in the employ of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago Railroad Company for about ten years. He was Auditor of Richland Co. four years. He is the owner of a very good farm; he has it under a very good state of cultivation. Mr. Douglass has been a very active member of Monroe Lodge, No. 224, I. O. O. F., for many years. He is also a member of the Encampment. Some years ago, he united with the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Pleasant Valley. He is the father of three children, two sons and one daughter. His sons are both well educated. The eldest has charge of the graded school at Shiloh, and the youngest of the graded school at Lucas. His daughter is married to Samuel J. Hazlet, a teacher and farmer of Worthington Township.

EVERTS, LEVI, school-teacher; P. O. Hastings; he was born on a farm, one mile north of Bellville, in this county, Jan. 4, 1844; his father's name is Reuben Everts, and his mother's maiden name was Rebecca Howard; he is a twin brother of Eli Everts, of Ft. Wayne, Ind.; there is an incident connected with their birth which is of very rare occurrence; they were not born the same hour, the same day, the same week, the same month or the same year, yet there is but about thirty minutes difference in their ages. Levi Everts was a soldier in the late war; he enlisted in Co. E, 102d O. V. I. July 21, 1862; his company was commanded by Capt. A. W. Loback; he served during the war, and was honorably discharged July 7, 1865. He was married, Dec. 2, 1874, to Miss Ellie, daughter of George and Eliza Ridenour; her mother's maiden name was Mowry; her mother died when she was quite young; she died in Indiana; Ellie was brought back to Richland Co., Ohio, and adopted by her uncle, Jacob Ridenour, of Washington Township, where she continued to reside until her marriage. Levi and Ellie Everts are the parents of three sons—Robert William, born July 25, 1875; Edgar Lloyd, March 21, 1877, and Orlan Ambreg, June 21, 1879. Mr. Everts is a teacher and farmer by occupation; he has taught eighty-four months of school; twenty months of this time he taught in Bellville; he taught eight months in Williams and Fulton Cos.; the remainder of the time he taught in Richland Co.; as a teacher, he has met with very good success.

FERGUESON, JOHN, farmer; P. O. Newville. John Fergueson was born in the State of Pennsylvania, in Cumberland Co., in 1807 or 1808; his father, William Fergueson, was a farmer, to which occupation his son John was placed as soon as he was large enough. William Fergueson was married to Jane Wilson; they became the parents of nine children; in the year 1815, he removed with his family to Worthington Township, where he entered a large tract of land, one-half mile north of Newville; he devoted the remainder of his life to the clearing and improvement of his land; he, his wife and his wife's father all died here and were buried in the Schrack Graveyard. John Fergueson was married to Asenath Morrell; she became the mother of three daughters and six sons; Lavina, Myra, William, Isaac and Irvin are now living; George Hiram, Leonard and Jemima are dead. Mr. John Fergueson owns the old homestead of 220 acres, which he has improved; his son Isaac does the farming, principally, although he is a remarkably well-preserved man, considering his age; his wife died Nov. 4, 1876, at the age of 67; two of his daughters remain with him, and their care and attention, coupled with the considerate and respectful attention of his sons, tend to make the declining years of his life more pleasant.

GLADDEN, SOLOMON (deceased). Solomon Gladden was born in Washington Co., Penn., A. D. 1792; when he was 4 years old, his parents removed to Jefferson Co., Ohio; they settled ten miles west of Steubenville. But little can be gathered concerning his boyhood. He served his country in the war of 1812; he enlisted as private in Capt. Aban's company of Ohio Militia, and was advanced to the position of Ensign. His company was ordered to rendezvous at Cleveland, where they met other companies and were organized and equipped for service. Their camp was near where the Union Depot now stands; Cleveland at that early day was a small village, composed of a few scattered and inferior houses. One month was spent here in making the necessary arrangements. The troops were then ordered on board sail vessels, and sailed to Detroit; they spent some time at Fort Gratiot; they were then ordered to march by land to Lake Superior. During this march an incident occurred that may be worthy of note: Mr. Gladden showed symptoms of an attack of the measles. Having a stream to cross, a sturdy Dutchman belonging to the company proposed that, in consideration of a gill of whisky, he would carry Ensign Gladden across the stream. The proposition being accepted, the Ensign got aboard the Dutchman, and the unwieldy craft started for the opposite shore; when near the middle of the stream, the Dutchman capsized, plunging his precious cargo headlong into the chilling flood. The Ensign no doubt thought his time had come; that a cold bath at this stage of his disease must necessarily prove fatal. He got to the shore as best he could; the army soon went into camp; the boys built a rousing fire; the Ensign drank a half-pint of whisky, which, at that day, was considered an infallible remedy for nearly all the diseases that flesh is heir to; he then wrapped himself in his blanket and laid down on a bed of pine boughs. In a few hours the measles broke out hopefully, and by the time the forces were ready to resume the march, he was ready for duty. At Fort Sarnia they went on board of transports, destined for Mackinaw Islands. Their intentions were to drive the British and Indians from their strongholds in this quarter. Their regiment was commanded by Col. Crogan, a brave and gallant officer. They engaged the enemy on the 10th of August, 1815; during this engagement Capt. Aban was disabled, and the command of the company devolved upon Ensign Gladden. He was but a boy at this time, yet his comrades have asserted that he displayed great skill and bravery in the management of his company. During the engagement, the infantry was ordered to lie down, while the artillery played on the stone wall, behind which the enemy was intrenched. All obeyed except Ensign Gladden, who continued erect, marching back and forth in front of his men, speaking words of cheer and encouragement. While thus engaged, he discovered one of the boys busily engaged in delving in the earth. Upon being asked what he was doing, "py sure," says he, "I'm only getting a few bedaties for tiners." Another poor fellow was crying, "Oh, Lord," at every boom of the enemy's guns. The Ensign told him to stop his bellowing or he would thrust his sword through him. This effectually silenced the timid soldiers. Ensign Gladden remained with his company, fearlessly discharging all the duties assigned to him, till the close of the war, when he was honorably discharged from the service, and returned to his home and friends. In after years, he loved to recount to his listening children and grandchildren, the incidents and adventures he witnessed during his military career.

In the spring of 1818, he came to this county and entered the northeast quarter of Sec. 23, in Monroe Township; he subsequently bought the southeast quarter of the same section from his brother William, who had inherited it from their father. When he came to the county, the nearest mill was at Fredericktown; he was compelled to wend his way through the woods to get his grinding done, there being no roads at that early day; the nearest point where salt could be obtained was Zanesville. Gladden's neighbors, on one occasion, proposed to work his corn during his absence, if he would take his ox team and drive to Zanesville for salt. His route lay through the woods, the most of the way; it took him about two weeks to make the round trip.

Solomon Gladden was married, A. D. 1816, to Miss Mary Harlin; she and their infant son died A. D. 1818, and were buried at Perryville, in this county, at which time there were but few graves in this now densely populated city of the dead. On the 6th of June, 1820, Mr. Gladden was united in marriage to Miss Rachel Young; the ceremony was performed by Jonathan Coulter, of Perryville; by this marriage he had nine children, five sons and four daughters, viz.: Joseph, Rasselas Young, Esther H., Ursula, Madison A., Lovezila L., Mary J., Lovezenski and William F. Lovezenski died, at the age of 17 years, of typhoid fever; Madison

A. died of heart-disease, April 30, 1875, in the 46th year of his age; they were both buried at Perryville. Charles Young, father of Mrs. Rachel Gladden, emigrated to Harrison Co. in 1810, and thence to Richland Co. in 1814, and entered land in Mifflin Township, near where Yaman's mill now stands. Mr. Young was of English origin; Mr. Gladden was of Scotch-Irish descent. He, in common with all the pioneers of this county, passed through many dangers, endured many hardships, toils and privations, and surmounted many difficulties. The red men had not as yet entirely forsaken this favorite hunting-grounds and burial-place of their ancestors. On one occasion, two of their braves, Momus and Jonnycake, came to his cabin and asked for something to eat. After partaking of a hearty repast, they went on their way rejoicing. Mr. Gladden asked one of his little boys, a lad about 3 years old, how he liked the looks of those men: "I don't know, they had leather on their faces, so that I could not see them," was the innocent reply. Abraham Baughman, a neighbor of Mr. Gladden, bought a calf of an Indian on one occasion. The next spring, the Indian came to Baughman's, saw that the calf had grown and improved, and remarked, "Say, Baughman, calf growed much; want more money." Baughman thought it was best to gratify the Indian, and did so. The next spring, the Indian again returned, making use of the same language. Baughman again yielded, but to prevent a like repetition the following year, he fatted the calf and killed it. That singular and eccentric being familiarly known as Johnny Appleseed, but whose real name was John Chapman, very frequently called at the cabin of Mr. Gladden. He spent many nights under his roof. He would never accept of a bed, however, though many times urged to do so. He said the floor was good enough for him. He came to their cabin on one occasion, and found Mrs. Gladden assorting bee-bread from the honey. He asked her if she had any buttermilk in the house, she replied that she had, and, at his request, she filled a coffee-pot with it and gave it to him. He then asked her if he might have some of the bee-bread to eat with it. "Oh, no," said she, "not that; I will get you some wheat-bread." "No thank you," says Johnny, "I would rather have this," and he actually ate a hearty meal of bee-bread and buttermilk. In those early times domestic animals, such as cattle, hogs and sheep, were very scarce, whilst wild animals were numerous; so that the pioneer farmer had to depend upon his rifle for his supply of meat. Many were the trials, dangers and difficulties attending this manner of obtaining food; for, on one occasion, Mr. Gladden, being in need of meat, mounted his horse and started out in quest of a deer. He had not proceeded but a short distance from his cabin, when he saw a fine large buck. He drew up his gun and fired, when the deer started off at a rapid rate through the dense forest. Mr. G. struck the trail and knew from the flow of blood that the deer was severely wounded. He urged on his steed as fast as the nature of the route would permit, hoping to keep the animal in view, knowing that the blood would cease to flow before the deer would fall, and that it most probably would hide, so that he would not be able to discover and obtain another and more exact fire. In his hurry, he laid his rifle across his horse in front of him. The horse made a sudden turn and ran between two saplings breaking his rifle and rendering it entirely useless for the time being. Owing to this accident, he lost his deer, and, for the want of a gun, he passed many a hungry day. He had to go to Wooster, twenty-five miles distant, to get his gun repaired.

Mr. Gladden had a military spirit within him; the sound of the fife and drum sounded more pleasantly to his ears than the sound of the piano, harp or organ would have done. He loved the tented field and the study of military tactics; he therefore raised a rifle company, composed of the hardy sons of the forest; he was elected Captain of this company, and served in this capacity for many years. When the threatened trouble between Ohio and Michigan called for action, he was elected Colonel of a rifle regiment belonging to this county. Volunteers were called for, and the call was responded to by many of the hardy sons of toil. The regiment was ready to move at short notice, but, happily for all concerned, Congress adjusted the matter in dispute amicably and without the shedding of fraternal blood.

Mr. Gladden served as Justice of the Peace for fifteen years in succession; he served as Commissioner of this county six years; he also served in the General Assembly of the State of Ohio one year. A few instances may here be stated to illustrate the rude and uncultivated state of society at that early day: One fine day in June, the Esquire was called upon to marry a couple of young Dutch folks. He met them at the appointed time and place, and proceeded to tie the knot. He asked them to arise, which feat they accomplished without much difficulty; but when told to join their right hands, the groom, with his left hand, grasped the bride by her right. Again they tried to obey orders, but succeeded no better. The third attempt resulted in their joining their left hands. The magistrate, seeing that further attempts would be fruitless, proceeded with the ceremony, varying it to suit the occasion. After the ceremony had been performed, the Justice sought the kitchen fire to light his pipe. Here he met a lady guest, who laughingly remarked, "Squire, did you notice that the darned Dutch fools were married left-handed?" On a similar occasion, the wine having flowed so freely that many of the guests were in high spirits, a bachelor guest, who had indulged pretty freely, undertook to carve the turkey. He accomplished the feat in the following scientific manner: Grabbing the fowl by its legs, he tore off one of these members, and, throwing it on the bride's plate, remarked, "There, Sal, that is for you." Then, tearing off the other leg, he threw it on the groom's plate, with the expression, "There, Bill, take that." So much for the etiquette of early times. In those early times, wild cats were numerous and troublesome, and bears would frequently make a raid on the sheep-folds and pig-pens of the settlers. On one occasion, Mrs. Isaac Applegate was returning from a visit at the cabin of the Gladdens, when she saw a huge bear walking leisurely along in front of her with a pig in its mouth. She hastened home and told her husband what she had seen. Mr. Applegate was not long in arousing a few of his nearest neighbors; David Crawford, Joseph Applegate, Solomon Gladden, Hugh and Samuel Reed were soon in pursuit of the black monster. Bruin was soon overtaken by his pursuers, but, night having set in, he had the advantage of them in the darkness. When closely pursued, he would climb a tree, but before the men could kindle a fire, to enable them to see to shoot him, he would quietly slide down and be off again. After pursuing this course nearly all night, Mr. Gladden finally shot and killed the animal.

Mr. Gladden never turned a human being away hungry from his door; he never refused a night's lodging to any one when it was possible for him to accommodate the applicant. He departed this life Jan. 29, 1873, aged 81 years; he was buried at Perryville. His widow is living at this date; she is in her 80th year; she is remarkably bright and intelligent for a woman of her years; she is much respected for her many virtues.

GIFFIN, THOMAS, farmer; P. O. Perryville. Elliot Giffin, father of Thomas Giffin, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., near the town of Carlisle, on the 10th day of January, 1805; he was a farmer by occupation. He was married to Miss Ann Ellen Noble, daughter of Francis and Margaret Noble, of his native county, in October, 1833, by whom he had five children, four sons and one daughter—Margaret E., born Sept. 9, 1835, died Jan. 28, 1837, and was buried at Miamisburg, Miami Co., Ohio; Francis, born April 28, 1838, died Aug. 4, 1838; Fletcher E., born Jan. 25, 1840, married to Miss Kate Wheeler, eldest daughter of Eli and Louisa Wheeler, of Newville, Ohio; Thomas, born as hereinafter stated in his own biography, and Albert, born in Monroe Township, died in infancy. Elliot Giffin came to Ohio about A. D. 1836; he resided in Miami Co. about six years; he removed thence to near Rowsburg, Ohio; about the year 1842, he removed to Richland Co. and settled on the eastern part of Monroe Township; he lived on rented farms till 1851, when he purchased 80 acres in the southeastern part of the township; he subsequently purchased 80 acres about a mile further north, in the same township; he continued to reside on the farm he first bought, cultivating and improving it, till the day of his death, Dec. 19, 1869, respected by all who knew him. Mrs. Giffin was well educated and highly accomplished for a woman of her day; a sample of her needlework, which she performed when about 13 years old, is a model of beauty and excellence; she was of a kind, gentle and obliging disposition, and a loving mother; she died Jan. 11, 1870; she is buried in the St. Johns Cemetery, and her husband is buried by her side. Thos. Giffin, second son of Elliot and Ann E. Giffin, was born near Rowsburg, Ashland Co., Ohio, on the 15th day of July, 1842. He was married to Miss Hannah, fourth daughter of Sarah and Mary Allenbaugh, of Ashland Co., on the 9th day of October, 1873, by Rev. Smith, Pastor of the Lutheran Church at Mansfield; after their marriage, they settled on the old homestead, where they still reside; their farm is a very good one, a little rough but quite fertile; it is well adapted both to the raising of stock and grain; it is well watered, well timbered, well improved, and in a good state of cultivation. Thomas Giffin is possessed of considerable inventive and mechanical genius; he has invented some machinery, and, had he turned his attention to the mechanical arts early in life, he doubtless would have "made his mark" in the world as a mechanic and inventor. Mr. and Mrs. Giffin are the parents of two children, a son and a daughter—Anna May, born Aug. 1, 1876; Ira Calvin, Jan. 3, 1879. Mr. and Mrs. Giffin are much esteemed in the neighborhood where they reside.

HARTER, NANCY, widow; P. O. Newville. The subject of this biography was born in Ohio Co., Va., September, A. D. 1806; she was the third daughter of Naaman and Jane Billings; her mother's maiden name was Roberts. Mr. and Mrs. Billings were the parents of thirteen children, five sons and eight daughters; the sons were Solomon, Daniel, William, Ephraim and Connell; the daughters were Artimissa, Rebecca, Nancy, Ruth, Jane, Dicy, Caroline and Amanda. Mr. Billings emigrated to Richland Co. in the fall of 1823; he settled on the James Hedges' farm, near the present site of the paper-mill, in the city of Mansfield. Nancy Billings was married to Samuel McCollough in April, 1828; he was a tailor by occupation; they lived in Mansfield for about one year after their marriage, when they removed to Newville, in Worthington Township, where they continued to reside as long as Mr. McCollough lived; he was of a kind, social and friendly disposition; he relished a good joke or a hearty laugh; he had many friends, and but few, if any, enemies; he died of typhoid fever in November, 1851, and was buried in the Newville graveyard. Samuel and Nancy McCollough were the parents of three children, one son and two daughters; the son was born June 10, 1830, was christened John Naaman, died July 10, 1830; Rebecca, the eldest daughter, was born Jan. 25, 1829, married George W. Darling in December, 1847; Artimissa was born in August, 1831, married James Long July 18, 1851. On the 15th of June, 1858, Mrs. McCollough was married to William Harter, of Monroe Township. Mr. Harter came to Richland Co. in 1831, and purchased the southeast quarter of Sec. 32, in Monroe Township, which he cleared, cultivated and improved, and on which he continued to reside till the day of his death, which occurred Dec. 19, 1878. He was an honest, industrious man and an earnest Christian. At his death, he was possessed of considerable property, all of which he acquired by persevering industry and strict economy; Mr. Harter was of German descent. He was an active and consistent member of the Lutheran Church from his boyhood; his remains are interred in the St. Johns Cemetery. Mrs. Harter united with the Methodist Episcopal Church A. D. 1827, and has been an active and zealous member of that branch of the church ever since; as far as her means would permit, she has been very liberal in her contributions for the support of the Gospel and other Christian and benevolent enterprises.

HENRY, SAMUEL, farmer; P. O. Lucas. Samuel Henry, fourth son of Joseph and Margaret Henry, was born in Belmont Co., Ohio, five miles north of St. Clairsville, May 22, 1820; his mother's maiden name was Zediker; his father was of French and his mother of German descent; his parents were both born in Washington Co., Penn., and removed to Belmont Co., Ohio, about the year 1811; they raised a family of nine children, five sons and four daughters; they are named in the order of their births, as follows: Robert, David L., Jonathan, Mary Ann, Samuel, Catharine Jane, Margaret, Nicholas and Elizabeth; three of them—Robert, Jonathan and Margaret—are dead. Samuel, Mary Ann, Catharine Jane and Elizabeth reside in Monroe Township. Nicholas resides in Mifflin Township, and David lives in Hardin Co., near Kenton. Joseph and Margaret Henry removed from Belmont to Richland Co., Ohio, in the spring of 1836, and purchased and settled upon a portion of Sec. 17, in Monroe Township, where they continued to reside as long as they lived. Joseph Henry died Aug. 9, 1845; his wife died in February, 1863; they are both buried in Mt. Zion Cemetery in this township. They were both members of the Seceder Church for many years during their sojourn in Belmont Co. After their removal to this county, there being no church of their choice in their neighborhood, they never again united with any branch of the church. Samuel Henry was married to Rachel Marlow Feb. 21, 1843; she was a daughter of James and Mary Marlow, of Springfield Township, in this county; by this marriage he had five children, four of whom are yet living; they are named as follows: Mary Jane, Margaret Issabella, James Alexander, Norman Nicholas and Samuel Marlow. Mary Jane has been twice married; David Smith was the name of her first husband; he dying, she was recently married to Newton Hersh. Margaret Issabella married Emerick Bell; James Alexander, Ann Chew, and Samuel M., Mary Collins. Norman N. was accidentally drowned May 7, 1853, by falling head foremost into a post-hole; he was buried at Mt. Zion. Samuel Henry's first wife died March 12, 1854; she was buried in the Mt. Zion Cemetery. Mr. Henry was married to Miss Margaret Jane Major, of Belmont Co., Ohio, March 5, 1855; by this marriage he had two children, both daughters; the youngest died in infancy; the eldest, Mary Elizabeth, is attending the Haysville Seminary. The second wife of Mr. Henry departed this life July 27, 1857, and lies buried by the side of his first wife. Mr. Henry selected for his third companion Miss Mariah Chancey; they were united in marriage June 29, 1859; by this third wife he has become the father of three children, all sons, named Francis Lincoln, Jonathan Lorenzo and Ulysses Sherman. The first farm Samuel Henry owned is the south half of the southeast quarter of Sec. 17, in Monroe Township; he became the owner of this farm in 1843; he continued to reside thereon till the spring of 1863, when he sold it and purchased 120 acres of land in Sec. 21 of this township. He still continues to reside on this farm; since he became the owner thereof, he has made some valuable improvements thereon. In 1863, he built a large and commodious barn, and, in 1868, a neat and comfortable dwelling. His farm is quite fertile, and he endeavors to keep it so. It is well adapted to the raising of all kinds of grain, and its owner seldom fails to have good crops when any of his neighbors have. Mr. Henry's last wife is a daughter of William and Mary Chancey, late of Springfield; her mother's maiden name was Gordon; her father attained to the advanced age of 93 years; her mother was 70 years old when she died; her father was buried at New Alexandria, Jefferson Co., Ohio, and her mother in the Fairview graveyard, Troy Township, in this county. Mr. Henry's facilities for obtaining an education, when a boy, were quite limited; but, being possessed of a taste for useful reading and a very retentive memory, he has succeeded in storing his mind with a vast amount of useful knowledge. Mr. Henry and wife are active members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Lucas. In their dispositions they are kind, social and friendly, ever ready to bestow a kindness upon a neighbor, or to lend a helping hand in cases of sickness or genuine distress.

HERZOG, JOHN, stonemason, Newville. He was born in Sutzfeldt, Baden, Germany, May 19, 1827; his father's name was Christian Herzog, and his mother's maiden name Christiana Leaman; he was obliged to attend school from the time he was 6 years old till he was nearly 15; at the age of 15, he was apprenticed to a stonemason to learn that trade; he served an apprenticeship of three years; he has followed this business from that day to the present. In 1828, there was a revolt or insurrection in the State of Baden, brought about or occasioned by the nobility undertaking to infringe upon the rights of the common people. Young Herzog joined the insurgents, and participated in several battles that ensued. Emperor William was compelled send an army to quell the rebellion. The insurgents were defeated, and young Herzog, acting upon the maxim that "discretion is the better part of valor," made his escape to free America. He was in his 23d year when he landed in the United States; he worked about eighteen months at his trade in the State of New York; he then spent some time in traveling, visiting some of the principal cities in this country; he came to Richland Co. in 1853; he worked for some considerable length of time for the P., F. W. & C. R. R. Co., building the stone work for the bridges in this county. He was married to Miss Maria Smith, of Lucas, Dec. 4, 1856; Miss Smith was born Jan. 23, 1837; her father's name was Peter Smith; her mother's maiden name Catharine Stofle; her parents were Hessians by birth; they emigrated from Germany to this country about 1832; they are both dead, and buried in the Catholic cemetery at Sand Ridge, in Hanover Township, Ashland Co.; she is one of a large family of children, all of whom are dead save herself and a brother named Henry; she had a brother named Peter, who was killed in battle, while serving his country in the war of the rebellion. In the year 1866, Mr. Herzog purchased a farm, consisting of 80 acres of land, in the northeastern part of Monroe Township, being the farm formerly owned by an old pioneer named Jacob Williams; he made a very good selection in the choice of a farm; it is what farmers term a second bottom; it is highly fertile and well adapted to all kinds of farm purposes; after purchasing this farm, Mr. Herzog still continued to work at his trade when he had work to do, spending his leisure time in improving and cultivating his farm; when he was engaged in working at his trade, his wife carried on the farming. John and Maria Herzog are the parents of thirteen children, eleven of whom are living, two having died in infancy. Christian F., their eldest, was born Aug 27, 1857; Catharine C., Feb. 23, 1859; Martha J., Dec. 7, 1860; Irena M., Oct. 11, 1862; John L., Sept.

9, 1864; Henry W., Aug. 12, 1866; Mary F., June 17, 1868; Julia A., April 1, 1870; John A., Dec. 9, 1872; Simon M., Oct. 17, 1874, and Margaret E., Feb. 12, 1877. Mr. Herzog has been a member of Sturges Lodge, No. 365, I. O. O. F., for a number of years. He is an honest, upright, hard-working man; he is a good mechanic and a kind and obliging neighbor.

HOGAN, MICHAEL, (deceased). The subject of this biography was born in County Clare, Ireland, in 1793; when 11 years old, he was sent to an academy at Enis, where he remained three years; he then entered Trinity College at Dublin, where he graduated at the age of 17; he graduated in medicine and surgery at the same place, but, not liking the profession, and considering it a very responsible business, he never practiced. He was married, in 1817, to Ann Oakley, a lady of rare qualities of heart and mind; she possessed indomitable energy and perseverance, which rendered her a fit companion for one who chose to brave the hardships and privations of the New World; her thorough education and refined manners well fitted her to discharge all the duties which devolved upon her as a wife and mother. The estate of Michael Hogan's father being confiscated to the English crown, he saw the home of his ancestors pass into the hands of strangers; this was gall to his proud spirit, and he turned his back upon his dearly loved Erin and sought a home and fortune in the wilds of free America; he, with his wife, landed in New York in 1818; they resided in that city five years, Mr. Hogan during that time serving as an officer in the regular army of the United States; from there they emigrated to Ohio; they settled, in the first place, in Newville, Richland Co., where Mr. Hogan engaged for a short time in the mercantile business; he was the owner and proprietor of the first store in Worthington Township; he had, however, determined on being a farmer; he, therefore, continued in the mercantile business till an opportunity presented itself for him to purchase a farm adapted to his taste; he purchased the northwest quarter of Sec. 35 in Monroe Township; he moved his family on his farm in 1827; he made a very good selection in the choice of his farm, it being one of the best farms in this region of country; he continued to reside on this farm as long as he lived. Mr. and Mrs. Hogan were the parents of a large family of children, all daughters but one; the daughters were educated principally by their father and mother, and were trained to habits of industry, economy, morality and strict integrity. Misses Ann and Theresa are now the owners of the old homestead. Edmund Thomas, the son, was educated for the bar, and, while yet a young man, emigrated to California, where he has risen to eminence in his profession; he has been honored with a seat on the judicial bench for many years. Maj. Hogan, the subject of this sketch, retained even in old age his stately military bearing; his fondness for literary pursuits did not in the least abate with years. He was one of the best classical scholars in the country; it was a favorite pastime for him to sit and read his much-loved Greek and Latin authors; he seemed to derive great pleasure from their perusal; it was his custom, also, to read the history of the principal nations of Europe in their own language. Mr. and Mrs. Hogan were active and consistent members of the church from their youth, though they belonged to different branches. They were noted for their hospitality, generosity and Christian charity; no mendicant was ever known to leave their door unalmsed. Mr. Hogan lost his amiable, accomplished and much-loved consort July 21, 1864. He departed this life Jan. 17, 1875; both father and mother, with their deceased children, are buried in the Catholic Cemetery in the city of Mansfield.

HUSTON, A. H., farmer; P. O. Hastings; he was born in this township March 7, 1831; his father, John Huston, was born in Bedford Co., Penn., Oct. 22, 1787; while he was quite young, his parents emigrated to Maryland; here he spent his boyhood, on a farm. After he had attained his majority, he learned the milling business; he worked in one mill nine years, during which time he did not lose a single day. When Gen. Baggs burned Washington City, he was drafted for sixty days' service. He came to Richland Co. in 1818, and entered the southeast quarter of Sec. 29, in this township; he erected a cabin and moved on this farm Nov. 29, 1820; for several years he lived alone in the woods, part of the time boarding with John Douglas, but most of the time he kept "bachelor's hall" and boarded himself. During this time, he was busy clearing away the dense forest from a portion of his farm, in order to prepare it for cultivation. In 1826, he was married to Miss Mary Hersh, by whom he has had ten children, one of whom died in infancy; all the rest attained to the years of manhood and womanhood; two of his sons lost their lives while engaged in the service of their country during the late war of the rebellion. Mr. Huston died Aug. 30, 1854, aged 66 years. The early life of A. H. Huston was spent with his father in clearing away the forest and tilling the ground; from his childhood, he was trained to habits of industry, economy, morality and strict integrity; he was also permitted to attend school a small portion of the time, and succeeded, by close application, in obtaining a pretty fair knowledge of the common English branches. At the age of 19, he commenced working at the carpenter trade, to which occupation he applied himself so earnestly and perseveringly that, at the expiration of two years, he became quite expert at the business. About this time, at the solicitation of a young man of his neighborhood, he determined on making a trip to the State of Indiana. The parting advice of his parents on that occasion is still fresh in his memory, though many years have elapsed since the day it was delivered: "Be honest, industrious, and keep out of bad company." With this injunction still ringing in his ears, he left the home of his childhood, and, in company with his friend, he started on foot to seek his fortune in what was then considered the "Far West." Soon after his return, Mr. Huston met with an accident by which he came very near losing his life, and from the effects of which he has not entirely recovered to this day. While assisting in raising a barn on the farm of Jacob Culler, by some mismanagement on the part of the foreman and others, a heavy beam was allowed to fall to the ground, after being raised, and Mr. Huston was caught under it; one foot was so badly injured as to partially disable him. He continued, however, to work at his trade for some years afterward, when he quit the trade and engaged in farming. Jan. 6, 1859, he was married to Mary Jane Mitchell. For the next seven years, farming was his chief employment, but whenever work was slack on the farm, he would devote his spare time to working at his trade. His mother died April 10, 1867; one of his sisters, having married some years previous, now offered to sell him her interest in the "old homestead;" he concluded to make the purchase, and try the experiment of going in debt; by being "diligent in business" he soon removed this indebtedness. About this time, his father-in-law made a division of his property, by which transaction Mr. Huston became the possessor of considerable means; and, another sister desiring to sell her interest in the home farm, he bought hers also, and thus became the owner of 75 acres of land; a good part of his farm was in timber. His knowledge of carpentry was of great service to him; he laid his own plans and did the greater part of the work in the construction of his buildings. Mr. Huston is now enjoying the fruit of his labors, and is amply prepared to pass his declining years with ease and comfort; in his habits he is strictly temperate; "Moderation in all things" is his motto.

LEITER, JACOB, farmer; P. O. Lucas; was born in Washington Co., Md., June 2, 1824. His father's name was David Leiter; his mother's maiden name, Nancy Bell; they were both of German descent; they removed to Ohio in the fall of 1837, and purchased a farm containing 140 acres, off the northeast corner of Sec. 7, in Monroe Township; they subsequently purchased 85 acres adjoining this farm; he made many valuable and lasting improvements on this farm; he afterward purchased 80 acres in Sec. 8 of this township. David Leiter was married twice; by his first wife he had but one child, who is the principal subject of this biographical sketch. Mrs. Nancy Leiter died about the year 1824, and was buried near Leitersburg, Washington Co., Md., in the family graveyard on her father's farm; she was, for many years, a zealous member of the Lutheran Church. Mr. Leiter married, for his second wife, Miss Mary Bell, of his native county; by this marriage he had twelve children, six sons and six daughters, named as follows: Louis, Susan, Barbary, Ann, Mary, Catharine, Malinda, David, John, Samuel and William; one child died in infancy; Lewis, Barbary and Mary are dead. David Leiter was a zealous Christian; he was an active member of the Lutheran Church for a great many years; he contributed largely of his means for religious and charitable purposes; he departed this life in May, 1876; he was buried in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery near Lucas. Jacob Leiter remained with his father, assisting him in improving and cultivating his farm, till July 2, 1848, when he was united in marriage to Miss Susan Ross, third daughter of Natcher and Sophia Ross. The first farm that Jacob Leiter owned contained 40 acres, and was a part of the southwest quarter of Sec. 16, in Monroe Township; he resided on this farm about eighteen months, when he sold it and rented of his father the farm on which Lewis Leiter's widow now resides; he remained on this farm four years; from there he removed to Mifflin Township, where he purchased a farm consisting of 100 acres, on which he resided three years, when he sold it and purchased the farm entered by his father-in-law, Natcher Ross, where he still continues to reside; this farm is highly fertile and productive, and well adapted to all kinds of farming purposes; it is well watered and well timbered and well improved; since it came into the possession of Mr. Leiter, he has improved the dwelling, built a large and commodious barn, as also other outbuildings; his fences are in good repair and everything in good shape on the premises. Mr. and Mrs. Leiter are the parents of nine children, three sons and six daughters, named as follows: Clara Ann, born Oct. 25, 1849; Mary Alice, Dec. 5, 1851; Sophia, May 15, 1853; Nancy Jane, Oct. 31, 1855; Natcher Ross, July 21, 1858; David Samuel, March 27, 1861; Elmer Ellsworth, Oct. 22, 1863; Mary Frances, Jan. 13, 1867, and Dora, Sept. 24, 1872; Mary Alice died June 30, 1852, and was buried at Mt. Zion. Jacob Leiter united with the Evangelical Lutheran Church when about 18 years old, and has been an active and zealous member of that branch of the Christian Church from that time to the present; his wife has been a member of the same church for many years; they have the reputation of being very liberal in their contributions for religious and benevolent purposes; Mr. Leiter has also been an active member of Monroe Lodge, No. 224, I. O. O. F., for about eighteen years; he has attained to the highest position in his lodge; he is also an active member of the Burns Encampment. He and his good wife are members of Morning Star Lodge, No. 36, Daughters of Rebecca. They are much esteemed for their many virtues.

McBRIDE, ALEXANDER, farmer, was born in Hampshire Co., Va., April 11, 1798. His father's name was Thomas McBride; his mother's maiden name was Mary McVicker. His father was a native of Ireland; he emigrated to the United States about the year 1785. His mother was of Scotch-Irish descent. Thomas McBride, after his marriage, resided in Hampshire Co., Va., till the spring of 1817. In the spring of 1816, he came to Ohio, and entered the south half of Sec. 15, in Monroe Township. The spring following, he removed his family to this farm, which at that time was a dense forest. He continued to reside on this farm as long as he lived. He raised a family of seven children, five sons and two daughters; their names in the order of their births are Alexander, Agnes, John, Archibald, Duncan, Wilson and Mary; Alexander and John are the sole survivors of this family. Thomas McBride and wife were active members of the United Presbyterian Church for many years, and were much respected for their many virtues. He departed this life April 27, 1824, and was the first one buried in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery, near Lucas; he died in his 54th year. His wife died May 8, 1833, and was buried beside her husband; she was 60 years old when she died. Thomas McBride's brother, Alexander, who died May 15, 1825, in his 77th year, is interred in the same cemetery. The subject of this sketch being the eldest of his father's family, the burden of hard labor fell upon his shoulders. Being brought up in the woods, he withstood the dangers, and endured all the hardships, toils and privations incident to pioneer life. He had but few facilities for acquiring knowledge, but he made good use of those few. He remained with his father, assisting him in improving and cultivating his farm, till the 17th of March, 1825, when he was united in marriage to Miss Ruth J., eldest daughter of Benjamin and Susannah Barnes, of Washington Township. Her mother's maiden name was Jones. Her parents were both born in Maryland, and were of English descent; they came to the county at a very early day, and settled in Washington Township, on the farm now owned by the heirs of John Ford. Shortly after his marriage, Mr. McBride purchased 50 acres of land in Sec. 7, Monroe Township, which farm he improved and cultivated, and, by dint of hard labor and rigid economy on the part of himself and wife, he was enabled to add piece by piece, until he had a farm consisting of 100 acres. He subsequently purchased 103 acres, situated in Secs. 7 and 19 of this township. Mr. and Mrs. McBride are the parents of eleven children. The names of those who survived the period of infancy are as follows: Jackson, Thomas, Benjamin Franklin, Union, Susan M., John A., James J. and Wilson S. Jackson was married to Susan Douglas, by whom he had four children, two sons and two daughters. He was a teacher and farmer by occupation. He died April 28, 1859, and was buried with the honors of Odd Fellowship, in their cemetery near Lucas. John A. died Aug. 13, 1841, and is buried in the same cemetery. Thomas is one of the most prominent lawyers in this county. Mr. McBride, in his younger days, was a man of great energy, as also a man of more than ordinary intelligence. He took a very active part in the improvements that were then being made in his township and county. He was one of the leading men of that early day. He held the office of Justice of the Peace for nine years in his township. He also held several other township offices for several terms. At that early day, Uncle Sam was not as wealthy as he subsequently became. The coffers of the Township Treasurer of Monroe were empty. Orders had accumulated in the hands of her officers, and there was no prospect of their being paid. A number of these officers (among whom was Mr. McBride) assembled at Lucas one day, to consult over this financial question. It was proposed by one of their number that John Iler should load their orders in his gun and shoot them away. This was accordingly done, and in this summary manner the township was freed from debt. Mr. McBride served as Township Clerk for eight years, and found his own stationery, without any compensation whatever. The ninth year he received a very inadequate remuneration for his services. He was a candidate the tenth year, but the office was then beginning to pay; he had competition, and was defeated. Mr. McBride united with the United Presbyterian Church at Mansfield, in the year 1841. He still retains his membership there, though of late years he has not been able to attend, owing to his advanced age, and the distance to be traveled. About twenty-five years ago, Mrs. McBride united with the Lutheran Church at Lucas. About the year 1870, Mr. McBride sold his real estate, and made a distribution of his property among his children, reserving a portion for the support of himself and wife during their declining years. From that time till the present, they have resided with their children. For the last seven years they have lived with their son-in-law, Samuel Barr. Mr. McBride hauled the poles to make a shed to cover the bricks that were used in building the first brick church in Mansfield. This was about 1821. His father subscribed $50 and his mother $10 to the building of this church. He signed the prospectus for the first paper printed in the county. It was called the Olive, and was published by Robert Crosthwart. It was first published about the close of the year 1818, or the first of the year 1819. It subsequently changed names and proprietors several times, and finally passed into the hands of John Y. Glesner, who christened it the Shield and Banner. Mr. McBride continued to take this paper till the year 1871. There is, perhaps, no man living in the county to-day, who came as early as Mr. McBride, who had attained man's estate when he came here. He and his good wife have shared the joys and sorrows of married life for a period of fifty-five years. He is 82 years old, quite hard of hearing, but intelligent for a man of his years. She is 73 years old, hale and hearty, and in full possession of her mental faculties.

McDANEL, JOHN R., farmer; P. O. Newville. William McDanel, father of John R., was born in Middlesex Co., Del., Oct. 23, 1771; his parents, Archibald and Rachel McDanel, were of Scotch-Irish descent. William McDanel was married to Miss Mary Richey, daughter of Abraham and Elizabeth Richey, of his native county, Jan. 27, 1795; Miss Richey was born March 18, 1777, in the same county; her parents were of German descent. William McDanel removed to Beaver Co., Penn., with his family, in 1806, and from there to Richland Co. in 1826; he entered the southeast quarter of Sec. 26 in Monroe Township; he labored very hard to clear and improve this farm, as it was covered with a very heavy growth of timber; when he purchased it, Mr. McDanel was possessed of a strong constitution and iron nerve, and was naturally well-fitted to brave the dangers and endure the toils and privations of pioneer life. He and his wife were both active members of the Baptist Church for many years; they were quite liberal in their contributions for religious and benevolent purposes; they were the parents of eleven children, six sons and five daughters; the sons were named Archabald, Abrahām, James, William, Simon and John R.; names of daughters, Phœbe, Elizabeth, Margaret, Mary and Rachel. William McDanel departed this life May 26, 1854; his widow died Aug. 20, 1861; they were both interred in the family graveyard, on the farm. John R., youngest son of William and Mary McDanel, was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Sept. 8, 1821; he was but 5 years old when his parents brought him to this county; he has lived on the farm his father entered from that time to the present: owing to the limited facilities for obtaining knowledge at that early day, his education was somewhat limited; he learned to read and write, however, and acquired a tolerably fair knowledge of arithmetic; as soon as he was old enough to be of any service to his father, he was kept from school the greater part of the time to assist on the farm. Jan. 22, 1848, he was united in marriage to Miss Dorothy, daughter of Henry and Catharine Keller; Miss Keller was born in Stark Co., Ohio, Dec. 10, 1824; her parents were of German descent; they were natives of Pennsylvania; they removed to Stark Co., Ohio, in 1814, and from there to Richland in 1824, where they continued to reside as long as they lived. Mrs. Keller died in May, 1862, and Mr. Keller in September, 1865; they were buried in the St. Johns Cemetery, in Monroe Township. John R. and Dorothy McDanel are the parents of nine children—five sons and four daughters, two of whom died infants; the names of those who survived the period of infancy are as follows: Henry Jasper, Mary, William Wallace, Thomas Benton, Simon Judson, Harriet Ann and Jane Catharine; three of the above-named children—Henry J., Harriet A. and Catharine J. are living; the others are all dead; four of the deceased are buried in the Newville graveyard, and two in the graveyard on the farm. By the decease of his parents, Mr. McDanel became the owner of all the old homestead, save forty acres that his father had previously sold to his brother Simon; he purchased the interests of his brothers and sisters, and thus became the owner of the farm; it is a very good farm, well watered, well timbered, and well adapted both to farming and grazing purposes. Mr. McDanel has but one brother and one sister now living—Simon McDanel, who resides in Worthington Township, and Rachel, who lives with her brother, John R. Mrs. Dorothy McDanel departed this life Aug. 27, 1878; she, as also her husband, had united with the Baptist Church many years previous.

MARKS, JACOB, cabinet-maker; P. O. Lucas; son of Abram and Sallie Marks; was born in Montgomery Township, Ashland Co., Aug. 27, 1828. His father was born in Westmorelond Co., Penn.; his mother's maiden name was Sallie Young; they are the parents of twelve children, six sons and six daughters; Abram Marks emigrated to Richland Co., with his family, during the year 1824; he purchased 80 acres of land, a part of Sec. 16, in Monroe Township; this farm being nearly all in timber, by dint of hard labor on his part it was cleared and otherwise improved; in 1860, he purchased what is now known as the Rummel Mill property, situated a short distance east of the village of Lucas, where he spent the remainder of his days; he died in 1863; his widow still lives, near Lucas. Jacob Marks and his brotherr Pete are twins; they are the eldest children of their parents; Jacob followed the peaceful pursuits of a farmer till he arrived at the age of 22 years, when he turned his attention to the mechanical arts; he learned the trade of cabinet-maker with John Heck, of Newville, and has continued to follow that business from that time to the present; he has the reputation of being a very good workman; he has recently increased his facilities for the manufacture of almost all kinds of furniture; he keeps constantly on hand a large and well-selected supply of coffins and other articles in the line of an undertaker; as an undertaker, he has had an experience of twenty-six years, during which time he has averaged not less than thirty coffins per year. In his disposition, Mr. Marks is kind and obliging; he is temperate in his habits, and honest and upright in his dealings with his fellowmen. In 1855, Mr. Marks was united in marriage to a young lady of an adjacent township; by this marriage he became the father of six children, two sons and four daughters. In politics, he has been a lifelong Democrat. In 1879, he was united in marriage to Miss Reno Robison, eldest daughter of the late William Robison, of Monroe Township; Miss Robison was born in Virginia; her parents removed to Richland Co. about the year 1848; she is a lady much respected for her many virtues.

MANNER, JACOB, farmer; P. O. Perryville; he was born in Berkeley Co., Va., Dec. 9, 1804. His father's name was Joseph Manner; his mother's maiden name was Catharine Mentzer; his parents were both of German descent; they were born in Franklin Co., Penn.; his parents came to Ohio in the spring of 1827, and purchased a farm, then in Richland, now in Green Township, Ashland Co.; there was an old grist-mill on this farm at the time, which he and his son Jacob remodeled and repaired, and which they ran for many years. Joseph Manner continued to reside here as long as he lived; he died in April, 1840, aged about 78 years; his wife survived him a short time; they were both interred in the Perryville Cemetery. Jacob Manner was married to Miss Jenette Calhoun, second daughter of Noble and Sarah Calhoun, of Monroe Township, Aug. 8, 1833; her mother's maiden name was Taylor; her parents were both of Irish descent; they settled in Monroe Township in the spring of 1831, and continued to reside on the same farm till the day of their death. Mr. Manner lived on his father's farm a few months after his marriage; he then purchased the farm now owned by John Darling, of Monroe Township, where he resided about three years; he then sold his farm and removed to Newville; he purchased the only brick building in the place and engaged in the mercantile business; he subsequently purchased the frame dwelling now owned by H. D. Ruth in that place; he continued in the mercantile business about four months, when he traded his house and lot and stock of goods for a farm of 190 acres on the Black Fork, to which he removed with his family; he stayed on this farm three or four years, during which time some one of the family was almost continually shaking with the ague; from there he removed to Wooster, where he kept a hotel about a year; he then sold his hotel, and, removing to Worthington Township, purchased the farm now owned by Jacob Cate; he subsequently purchased an interest in the Herring Mills; this last investment was an unfortunate one, as he lost by the operation about $2,500; he continued to reside on the Cate farm for several years after leaving the mill; about the year 1852, he sold this farm and purchased the farm formerly owned by his father-in-law in Monroe Township; this farm contained 260 acres; he subsequently purchased 140 acres adjoining the old homestead; he now owns a farm containing 400 acres of as choice land as can be found in the county. Mr. Manner was one of the first men in this section of country to engage in dealing in live stock; before the days of railroads in the county, he drove his stock through to the Eastern markets; he most generally drove them over the mountains; after taking his first drove through and selling them, he found, after deducting expenses, that he had cleared just $8; he claims to be the first man to ship stock by railroad from this county; he was extensively engaged in this business for a great many years. His sons, of late years, have taken the burden of the business off his hands; they are among the most extensive live-stock dealers in the county; they are regarded as honest and upright dealers. Mr. Manner has built three mills in his time and remodeled and repaired a fourth; two of the mills he built and the one he repaired are within the original boundaries of this county; the other is in Summit Co. Mr. Manner and wife are the parents of eight children, four sons and four daughters; two of these died in infancy; the names of those who survived this period are as follows: Noble C., Sarah E., Emanuel M., Francis M., Margaret J. and Susan A.; Sarah E. married James Sheehy; she died March 7, 1879, leaving one child, a daughter named Jenette; she is buried at St. Johns, in Monroe Township. Mrs. Manner died Nov. 5, 1879; she is buried at Perryville. About the year 1829, Mr. Manner built a flat-boat, and, loading it with flour, started down the Black Fork from Perryville en route for New Orleans; in passing over the milldam at Loudonville, his boat made a turn, and he, striking one of the top logs of the dam, shoved it off and passed over it in safety; he passed over several other dams on his route; passed over the falls of the Ohio at Louisville in safety and landed at New Albany, Ind., where he unloaded his cargo; about the year 1830, he loaded a keel-boat with flour and once more started from Perryville down the Black Fork; when he arrived opposite the Loudonville Mills, his vessel sank; he succeeded in raising it, however, but lost by the accident a considerable portion of his cargo; he was obliged to unload and repack it, removing the damaged part; when this was done, he reloaded his vessel and once more started on his way; he ran down to Coshocton, where he transferred his cargo to a canal-boat, and it was carried to New York by way of Cleveland; he and his assistants then shoved the boat back to Loudonville, and thus ended his experience in boating; after this, he hauled his flour to Sandusky City in wagons and shipped from there to different places

MECKLEM, SAMUEL, farmer; P. O. Perryville; was born in Beaver Co., Penn., near the town of New Brighton, April 8, 1817. His mother's maiden name was Rachel McDanel; he had seven brothers and four sisters; three brothers and three sisters, living. His father and mother died several years ago; they are buried in Providence Grave-yard, North Sweetly Township, Beaver Co., Penn. Samuel Mecklem was married to Miss Mary Gillespie, eldest daughter of Thomas and Mary Gillespie, of his native township, about A. D. 1842; after their marriage they remained in Beaver Co. about nineteen years, during which time Mr. Mecklem farmed for different individuals for a share of the crops; at the end of this time they removed to Richland Co., and settled in Monroe Township, where he farmed for his brother-in-law, Joseph Wolf, and others, till about 1868, when he purchased 20 acres off the west side of the northeast quarter of Sec. 26, in Monroe Township, where he has since resided. He has very materially improved this farm, and now has it in a highly cultivated state. Samuel and Mary Mecklem are the parents of ten children—Eliza Jane, born Thursday, April 5, 1843; Mary E., born Tuesday, Sept. 3, 1844; Thomas G., born Saturday, Aug. 8, 1846; Rachel, born Aug. 8, 1848; Sarah, born May 3, 1852; Lydda, born May 19, 1855; Samuel T., born July 4, 1856; Elzena, born Feb. 5, 1861, and John E., born May 24, 1863. Of all this large family but one is left to comfort and console his parents during their declining years; consumption has carried them off one by one. Eliza Jane died May 17, 1854, and was buried at Providence, Beaver Co., Penn. Mary E. married Eli Pitts, of Lucas, June 6, 1869, by whom she had one child, who died in infancy; she died Sept. 5, 1870, she is buried in the Odd Fellow's Cemetery, near Lucas. Thomas G. was married to Mary Horner Sept. 21, 1876, by whom he one child, a daughter, named Elzena; he died June 6, 1879. Rachel married William Ridenour Oct, 18, 1866, died Dec. 27, 1875; Sarah died Feb. 17, 1874; Lydda died in January, 1873; Elzena died Aug. 11, 1870. All of the above-named children lie buried side by side in the St. Johns Cemetery, in Monroe Township, save Eliza Jane. John E. is their only surviving child, and he is of frail constitution and delicate health. Mr. Mecklem has been a member of the Baptist Church for many years. As neighbors, Mr. Mecklem and wife are kind, social and friendly; ever ready to lend a helping hand in cases of sickness or genuine distress.

MOWERS, ISAAC, pioneer farmer; was born in Berkeley Co., Va., Aug. 8, 1802; his father's name was Henry Mowers, and his mother's maiden name Sarah Rapp; his parents were both of German descent; they removed to Richland Co. in 1822. The subject of this sketch was then about 20 years old; they settled in Green Township, on the farm now owned by William Jones; they continued to reside on this farm as long as they lived. He died at the age of 70, and his wife at the age of 65 years; they are buried in the Shambaugh graveyard. They were active members of the Lutheran Church more than forty years. Isaac Mowers was married to Miss Mariah, only daughter of John and Sarah Kayler, Dec. 29, 1836; her mother's maiden name was Brown. Miss Kayler was born in Cuping, Germany, Oct. 27, 1815; her parents emigrated to the United States when she was but 2 years old; they settled near New Lancaster, Ohio, where they remained four years. About the year 1821, they removed to Richland Co. and entered a quarter-section of land in the northeast part of Monroe Township. They continued to reside on this farm as long as they lived. He died at the age of 57 and his wife at the age of 52 years; he is buried in the Shambaugh graveyard, and his wife in the Mt. Zion Cemetery; they were both active members of the Lutheran Church for many years. Isaac Mowers and wife moved into his father's house after his marriage, and continued to reside with them as long as his parents lived, being a period of eleven years from the date of his marriage. He then purchased the "old homestead," where he remained another year. He then sold it and purchased a quarter-section in the northeast part of Monroe Township. He continued to reside on this farm, cultivating and improving it as long as he lived; he died July 31, 1877; his death was the result of injuries received by his horse becoming frightened at a train of cars and running away with him. Isaac Mowers and wife are the parents of nine children, five sons and four daughters, named in the order of their births—Henry H., born July 31, 1838; John H., March 22, 1840; Sarah A., Dec. 26, 1841; Martin, Sept. 6, 1843; Elizabeth

C., Feb. 4, 1845; Julia A., Sept. 9, 1846; George W., Aug. 18, 1850; Mary L., July 21, 1854, and William M., Sept. 1, 1856. Henry married Malinda Culler; John, Martha Sackman; Sarah, Herman Fox; Martin L., Nancy J. Kayler; Elizabeth C., M. L. Culler; Julia A., Christian Ernsberger; George W., Martha Lee; Mary L., M. C. Culler; William M., Loisa Dorne. Mr. Mowers and wife united with the Lutheran Church early in life; he continued to be an active and zealous member as long as he lived; his widow still retains her membership at Mt. Zion. They were both active workers in the church, and contributed largely of their means toward religious and benevolent enterprises. Mrs. Mowers is hale and hearty for a woman of her years, and is in the full possession of her mental faculties.

MOWRY, SAMUEL, farmer; P. O. Perryville. Samuel Mowry was born in Chambersburg, Penn., on the 12th March, 1825; his father's name was Jacob Mowry; his mother's maiden name was Catharine Teeter; his father came to Ohio about 1822, and purchased a farm in the southwestern part of Monroe Township, it being the farm now occupied by his son Adam; with the assistance of his sons, he cleared, cultivated and improved this farm; he continued to reside on the same farm till the day of his death, which occurred about 1850; he was buried at the Hersh, now the Mt. Olive, graveyard; his wife survived him about twenty years; she was buried by his side; they were the parents of fifteen children, two of whom died in infancy; nine sons and four daughters grew to be men and women; they were named as follows: John, Eliza, Philip, Jacob, Catharine, Daniel, Joseph, Samuel, Christina, Sarah, Adam, Mathias and Solomon. John, Eliza and Solomon are dead; all the others live within the original boundaries of Richland Co. Samuel, their sixth son and the subject of this sketch, remained with his father and assisted him on the farm until he attained his majority; during this time, he was permitted to attend the district school a few months during the year; his facilities for acquiring an education were quite limited; he, however, succeeded in learning to read and write, and in acquiring a tolerably fair knowledge of arithmetic; soon after he was 21 years old, he went to Crestline and engaged to learn the cabinet trade with one Michael Hefflefinger, with whom he served an apprenticeship of three years; he worked as journeyman in this business for about two years; he then quit this business, thinking it injured his health; he then took up the carpenter trade, and worked at this business for about fifteen years; he was regarded by his patrons as a good mechanic, and seldom failed to give entire satisfaction to his employers. For the last twenty years, he has been engaged in farming; his farm consists of 55 acres, and is a part of the farm entered by the old pioneer David Crawford; it is highly fertile, well improved, well watered and well timbered, and there is a thriving young orchard thereon. Mr. Mowry was married to Miss Elizabeth Smith, second daughter of Henry J. and Elizabeth Smith, of Worthington Township, on the 19th day of February, 1856, by the Rev. W. A. G. Emmerson, Pastor of the Lutheran Church at St. Johns, in Monroe Township; Samuel and Elizabeth Mowry are the parents of nine children, five sons and four daughters—Henry Jacob, born Aug. 27, 1857; William Franklin, Sept. 1, 1869; Frederick Walter, June 10, 1863; Olive Alverta, Feb. 1, 1866; Laura Ann, Aug. 28, 1868; Harmon Lewis, April 16, 1871; Allen Harlin, May 25, 1873, and Emeline May, Aug. 12, 1876. Mr. Mowry joined the Lutheran Church at St. Johns, about twenty-two years ago; his wife united with the German Reformed Church when she was about 16 years old; she joined the Lutheran Church at the same time her husband did; they have been active and zealous members of the church ever since they became members thereof; in proportion to their means they have, perhaps, contributed as liberally as any others toward the building of churches and the support of the Gospel. They have many warm friends, and few, if any, enemies.

ROSS, NATCHER (deceased); he was born near Harrisburg, Penn., Feb. 4, 1790; his father's name was John Ross, and his mother's maiden name Charlotte Natcher; his father was of Irish and German descent, and his mother of German. Natcher Ross was married to Sophia Arnold, daughter of Benjamin and Mary A. Arnold, of Harrison Co., Ohio; her parents were of Scotch-Irish descent; Mr. Ross came to Richland Co. Dec. 1, 1819, and entered the northwest quarter of Sec. 4, in Monroe Township; in the fall of 1821, he removed to this farm with his family; they made this trip in wagons from Harrison Co.; his farm, at this time, was an unbroken forest; the ground was covered with snow when they arrived at their destination; Mr. Ross split boards, out of which he built a rude shanty, in which they resided till he was able to hew timbers and put up a hewed-log house; in this house they resided for many years; Mr. Cassan bought it, some years ago, and removed it to Lucas, where it still stands, and is to this day a very comfortable dwelling. He raised a large family of sons and daughters, the names of whom are given in the order of their births: William, Rezin Arnold, Mary Ann, Susan, Rachel, John, James and Nancy Jane; William, Rezin Arnold and John are dead; William died in California, and is buried near Frazer Rivers; Resin Arnold died in Indiana, and is buried at Warsaw; John died Feb. 23, 1849, and was buried at Mount Zion, in this township. Mr. Ross continued to reside on the same farm from the time he came to the county till a few years prior to his decease, when he sold it to his son-in-law, Jacob Leiter, and removed to Lucas; Mr. Leiter still owns this farm. Mrs. Ross died Sept. 20, 1848, and Mr. Ross March 3, 1864; they are both buried at Mount Zion.

PETERSON, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. Perryville. Among the enterprising and energetic farmers of Monroe Township, none are entitled to a more prominent place in her history than the subject of this biography. His father was one of the pioneers of the township, and he, too, may be justly termed a pioneer, for he was either born in this township or was brought here by his parents at a very early day. His father was a farmer by occupation and the owner of a large farm in the fertile valley of the Black Fork. When he became the owner of this farm, it was in a state of nature, wild and uncultivated; but, by persevering energy and patient toil on the part of himself and sons, a great transformation was soon made, and the frowning forest gave place to fruitful fields and flowery meadows. The subject of this sketch remained with his father, assisting the cultivation and improvement of his farm, till some time after he had attained to his majority, when he was united in marriage to a very estimable young lady of his neighborhood, Miss Esther, eldest daughter of Solomon and Rachel Gladen. By persevering industry, fine financiering and careful management, Mr. Peterson has been very successful in the acquisition of this world's goods; he owns two excellent farms in the northeastern part of Monroe Township. He has erected, at a great cost, a magnificent dwelling on one of these farms. He has also built commodious barns on both farms. His farms are highly fertile and productive, and he cultivates them in a very creditable manner. Mr. Peterson and wife have raised and educated an interesting family of children. One of their sons, named Erasmus, a very promising young man, contracted a disease which rendered him a cripple for life; he died in 1879, and was buried at Perryville.

REA, WILLIAM (deceased). Was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., June 23, 1772; he subsequently removed to Bedford Co., Penn , and about 1816, came to Richland Co., Ohio, and entered the north half of the southeast quarter of Sec. 35, in Monroe Township; he came to the county in company with Jacob Williams, Joseph Friend and William Fergueson; Mr. Williams entered the south half of the same half-section, Mr. Fergueson entered the south half of Sec. 34, in the same township; Mr. Friend entered the farm now owned by Alexander Freeman, on the eastern boundary of Worthington Township, near the present site of the town of Newville. Mr. Rea, upon his arrival in this Western wild, went to work at once and cleared a small tract and erected a cabin on his farm; he kept bachelor's hall for a few years, when he rented his cabin to one William Wilson, a son-in-law of Jacob Williams; Mr. Wilson lived here a few years, assisting Mr. Rea in clearing and cultivating his farm. About 1821, Mr. Rea was united in marriage to Miss Eliza Swendal; they were married at the residence of John Kinton, in Worthington Township, by Rev. William Johnson, of Mansfield; Mrs. Rea was born in the County of Down, Ireland, about twenty miles from Belfast, Dec. 25, 1792; her father's name was Richard Swendal; her mother's maiden name was Susan Fox; Mrs. Rea came to the United States when about 25 years old; she had a brother living in this country, but she did not know where to find him; she, without money or friends, set about seeking employment at once, which she soon was able to find: she worked for some time in the city of New York, and in various other places; in a few years, by the assistance of a friend, she was enabled to find her brother; when she did find him, however, she did not recognize him, and it was with no little difficulty that he was enabled to convince her of his identity: she subsequently came with her brother to Richland Co., and got married as before stated. Mr. Rea took his wife immediately with him to his cabin and went to housekeeping in the primitive style of those days; they were the parents of four children—Martha Ann, born Aug. 9, 1826, died March 23, 1842; Mary Jane, born Sept. 18, 1828; Eliza, born Dec. 10, 1830, died in the spring of 1839; Sarah, born Jan. 2, 1832, died in the spring of 1839; all of whom were buried in the Pine Run graveyard. Mr. Rea united with the United Presbyterian Church early in life, and was an active and consistent member thereof as long as he lived; he was very strict in the observance of the ordinances of religion; Mrs. Rea united with the same church some years before her marriage and still retains her membership therein. William Rea died Oct. 2, 1846, and was buried in Pine Run graveyard. Mrs. Rea has resided with her daughter, Mrs. Darling, for several years; she is now 87 years old; though somewhat enfeebled by age, she still retains full possession of her mental faculties.

REED, JOSEPH (deceased), was born in Cross Creek Township, Washington Co., Penn., June 5, 1798. His father's name was Nicholas Reed; his mother's maiden name was Elizabeth Fulton. He was of Scotch-Irish descent. Hewas married to Miss Nancy Miller March 12, 1829. He came to Richland Co. soon after his marriage, and bought the southwest quarter of Sec. 23, in Monroe Township, which he cleared, cultivated and improved, and on which he continued to reside till the day of his death. Mr. Reed had seven children by his first wife —Elizabeth, born Jan. 31, 1830, married to Jacob Wigton, Jan. 2, 1851, by Rev. William Hughes; George, born Oct. 3, 1831, married to Miss Mary E. Wigton, Sept. 15, 1855, by Rev. Richard Gaily; Nicholas, born Feb. 9, 1834, died March 25, 1834; Mary Jane, born July 18, 1835, died Aug. 9, 1835; Eliza, born Aug. 12, 1836, died Sept. 8, 1836; Hugh F., born Aug. 13, 1837, married to Miss Amanda Wolf, Feb. 17, 1859, by Abraham Baughman, Esq.; Mary S., born Sept. 23, 1839, died Aug. 23, 1842. Mrs. Nancy Reed departed this life December 22, 1844. Mr. Reed remained a widower until Dec. 29, 1853, when he was united in marriage to Miss Clancy E. Crawford, fifth daughter of George and Mary Crawford, of Perryville, Ohio. They were united in marriage by Rev. William Hughes, Pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Perryville. By his second wife, Mr. Reed has had seven children, five sons and two daughters—Nancy Jane, born June 27, 1855, married to James A. Coe, in 1876, by Rev. Eddy; Emma Melsina, born Feb. 14, 1857; Martha Abigal, Jan. 16, 1859; Joseph Melancthon, Aug. 21, 1860; James Marion, Aug. 21, 1860; Alma, Oct. 14, 1863; Mary, Oct. 12, 1866. Mr. Reed died respected by all who knew him, Oct. 3, 1874. He had six brothers—James, Samuel, Hugh, William, John and Robert; and two sisters—Eliza and Jane. At the death of her husband, the management of the farm and household devolved upon his widow. She has been a consistent member of the Presbyterian Church for about twenty-five years.

RINEHART, I. S., miller; P. O. Ada, Hardin Co., Ohio. Jacob Rinehart, great-grandfather of I. S. Rinehard, came to this country about the year 1736; he attained to the great age of nearly 100 years; his son, Conrad Rinehart, was born in Maryland, A. D. 1785; he became a member of the Evangelical Association at an early age, and remained an active and zealous member of that branch of the Christian Church up to the time of his decease; he was married to Miss Eve Bealy, of his native State; he and his wife were among the original members of the Evangelical Association in this country; he officiated for some years in the capacity of a local preacher; he died Oct. 29, 1871; he left a widow, 12 children, 80 grandchildren, 124 great-grandchildren, and 2 great-great-grandchildren; he was aged 86 years 8 months and 15 days; his widow died in June, 1873, aged 88 years 9 months and 2 days. John B. Rinehart, father of I. S. Rinehart, was born in York Co., Penn., June 2, 1813; he was married to Miss Mary Stump, eldest daughter of Adam and Rebecca Stump, of his native county, in the fall of 1834; Miss Stump was born in York Co., Penn., Aug. 13, 1812. Mr. Rinehart and wife came to Ohio, in company with his father-in-law and family, in the spring of 1830; they settled in Columbiana Co., where they remained till the fall of 1838, when they removed to Richland Co., and settled near Woodbury, where they continued to reside for several years; they subsequently removed to Knox Co., where they lived a few years; about the year 1864, they removed to Worthington Township, in this county. He and his brother, C. B. Rinehart, purchased the Rock Point Mills, near Newville, which they ran with very good success many years; they subsequently purchased about 60 acres of land adjoining this mill property; in the fall of 1874, J. B. Rinehart sold the mill property and removed to Ada, Hardin Co., Ohio, and purchased an interest in a steam-mill at that place; he here met with reverses of fortune, which nearly stripped him of all he had acquired by many years of toil; he continued to reside in Ada till the day of his death, Aug. 13, 1879. Mr. Rinehart was a man of strong constitution and iron nerve; few men of his day could compete with him in feats of strength; he was a kind, social and obliging man. His widow still resides in Ada, and is much esteemed by all who know her for her many virtues; she has been an active Christian for many years. Adam Stump, the father of Mrs. J. B. Rinehart, was born in York Co., Penn., Sept. 15, 1786; he was married, Dec. 24, 1811, to Miss Rebecca, daughter of Peter and Elizabeth Castelow; her father was a native of Ireland, and her mother was a German by birth; her mother's maiden name was Baker; Mr. Stump removed to Ohio, as hereinbefore stated: he was a miller by occupation; he resided in this county many years prior to his death; he and his good wife were zealous members of the Lutheran Church; she was a member of this branch of the Christian Church about sixty and he about twenty-six years; he died March 4, 1872; she died Sept. 1, 1879; they lie side by side in the St. Johns Cemetery; they lived to see descendants of the third generation; he died at the age of 85 years 5 months and 19 days; she was aged 86 years 2 months and 15 days. J. B. and Mary Rinehart were the parents of ten children, five sons and five daughters; five of these are dead, two sons and three daughters—one is buried at Millwood, in Knox Co.; three at Frederick, in the same county, and one at Woodbury, in Morrow Co.; the names of the living are Eliza, Israel S., Lawson, Persa and Melvin, all of whom are married and have families. I. S. Rinehart was born in a mill at Ankneytown, Knox Co., Ohio, Sept. 1, 1838; his father was attending this mill at the time, and, there being no dwelling convenient, the family lived in a part of the mill; it can be said of him, that he was born and raised in a mill. As soon as he was old enough to be of any service, his father taught him the trade, and he has followed that business from that day to this. He has the reputation of being a very good miller. He was united in marriage to Miss Louisa, daughter of Solomon and —— Painter, then of Woodbury, now of Newville. Miss Painter was born in Columbiana Co. Oct. 30, 1839; her mother is a daughter of Fredrick and Nancy Shenfield; Mr. and Mrs. Senfield were both Pennsylvanians by birth, and were of Irish and German descent. Solomon Painter is a son of Adam and Mary Painter; his parents were of German descent, but natives of Pennsylvania; he is also a Pennsylvanian by birth, but has lived in Ohio the greater part of his life. He is a physician by profession; he was a soldier in the war of the rebellion. By his first marriage, Mr. Rinehart had two children, both daughters, and named Lauretta and Myrtie. Their mother died Dec. 15, 1866, and was buried in the St. Johns Cemetery in Monroe Township. I. S. Rinehart resided in Newville and in other parts of this county for several years. He was married to Miss Margaret A., second daughter of John and Harriet Cole, April 10, 1868. The ceremony was performed by John Wigton, Esq., of Newville, Ohio. Miss Cole was born in August, 1843; her father was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn.; he was of German descent; was twice married; the name of his first wife was Harriet Clark; she was of English descent. By this marriage he had four children, one son and three daughters—William Henry, Mary Elizabeth, Margaret Ann and Nancy Mariah. Nancy M. died when about 4 years old, and was buried at Bryan, Williams Co., Ohio; the others are married and have families. Their mother died about the year 1852, and was buried at Bryan, Ohio. His second wife was the widow of Mr. Williamson Lowry, of Monroe Township; her maiden name was Williams; she was the youngest daughter of Jacob and Mary Williams, a pioneer family of Monroe Township; by this marriage he had four children—Harriet Irena, Sarah Lauretta, Nancy Olive and Allura Mabel; Harriet Irena died young. Mr. Cole died in August, 1874, and is buried at Ada, Ohio. By his second wife, Mr. Rinehart has three children—Kitty Mabel, John Cloud and an infant son.

SCHRACK, DAVID (deceased); was born in Center Co., Penn.; was of Scotch-English descent, and a farmer by occupation. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Mogle; she was of German descent. Mr. Schrack removed to Richland Co. in 1819. He purchased of Thomas Pope a quarter-section of land in the southeast part of Monroe Township, and moved thereon with his family. He subsequently entered the quarter-section adjoining his first purchase on the north; on the Pope farm there were about 4 acres cleared and a rude cabin built thereon. Mr. Schrack and family lived in this cabin till they were able to put up a more comfortable and commodious house. His farm was covered with a dense and heavy growth of timber, and required a vast amount of hard labor to prepare his lands for cultivation, and, though the soil was rich and productive, his grounds were stony and hilly; but by hard labor and perseverance on the part of himself and sons these difficulties were all overcome. Mr. Schrack lived to see a massive brick dwelling occupying the place of the rude log cabin. He lived to see the dense forest give place to fruitful fields. He lived to rear a large family of children, and to become comparatively wealthy. Mr. Schrack was a "mighty hunter," and many were the deer, wild turkeys and other wild animals that fell beneath his unerring aim. He also shot quite a number of bears when he first came to the county. He was among the Indians a great deal, with whom he was always on friendly terms. Mr. Schrack and wife are the parents of fourteen children, three sons and eleven daughters; three of these died in infancy; the sons were named Charles, John and David; the daughters —Sarah, Catharine, Mary, Margaret, Elizabeth, Rachel, Sophia, Susan and Ann. Sarah married Abraham Hersh, and raised a family; she is now dead. Catharine married Aaron Baughman, by whom she had a large family of sons and daughters; she and her husband are both living in Monroe Township. Mary married Pierce Jeffrey; has a family, and resides in Indiana. Margaret married R. Y. Gladden, of her native township, raised a family; they now reside in Perryville, Ashland Co. Elizabeth M. married Benjamin M. Morrison; Rachel married William Armentrout. Sophia married J. J. Douglass, of her native township. Susan married William Wigton, and resides in this township. Ann married John S. McDanel, and resides in Indiana.

SCHRACK, CHARLES, farmer; P. O. Newville. The subject of this sketch was born in Monroe Township June 9, 1820; he is the eldest son of David and Elizabeth Schrack; he was born and brought up in the woods, and inured from infancy to all the privations incident to pioneer life; being the eldest of the boys, the burden of the hard labor fell upon his shoulders. As soon as he was old enough to pick brush or handle a hoe, he was put to work by his father; and from that time till the day he left the parental roof, he was obliged to lead a life of labor and almost incessant toil. Mr. Schrack had but little time or opportunity, while young, to obtain an education, and yet he succeeded in obtaining as much knowledge of the common English branches as many young people of the present day. He remained with his father, assisting him in clearing and improving his farm, until he was about 27 years old. He was married, Dec. 30, 1847, to Barbary Hammon, fifth daughter of George and Catharine Hammon, of Worthington Township. Miss Hammon was born May 1, 1820. Mr. and Mrs. Shrack are the parents of five children, three sons and two daughters; the eldest died in infancy; Marion Hammon Schrack was born Sept. 26, 1851—married to Miss Hattie E. Graber; Harriet Ellen, born Sept. 11, 1854, died in infancy; Elizabeth Catharine, born April 13, 1856, married Hiram Sheehy; Clark Douglas, born April 12, 1859. After their marriage, they lived on his father's farm one year, when they removed to a farm of 185 acres, for which he paid the sum of $7,000. At the time Mr. Schrack purchased this farm, it was very much run down and out of repair. The buildings were old and dilapidated; the fences very much in need of repair; a large portion of the best land was overgrown with briers and brushes, and the fertility of the soil nearly destroyed by being over-worked, and other causes. Mr. Schrack, with the assistance of his wife and sons, has has transformed it into quite a different looking farm. A thrifty young orchard of fruit-bearing trees may be seen on his farm. The sterility of the soil has been changed to great fertility, and to-day Mr. Schrack has one of the most productive farms in this region of country. He received nothing from his father's estate, notwithstanding all the hard labor he did on the farm. Mr. Schrack donated the ground on which the Pleasant Valley Lutheran Church is built, as also the grounds for the churchyard and cemetery. He also contributed liberally of his means toward the building of this and other churches, and for the relief of the distressed, and the support of the Gospel. A few years ago, he united with the Disciple Church. His wife is a member of the Lutheran Church.

SCHRACK, JOHN, second son of David and Elizabeth Schrack, was born and reared in Monroe Township. The days of his boyhood and early manhood were spent in assisting his father in clearing and cultivating his farm. Some considerable time after he had attained his majority, he conceived the idea of becoming a lawyer. His education was at that time quite limited; but, being possessed of great energy, by dint of hard study and close application this difficulty was soon overcome. After attending school till he acquired a pretty thorough education, he commenced the study of the law. He pursued his studies with such diligence and energy, that in a short time he was admitted to the bar, and entered upon the practice of the law. He suceeeded admirably well in his profession, and soon ranked among the foremost young lawyers of the county. He served as Prosecuting Attorney two terms, and while engaged in his profession had a very lucrative practice. On the death of his father, he became the owner of the "old homestead," and a few years afterward he forsook his profession for the peaceful pursuits of the farm. He still continues to practice in Justice's courts, but his chief pursuit is farming.

STOUT, HIRAM, farmer; P. O. Lucas. He was born in Sussex Co., N. J., on the 16th day of January, 1819; he was the eldest son of James and Eve Stout; he came to Richland Co. with his parents when quite young, and endured with them the privations incident to pioneer life; as young as he was at that time, he had the honor of grubbing the first grub that was taken out on his father's farm; his facilities for obtaining an education were quite limited. but notwithstanding all these difficulties, the subject of this history succeeded, by industry and application, in acquiring a fair knowledge of the common English branches. Mr. Stout, in his younger days, was very fond of hunting—in fact, he was a regular "Nimrod;" when he was about 15 years old, he heard his dogs one morning about daybreak barking fiercely in the woods at some distance from the house, and he at once shouldered his rifle and started to see what they had treed, thinking it was a raccoon or opossum, or some other small animal; when he arrived at the spot, he saw some large animal, with glittering eyes, seated on the branch of a tree; he took deliberate aim and fired, when down came a huge panther and fell dead at his feet, shot through the brain; this was the only panther known to have been killed in this region.

Mr. Stout, in his younger days, was rather fond of the company of the young ladies. He loved, with them, "to trip the light fantastic toe," yet nevertheless he never suffered himself to be entrapped by their "winsome wiles and winning smiles;" but, as a matter of choice, has remained a bachelor to this day, living with his aged mother, and taking care of and providing for her during her declining years. Mr. Stout is the owner of the old homestead, and has it under a good state of cultivation; his farm is very productive, and well adapted to the raising of all kinds of grain.

STOUT, JAMES (deceased). Was born in Sussex Co., N. J., April 15, 1790. His parents came to the United States from the lowlands of Holland. He was married to Miss Eve Hupfer, fifth daughter of Jacob and Margaret Hupfer, of Cumberland Co., Penn., Oct. 27, 1815, by whom he had three children, two sons and one daughter. Mary Ann, the eldest child, was born July 17, 1816; she was married to Edward Sheehy; she died Dec. 19, 1858, and was buried at Perryville. Hiram, born Jan. 16, 1819; Cornelius, Dec. 16, 1822; died May 21, 1862; buried at Perryville. Cornelius was married to Miss Mariah Owens, by whom he had a large family of children. Mr. and Mrs. Stout came to Richland Co. in the fall of 1826, and settled near Petersburg, in Mifflin Township, where they remained about two years, when they removed to Monroe Township and bought a farm about one and a half miles south of the present site of Lucas, where they remained about one year, when Mr. Stout entered the west half of the southwest quarter of Sec. 22, cleared off a spot, erected a cabin and moved his family there; the country, at that time, was still wild; few settlements had been made; a few bears were still to be seen in the woods, and wildcats were plenty; deer and wild turkeys were still numerous. Mr. Stout was fond of hunting, and many deer and wild turkeys fell victims to his unerring aim. By industry and perseverance, the wilderness was converted into a "fruitful field," and made to "blossom as the rose." Mrs. Stout narrates that before she came to Ohio, she learned to shoot, in order that she might be able to defend herself, if necessary, against attacks of the Indians. She says that, whenever she wanted a mess of squirrels or other small game, when the men were busy, she would shoulder a rifle and go to the woods, and soon succeed in getting all she wanted. James Stout still continued to reside on this same farm till the day of his death, Aug. 30, 1864; he was buried at Perryville. His widow still resides on the old farm with her son Hiram; she is healthy and intelligent for a woman of her years; she was 84 years old on Christmas Day of 1879.

SWIGART, J. L., wagon-maker, Lucas. Michael Swigart, the father of J. L. Swigart, was born in Lancaster Co., Ohio., April 7, 1800; he was of German descent. He was married to Miss Anna Byers, of Hagerstown, Md., on the 3d day of July, 1825; they removed to Stark Co., Ohio, in 1827, and thence to Richland in 1832, and purchased 120 acres off the northwest corner of Sec. 27 in Monroe Township; he subsequently purchased 80 acres, adjoining the 120 on the north; at the time he came in possession of this farm, it was in an uncultivated state, the greater part of it being encumbered with a heavy growth of timber and underbrush, but, by persevering industry on the part of himself and sons, the wilderness was transformed into fruitful fields. Michael Swigart and wife are the parents of eight children, four sons and four daughters—Leonard, the eldest, was born Feb. 11, 1826. He was married to Miss Margaret Schrack Sept. 14, 1844; he served as Commissioner of this county two terms; he now resides in Dickinson Co., Kan. Anna Margaret, their eldest daughter, was born Oct. 2, 1827; she was married to Josiah Switzer Jan. 21, 1847; she died Jan. 4, 1857, and was buried in the Pleasant Valley Cemetery. Elizabeth, their second daughter, was born March 27, 1830; she was married to George W. Chew, who died some years ago, leaving her with a family of small children to maintain. George J., their second son, was born Dec. 21, 1831; he was married to Miss Susan Smith; he died April 26, 1870, and was buried in the Odd Fellows' cemetery near Lucas. Mary A. B., their third daughter, was born Dec. 15, 1834, and died March 10, 1840; she was buried at Pleasant Valley. Elenora, their youngest daughter, was born April 6, 1836; she died April 12, 1840, and was buried at Pleasant Valley. Peter A., their third son, was born Jan. 1, 1838; he married Margaret Andrews; he served as a private in Co. B, 120th O. V. I., during the war of the rebellion; he contracted a disease while in the army which caused his death; he died Sept. 27, 1865. Their youngest son, Jesse L., was born as hereinbefore stated. Michael Swigart was a Drum Major in the war of 1812; he continued to reside on the farm he purchased when he came to the township till within a few years of the date of his decease; his wife died April 10, 1867; she was of a kind, social and obliging disposition, and much respected by all who knew her; he, too, was jovial and kind-hearted, ever ready to confer a favor on his neighbor when in his power to do so; he died July 16, 1876; he and his wife lie side by side in the Pleasant Valley Cemetery. Jesse L. Swigart was married to Miss Rebecca Jane Henry, third daughter of David and Jane Henry, of his native township, April 26, 1863; his wife's parents were of German descent; her mother's maiden name was Donelson. Jesse L. and Rebecca J. Swigart are the parents of three children—Orange, Olive and Cora. He was a soldier in the late war; was a private in Co. A, McLaughlin's squadron of cavalry; he served till the close of the war; he was with Sherman in his celebrated march from Atlanta to the sea. He and his wife are active members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church at Lucas; he has for many years been an active member of Monroe Lodge, No. 224, I. O. O. F., and has attained to the highest position in his lodge; he is also a member of Burns Encampment, No. 131; he has been Treasurer of his township four or five years.

SWIGART, L. M., farmer; P. O. Mansfield; his father, John Swigart, was born near Chambersburg, Penn., in 1793; he came to Ohio with his father, who settled on a farm near Canton, Stark Co., now used as the county infirmary. He served as a soldier during the war of 1812, and fought under Perry at the battle of Mackinaw; when the war was ended, he came to Richland Co., and located in Orange Township, now in Ashland Co., where he taught school for some time. Among his pupils at that time was the lady he afterward married. In 1821, he removed to Monroe Township, where he built a cabin; in 1826, he built a two-story, hewed-log house, that yet stands, the timber of which is in a good condition. The farm is now owned by Mr. Cailor. In 1831, he sold his place, and bought 320 acres south of Lucas, on Switzer's Run, now called Pleasant Valley. While clearing his land, he and his family occupied a schoolhouse as a residence; he soon after built a house, which then stood where the present residence of George Swigart now is; in 1835, he built a saw-mill; in 1860, he moved to Lucas, where he died at the age of 76 years. He was married, in 1816, to Miss Barbara Young, who survives him, and is now a resident of Lucas; she was born in Washington Co., Penn., in 1796, and came with her parents to Ohio in 1804, who first settled on a farm near New Lisbon, Ohio, and, in 1814, removed to Orange Township, Richland Co., now in Ashland Co. Mrs. Swigart remembers meeting Fulton, the inventor, and seeing the first steamboat on the Ohio River. Mr. L. M. Swigart was born Dec. 31, 1827, in Monroe Township; when of sufficient age, he assisted in clearing land, farming, and hauling lumber to Mansfield, mostly with an ox team; when 27 years of age, having accumulated $500, he bought a farm one mile north of Lucas, which he soon after, with some assistance, paid for in full. He lived on this farm ten years, when he sold it, and bought the Young farm of 240 acres, five miles east of Mansfield, and afterward bought the Leiter farm; he erected the beautiful business house on Main street, Mansfield, known as the L. M. Swigart Block, in 1879. He was married to Miss Jane Balliet Feb. 12, 1854, by whom he has had five children—Martha A., born Jan. 19, 1855; Clora E., Dec. 2, 1856; Sarah J., April 13, 1859; John B., April 7, 1864; Mary E., Nov. 21, 1871. Mr. Swigart remembers seeing the first train of cars that came into Mansfield, and recalls many of the early incidents in the county's history.

SWIGART, GEORGE W., farmer; P. O. Hastings. Was born in Richland Co., A. D. 1820; his father, John Swigart, was born in Franklin Co., Penn., A. D. 1793; when he arrived at the age of 13 years, his father, John Swigart, Sr., removed to Ohio, and settled two miles north of Canton, in Stark Co.; he remained with his father till the beginning of the war of 1812, when he enlisted in the service of the United States, and served his country faithfully during the war; after the close of the war, he came to Orange Township, in Richland Co., and taught a three-months' term of school. At the close of his school, he married Miss Barbary Young; Miss Young was born in Washington Co., Penn., in 1797, and removed with her father, Jacob Young, to Richland Co. in 1814; she was a member of a family of twelve children. Mr. Swigart removed to Monroe Township in 1821, and settled on the southwest quarter of Sec. 11; he moved in the morning in the woods, without any shelter but the trees, and in the evening he had a cabin 16x16 feet erected and one-half of the roof on: he moved his family into this cabin the same evening; again, in 1832, he removed into the woods, on the farm now owned and occupied by his son, George W., it being a part of Sec. 29 in this township; he continued to reside on this farm, cultivating and improving it, till within a few years of his death, when he removed to Lucas; he was of German and his wife of German and English descent. In his political faith, he was a Democrat of the "Old Hickory" persuasion; he held some offices of honor and trust in the township; he raised a large family of sons and daughters, several of whom still reside in the county, and are wealthy and enterprising citizens; Mr. Swigart died in 1872; his wife is yet living. George W. Swigart was reared in the woods, and inured to hardships and toil from his boyhood; he acquired such education as was to be obtained in the common schools of that day; he found but little time, however, for literary pursuits, but the time allotted him for that purpose was carefully improved, so that he acquired what may be termed a fair common-school education; being possessed of a well-balanced brain, and very retentive memory, and extremely fond of reading useful books, he has succeeded in storing his mind with a large fund of useful information. Mr. Swigart married Miss Margaret Rider, daughter of Henry Rider, an early settler of this township; Miss Rider was born in 1824; they are the parents of three children, one son and two daughters; Mr. Swigart has worked some at stone masoning and carpentering, but the greater part of his life has been devoted to the peaceful pursuits of the husbandman, in which business he has succeeded admirably well; of late years he has paid considerable attention to politics; he, like his father, is a Democrat of the Jacksonian school, "Retrenchment and Reform" are his favorite themes; he says, "that for thirty years he has advocated measures, that if adopted would greatly decrease the burden of taxation, and afford a much greater protection to society." For the benefit of future generations, he desires that his theory or plan be inserted in his biography. In the first place, he would reduce the number of the members in the Legislature one-half, and the salary of the remaining members one-half. He claims that when this is done, we would have a better class of legislators, as political tricksters could not, under such circumstances, afford to buy an office for which they were in nowise qualified. He claims that we now have too much legislation; and that too much is more injurious to society than not enough. In the second place he would make some improvement in county affairs. He would dispense with the office of Probate Judge, as also of a grand jury. He would have the Clerk of the Court attend to the civil duties that are now performed by the Probate Judge. He would have Justices of the Peace and Mayors of cities and incorporate villages, to perform the duties now assigned to grand jurors, and would also give them exclusive jurisdiction in minor criminal cases. Lastly, he recommends sure and severe punishment to criminals. Mr. Swigart has in his possession a cast-iron kettle which holds twenty gallons, that his grandfather bought in Steubenville in 1808, which has remained in the family ever since that period. Mr. Swigart says in regard to roadmaking in his township, "Our first roads were made by cutting paths through the forest, and piling logs and brush in the muddy places. In the course of time, the plow and scraper began to be used. Now we use in addition to these the cart and wagon to haul gravel." At the instigation and through the influence and assistance of Mr. Swigart and other enterprising men of Monroe Township, many valuable and lasting public improvements have been made in the township within the last five years, more especially in roads and schoolhouses.

SWITZER, JOSIAH, farmer; P. O. Lucas. Was born on the north bank of the Rocky Fork, in Mifflin Township, on the 21st day of July, 1825; his father was of German and his mother of Scotch-Irish descent; his father's name was Frederick Switzer and his mother's maiden name Issabella Steel. His mother was born in Franklin Co., Penn., on the 19th day of March, 1800; she emigrated to Richland Co., Ohio, in 1815, and settled on the north bank of the Rocky Fork, in Mifflin Township, on the farm now owned by Catharine Ross, where she resided for about two years; from there she removed to Monroe Township, on the farm now owned by the Widow Glenn, where she resided a short time, when she removed to the farm now owned by her son, Hiram Switzer; she continued to reside on this farm till the day of her death, which event took place on the 5th day of July, 1862; she was the mother of four sons—William, born Jan. 12, 1821; Josiah, born as hereinbefore stated; Andrew Jackson, Jan. 29, 1830, and Hiram, July 12, 1834. She was a woman of more than ordinary intelligence, being passionately fond of reading and possessed of a very retentive memory; she was better informed on many subjects of interest and importance than most women; she was an ultra Democrat of the "Old Hickory" persuasion, and few men of her township were a match for her in argument. Josiah, her second son and the subject of this biography, remained with his mother and was subject to her instructions and control until he attained his majority. As soon as he was old enough to work, his mother found employment for him; from the time he was 15 till the date of his marriage, he was obliged to labor very hard; his work consisted principally in grubbing, chopping and making rails through the day, while many nights were spent in coon hunting and in fishing; his facilities for obtaining an education were quite limited; however, by close application to his studies during the limited time allotted to him for that purpose, he has been able to acquire a pretty thorough knowledge of the common English branches. Mr. Switzer was united by marriage to Miss Margaret Swigart, eldest daughter of Michael and Nancy Swigart, on the 21st day of January, 1847; his wife's parents were early settlers of Monroe Township and were much respected by their acquaintances; by this marriage Mr. Switzer had six sons, of whom only two are now living—George J., his eldest son, was born Oct. 31, 1847; Michael T., his second son, Dec. 9, 1850. Mr. Switzer farmed on shares for different persons from the time of his marriage till about 1862, when he purchased the farm he now owns, being the east half of the southeast quarter of Sec. 21, in Monroe Township. His first wife died Jan. 6, 1857, and was buried at the Hersh (now called the Mt. Olive) Cemetery, but was subsequently taken up and removed to the Pleasant Valley Cemetery. Mr. Switzer married, for his second wife Miss Mary M. Cromer, youngest daughter of Daniel Cromer; they were married April 19, 1857; by this marriage, Mr. Switzer had ten children, four sons and six daughters, all living but one. He is emphatically a self-made man. He was initiated into the mysteries of Odd Fellowship and became a member of Monroe Lodge, No. 224, located at Lucas, Ohio, about twenty-six years ago, and has been an active member of the lodge and a zealous member of the order ever since; he has attained to the highest position in the lodge. He is also one of the charter members of the Burns Encampment, located at Lucas, Ohio; has been an active member thereof ever since it was instituted, and has been the recipient of the highest honors the encampment can confer. He has also had the honor of serving in the capacity of District Deputy Grand Master for one term. Mr. Switzer has repeatedly been elected to fill some of the most important offices of his township, in which capacities he gave entire satisfaction. He united with the Lutheran Church at Pleasant Valley about two years ago, during which time he has been an active and zealous member. Monroe Lodge and the village of Lucas are to some considerable extent indebted to Mr. Switzer and a few more of like energy for the beautiful hall and schoolhouse they now possess. He has, for many years, taken a deep interest in township affairs, and more especially in the cause of education; he was, for many years, School Director of his district under the old law, and was present at the first meeting of the Board of Education under the new law, and helped to organize the same; he presided at the meetings of said board the last five years, during the last two years of which time, four elegant and commodious brick schoolhouses have been erected in the township. Mr. Switzer's farm is a very productive one, well adapted to the raising of all kinds of grain; his dwelling is a large and commodious brick building, and he has a good frame bank barn; his farm is well watered and well timbered, and he has a thriving young orchard thereon.

SNYDER, DANIEL, pioneer farmer; P. O. Mansfield; familiarly known as the "old pioneer;" was born in Washington Co., Penn., March 8, 1808; his father's name was Peter Snyder; his mother's maiden name was Drusilla Metcalf; his father was of German and his mother of Scotch English descent; his parents came to Richland Co. in the fall of 1815; his father bought the northeast quarter of Sec. 6, in Mifflin Township, on which he settled with his family, consisting of his wife and four children, three sons and one daughter; their farm was a dense forest, with the exception of a few acres that the timber had been chopped off; there was a small cabin thereon, built in the primitive style of those early days; it was destitute of floor and without doors, windows or chimney; an Indian trail ran near the cabin of the Snyders; the children, among whom was Daniel, would run and hide when they saw an Indian approaching, having, no doubt, frequently heard thrilling stories of their cruelty to the whites; if they happened to notice the trepidation of the children, one of their number would almost invariably say: "We no hurt; we no hurt." The Snyders were not in the least discouraged by the gloomy prospect before them; both father and sons went to work in earnest to prepare their ground for cultivation; from morning till night the sound of their axes was heard, and the mighty monarchs of the forest soon gave way before their sturdy strokes; in the course of a few years, a great transformation had taken place. Peter Snyder and wife are the parents of seven children, five sons and two daughters, named, in the order of their births, Vatchel, Peter, Daniel M., Rachel, Catharine, Thomas and John C.: Vatchel married Mary Hull, and raised a family of four children, one son and three daughters; Peter married Elizabeth Good and raised a family of seven children, four sons and three daughters; he died about the year 1837. Rachel married John Hull, and raised a family; she and her husband reside in Washington Township. Catharine married Robert Henry; they raised a large family of children; she died five or six years ago. John C. married Christina Swarts; they have a family of children, and reside in Mifflin Township. At the time of his decease, Peter Snyder was the owner of 207 acres of land in Mifflin Township. He and his wife were both members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and, like a large majority of the pioneers of our county, they were kind, hospitable and generous; he died about the year 1860; his wife survived him about ten years; they are buried in the Emmanuel Graveyard, in Mifflin Township. Daniel M. Snyder was married to Miss Margaret Good, fourth daughter of John and Fanny Good, March 24, 1830; Miss Good was born April 8, 1811, in Cumberland Co., Penn.; her mother's maiden name was Rinehart; her parents came to this county in 1822; they settled in Mifflin Township; they lived on a rented farm about twelve years, when they purchased a farm in Washington Township, where they continued to reside as long as they lived; they are buried in Piper's graveyard, in Washington Township. Soon after his marriage, Mr. Snyder rented a farm north of Mansfield and moved thereon: he resided on this farm about seven years; he then purchased 86 acres in Sec. 6, Monroe Township; at the time he purchased this farm, it was unimproved; a great deal of hard labor was required to prepare it for cultivation; but Mr. Snyder was equal to the emergency; he built a cabin, into which he moved his family, and, by persevering industry, in the course of a few years, he had his farm in a good state of culture; Mr. Snyder has added piece by piece to this farm till he now owns 187 acres of choice land; being reared in the woods, Mr. Snyder and wife have been inured from childhood to toil, hardship and privation; their labors, however, have not been unrewarded, for now, in their declining years, they are prepared to give over their toils and cares, and pass their remaining days in ease and comfort; they are the parents of ten children, seven sons and three daughters. Samuel R., born Oct. 15, 1838, married to Drusilla Hull, by whom he had seven children; he died May 17, 1865, and lies buried in Emmanuel Graveyard. Peter, born Oct. 27, 1832, married Sarah Hamilton, by whom he has three children living and two dead. Drusilla, born Dec. 7, 1837, married Joseph Richey, by whom she had two children, a son and a daughter; her first husband dying, she married for her second husband William Pike, by whom she had three children; they reside in Huron Co., Ohio. John C., born June 27, 1837; married Esther Boals; have one child, and reside in Virginia City, Nev. Rachel J., born Nov. 27, 1839, married William McBride; have five children, and reside in California. Thomas, born June 3, 1843, married Mary Miller, by whom he has had three children; they reside in Ruggles Co., Kan. Catharine, born March 3, 1845, married David H. Bell, reside in Madison Township, and have two children. William H., born Feb. 10, 1850, died in Virginia City, Nev., Nov. 20, 1875, and is buried there. Franklin P., born June 26, 1852, married Amanda Ross, by whom he has had three children; he lives in a part of his father's house. Daniel is one of the leading men of his township; he is a Democrat of the "Old Hickory" persuasion; he has held many offices of trust in his township, which positions he filled with credit; he served as Commissioner of this county for one term, but, through political trickery, was defeated on being a candidate for a second term; he discharged the duties of this responsible office to the satisfaction of nearly all concerned. Mr. Snyder has been a member of the Masonic Fraternity about twenty years; he and his good wife have been members of the Evangelical Lutheran Church many years; they are not only hearers of the Word, but doers, as the needy and distressed of their neighborhood will testify.

TUCKER, DAVID. He was born in Merrimack Co., N. H., June 15, 1798; his father, John Tucker, was of Irish descent, and his mother, whose maiden name was Elizabeth Lucas, was of Scotch-Irish descent; Mr. Tucker came to Richland Co. in the fall of 1819, and entered the northeast quarter of Sec. 19, in Monroe Township; also the east half of the northwest quarter of Sec. 21, in the same township; also, one half-quarter where the village of Lucas now stands; he remained in this county seven years, during which time he labored hard at clearing and cultivating his farm; he erected a cabin on the northeast quarter of Sec. 19, where he continued to reside during the seven years he remained in the county; but three families resided in this part of the township at that time. Mr. Tucker was attacked by a pack of hungry wolves, one night while returning home from the cabin of his brother; he armed himself with a handspike, by means of which, together with loud and repeated yells as they approached him, he succeeded in keeping the beasts at bay, though they returned to the attack twice before they gave it up; at that time there were but few churches and schoolhouses in the county, but in nearly every settlement there was a still-house; whisky was considered an indispensable article in those days; at the expiration of seven years, Mr. Tucker returned to New Hampshire. He was married to Miss Clarissa, daughter of Jesse and Mary Patten, of his native county, Oct. 9, 1829; her parents were of Scotch-Irish descent. He remained in New Hampshire till the year 1849, when he removed with his family to his farm in this county, where he still continues to reside. He is the father of six children, three sons and three daughters—Norman, Alfred G., Clarissa L., David F. and Sophronia. Norman married Nancy Williams; Alfred, Elizabeth Slosher; Mary, James M. K. Reed; Clarissa L., single; David F. married Mary Welty. Mrs. Tucker died March 14, 1872, and was buried at the St. Johns Cemetery; she was a member of the Congregational Church for about thirty-five years, and was a woman of many rare qualities of heart and mind.

Mr. Tucker has been a member of the Masonic Fraternity about fifty years.

TUCKER, JOHN (deceased); he was born in the township of Hemmicker, county of Hillsboro, N. H., Dec. 20, 1792. His father's name was the same as his own, and his mother's maiden name Elizabeth Lucas He was of Scotch-Irish descent. His parents, however, were both American born. He was pretty thoroughly educated in his youth. In 1816, he left the parental roof, and started on foot to seek a home and fortune in the wilds of Indiana. Terre Haute, which he made his stopping place while in the West, at that time contained but one house besides the post. While he was there, a council was held for the purpose of purchasing the land from the Indians. Gens. Taylor and Posey, together with five prominent chiefs, constituted this council. After the council was concluded, the soldiers and Indians had a jubilee, in which firewater flowed freely, and the frolic terminated in a drunken row. Gen. Taylor had a leg fractured by being tripped while dancing with an Indian. While there, Mr. Tucker was almost the constant companion of Gen. Taylor. He remained at the fort until the General recovered, and was fit for duty, when he started on foot through the wilderness on his return. He returned by way of Cincinnati. While in that place, he was offered 10 acres of land, in what is now the heart of that city, for $100. In 1818, he came to Richland Co.; made the entire trip on foot. He entered the north half of Sec. 28, in Monroe Township; he erected a cabin thereon, and made some other improvements in the way of clearing, when he returned as he came to his native State. He was married, April 3, 1821, to Miss Mary Ward, of his native town. Soon after their marriage, they stowed their scanty wardrobe, with a few indispensable articles of household goods, in a one-horse wagon, and by this conveyance they made the trip through the wilderness, to their future home in this county. They finally reached their destination, and commenced housekeeping in primitive style. Mr. Tucker was both farmer and school teacher. He taught school in winter, and labored on his farm during the warm seasons. When he first came to the county, there were but few schools, and for a year or two he went to Stark Co. to teach. He taught in all, about sixty terms of school; was among the first teachers in the county, and was considered one of the best; he was also a skillful surveyor, and was engaged to some extent in that business; practiced medicine for some time, on the Thomsonian system, but seldom, if ever, did he charge for his services. Besides the feats of pedestrianism already spoken of, he took a trip to the Black Swamp region, east of Fort Wayne, in 1828. In 1838, he went to Kosciusko Co., Ind., where he purchased 1,600 acres of land, which he subsequently divided among his children. In 1846, he made a trip to Missouri on foot, to see that country, but soon became disgusted with it on account of the scarcity and bad quality of water. He continued to reside in Monroe Township till 1853, when he sold his farm to his son Aurelius, and removed to Kosciusko Co., Ind., where he continued to reside till the death of his wife, which took place March 11, 1876; he then made a division of his property, and spent the remainder of his days in visiting his children. He was the father of nine children, six sons and three daughters; has four sons and two daughters living—Aurelius, of Monroe Township; Mrs. F. Wager, of Cleveland; Regulus Tucker, of Tennessee; Horace and Albert Tucker, and Mrs. Vandermark, of Kosciusko Co., Ind. Mr. Tucker is entitled to credit for introducing good fruit into the county at an early day. He never could be prevailed upon to assist in butchering hogs, or any other animals; never fired a gun at a living creature, nor with a leaden missile in it. In his political views, he was an Old Line Whig, and subsequently a Republican. In his religion he was a firm believer in the Swedenborgian doctrine. He departed this life Dec. 25, 1879. His remains were sent to Palestine, Ind., and interred alongside of those of his wife.

TUCKER, D. F., farmer; P. O. Lucas; he was born in Merrimack Co., N. H., Nov. 2, 1841; he is the youngest son of David and Clarissa Tucker; when he was about 8 years old, his father removed with his family to the farm on which he now resides in Monroe Township; he was trained by his parents to excellent habits; his education was about as thorough as is usually acquired in the common schools; he remained with his father, assisting him in his farm work, till the 10th day of November, 1864, when he was married to Miss Mary, only daughter of Christian and Mary Welty; the marriage ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. L. Wiles, a Lutheran minister; since his marriage, Mr. Tucker has continued to reside on the old farm, and has been engaged chiefly in farming; he is an excellent farmer; during the last few years, he has dealt considerably in hogs, and has met with pretty fair success. He is now one of the Justices of the Peace of his township. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker are the parents of six children, three sons and three daughters—John Alfred, born Nov. 17, 1865; Norman Webster, May 29, 1867; Eceum Sophronia, June 25, 1869; Clinton Welty, Jan. 7, 1872; Clarissa Euphemia, April 3, 1874; Mary Etta, Sept. 11, 1877. Their mother was born Nov. 10, 1846; she was trained by her parents to habits of industry and economy.

TUCKER, AURELIUS, farmer; P.O. Lucas; he was born in Monroe Township, Sept. 11, 1826; he is the second son of John and Mary Tucker, pioneers of this township; he received, in his youth, a pretty thorough education in the common English branches, and was trained by his parents to habits of industry, sobriety and strict integrity; he assisted his father very materially in cultivating and improving his farm; while a young man, he taught several terms of school, and was well liked as a teacher. He was married to Miss Isabella Alexander, youngest daughter of Peter and Jane Alexander, of Worthington Township, April 5, 1849; his wife's parents came to Ohio while it was yet a Territory; they settled first in Belmont Co.; about the year 1827, they removed to Richland and bought a large farm, adjoining Newville on the northeast; here they continued to reside as long as they lived, and on this farm their remains lie buried in the family graveyard, on the hill east of the Clear Fork; Mr. Tucker farmed on shares with his father for a number of years. By industry and careful management on the part of himself and wife, he was enabled, in a few years, to amass considerable means. His father desiring to go further West, where he could purchase farms for all of his sons. sold his farm to Aurelius at a reduced price. He has very materially improved the appearance of this farm since he became the owner of it; a few years ago his dwelling was destroyed by fire; he subsequently erected a splendid mansion in its stead. Of late years, he has paid considerable attention to the raising of live stock; as a breeder of fine horses and cattle, he has few if any equals in the county; he has been awarded many of the highest prizes, both at the State and county fairs, on horses and cattle of his own raising; he has also been awarded prizes on grain, fruit and vegetables. His wife has been awarded prizes on flowers of her own culture. Mr. and Mrs. Tucker are the parents of five daughters—Laura, who died in infancy; Jane, who was married to John C. Ohler, Jan. 16, 1870; Lilly Margaret, who died when 11 months old; Emma J., married Dr. C. W. Skegs, of Lucas, Nov. 11, 1877; Alice, died when about 6 years old; their deceased children were all buried in the Schrack graveyard. Mr. Tucker and wife are active members of the Lutheran Church, at Pleasant Valley.

TUCKER, GOULD, farmer; P. O. Perryville; was born in Merrimack Co., N. H., Oct. 16, 1823. His father, Daniel Tucker, was born July 13, 1794; his mother, whose maiden name was Mary Philips, was born July 19, 1799; they were both born in Merrimack Co.; they were married March 6, 1823; they were the parents of four sons, of whom Gould is the eldest; John, their second son, was born April 9, 1826; Moses P., April 21, 1833; Harrison, Jan. 1, 1837 (he died March 13, 1855, and was buried at St. Johns). Daniel Tucker owned a farm containing 340 acres, in Merrimack Co.; he lived on this farm about twenty-six years, when he sold it and removed to Richland Co. and purchased the north half of the southeast quarter of Sec. 26, in Monroe Township, where he lived the remainder of his days; his wife died Feb. 16, 1867; he died July 19, 1871; they were buried at St. Johns. Gould Tucker was married to Elizabeth Duston, daughter of John Duston, of his native county, about the year 1852; by this marriage he had five children, two of whom died in infancy; those who lived to man's estate are named as follows: John D. G., born Nov. 21, 1851; Wooster, Aug. 14, 1853; Orin T., May 25, 1855; their mother died May 18, 1859, in the 26th year of her age; she was buried at St. Johns. Mr. Tucker was married, March 28, 1867, to Mary Ann McDanel, daughter of Archibald and Margaret McDanel, of Beaver Co., Penn., and grand-daughter of William and Mary McDanel, pioneers of Richland Co.; by this marriage he has had one child, James Monroe, a bright, intelligent lad. Mr. Tucker learned the trade of stone-cutting when a young man; he worked at this trade a few years; he came to Richland Co. with his father; farmed for him till he died, when he bought his brother's interest and became the owner of the "old homestead;" he has very materially improved this farm, and now has it in a high state of cultivation; it is well calculated both for the raising of grain and stock; Mr. Tucker has, of late years, dealt to some considerable extent in hogs, and is regarded as an honest dealer. His sons are well educated; three of them are engaged in teaching. He is a man of considerable energy; is temperate in his habits, and honest and upright in his dealings.

WELTY, CHRISTIAN, farmer; P. O. Lucas; he was born in the State of Maryland in 1814; his first years were spent on a farm; at 18 years of age, engaged as an apprentice for three years to learn the house-joining and carpenter trade; his wages were $24 per year and two weeks in harvest; at the expiration of the term he had saved $20; he earned $10 more by doing odd jobs for his neighbors; with $30 in his pocket, he started from Washington Co., Md., on foot to Ohio; after visiting relatives in Carroll, Stark Co., he commenced work as a jour carpenter in Massillon; remaining there a few months, he set out to see more of the world; he traveled down the Ohio Canal to the Ohio River at Cincinnati, where he assisted in building steamboats; the first summer, having replenished his funds and procured a small kit of tools, he set out to travel and obtain work by the way; he left Cincinnati in the fall, went to Natchez, Miss., where he remained till the next spring, when he visited New Orleans, Mobile, and from there to New York via the Atlantic Ocean; he then went to Philadelphia and Baltimore; then crossed the mountains to Cleveland, and back to Cincinnati, and down to Natchez, where he worked the second winter; he returned by way of Massillon, having worked at most of the principal places which he passed through; he landed in Monroe Township, this county, in 1837; he worked at the carpenter trade here for twelve years; times being dull and prices low, profits were small; he made about $150 per year; quite a number of houses and barns are today standing to testify it took much hard labor, as it had to be worked out of the rough. He was married to Mary Crawford in 1840. In 1846, he purchased an eighty-acre farm, 40 acres a few years after, and another 80 acres in 1861, having then a farm of 200 acres; it being the commencement of the war, farming proved a profitable business, a good time to pay debts and lay in store, as prices for farm produce ran high. Mrs. Welty was born in 1819, in Allegheny Co., Penn.; was brought to the township the same year by her parents, hence is one of the "pioneers;" David Crawford was one of the original settlers; he was strictly moral and temperate in habits; drunkenness becoming prevalent, he and Solomon Gladden, his neighbor, resolved to abstain from all intoxicating liquors on all occasions while they lived, hence formed the first temperance society in the county; the family of C. and M. Welty consisted of five children, four sons and one daughter; the two elder sons volunteered in the service of our country, and died from disease contracted there, one serving fifteen months, the other nearly three years; one son lives in Kansas, and one is at home; the daughter married D. F. Tucker, of this township. Mr. Welty belonged to the old Whig party; since the organization of the Republican party has belonged to it. He has held nearly all the township offices at different times, and been Justice of the Peace twice. Has always enjoyed excellent health, which he attributes to temperate habits; used tobacco twenty years, but for thirty years has abstained from its use; has abstained from liquor for forty years. The subject of this history has never engaged in speculation; what he has he accumulated by industry, frugality and economy. He and his entire family are Lutherans. Mr. Welty pays more tax than any man in Monroe Township, hence is the wealthiest; he never failed to meet a pecuniary obligation, or suffered a note to run over time unless he was creditor; never made a store bill; he is a stockholder of Mansfield Savings Bank.

WELTY, MARY, MRS. She was born in Allegheny Co., Penn., Jnly 10, 1819; her father's name was David Crawford, her mother's name Lucy (Applegate) Crawford. When she was about 2 months old, her parents removed to this county, where she has lived ever since. She went to school in Perryville when she was 8 years old, and the next summer she went to a schoolhouse near Newville, in which James Wolfe was teacher. Most of her time was spent at home doing house work, and from the time she was 14 until she was 20, she did all the family spinning and weaving. In October, 1839, she went to Allegheny Co., Penn., to work for her grandfather; she remained there until September of the next year, when she again returned to Richland Co., and in October she was married to Christian Welty; in the year 1856, she, with her husband, united with the General Synod Lutheran Church at St. John's Church, in this township, of which denomination they have been consistent members ever since. She is the mother of five children, four boys and one girl—John, born in 1841; Henry, born in 1843; Mary, born in 1846; James, born in 1849, and Cary, born in 1860. John and Henry enlisted in the 64th Regiment, O. V. I., and contracted serious diseases; John returned the 4th day of August, 1864, died the 17th of the next month; Henry returned the 8th of January, 1864, and died the 12th. Mary was married to D. F. Tucker, of this township, in November, 1864; James was married to M. E. Scott, of Ashland Co., he now lives in Barton Co., Kan.; Cary is still at home.

WILES, T. B., farmer; P. O. Lucas. T. B. Wiles was born in Frederick Co., Md., about eight miles from Frederick City, March 9, 1821. His father, John Wiles, was born in the same county April 14, 1785; his mother was also born in Frederick Co., May 7, 1798; his father was of English and his mother of German descent; his parents were married about the year 1817. Soon after his marriage, Mr. John Wiles purchased a farm containing 100 acres, in his native county; he continued to reside on this farm until his death, which occurred Oct. 10, 1844; he was buried in the Lutheran Cemetery at Middletown, in his native county. T. B. Wiles was married to Miss Susan, second daughter of Jacob and Hannah Baker, of his native county, March 22, 1849; by this marriage, Mr. Wiles had two children—a son whom they christened Edward Calvin, and a daughter named Susan Alice; Edward C. was born March 18, 1850, and Susan A. July 14, 1852; their mother died Feb. 4, 1853, and was buried in the Middletown Cemetery; she was a consistent member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church. Mr. Wiles removed to Richland Co., Ohio, in the spring of 1860; he purchased the east half of the southeast quarter of Sec. 20, in Monroe Township, where he has since resided. On Jan. 1, 1863, he was united in marriage to Miss Emily, youngest daughter of John and Elizabeth Crowe, of Monroe Township, Rev. F. J. Ruth officiating; Miss Crowe's parents were of German descent; they were among the first settlers of Monroe Township, having emigrated here from Pennsylvania about the year 1829. Mr. Wiles is the father of ten children by his second wife, eight sons and two daughters, named as follows: Mary O., born Nov. 4, 1863; George B. M., Dec. 9, 1864; John H., Dec. 3, 1865; Charlie O., March 18, 1867; William O., March 19, 1868; Norman B., July 9, 1869; Scott B., March 18, 1871; Elmer O., Aug. 31, 1872; Effie G., March 30, 1875; Walter L., April 6, 1879. George B. M. died Dec. 25, 1864; Scott B. Jan. 22, 1872; Norman B. March 2, 1872; Elmer A. Jan. 2, 1875; they are buried in the Mt. Zion Cemetery. Mr. and Mrs. Wiles, by persevering industry and careful management, have been able to maintain and educate, in a very creditable manner, their large family of children. Mr. Wiles has been an active and leading member of the Evangelical Lutheran Church for about forty years; his wife has been a consistent church member for about twenty-eight years; she first united with the German Reformed, and subsequently with the church to which her husband belonged. Mr. Wiles became a member of Monroe Lodge, No. 224, I. O. O. F., in 1860, and has been a very active and energetic member of his lodge and of the order, from that time to the present; he has attained to the highest rank in his lodge; he is also a member of the Burns Encampment located at Lucas, and has taken all the degrees therein. Mr. Wiles is one of the leading Democrats of his township, and has repeatedly been elected to fill offices of honor and trust by the members of his party. Mr. Wiles and his good wife are liberal, almost to a fault, in their contributions for religious and charitable purposes; in their dispositions they are kind, social and friendly.

WIGTON, SUSAN, widow; P. O. Perryville. William Wigton, deceased husband of Susan Wigton, was born in a log cabin, on the north bank of the Clear Fork, in Monroe Township, on the 3d day of July, 1827; his father's name was William Wigton, and his mother's maiden name was Jane Williams. While he was quite young, his father purchased the east half of the northwest quarter of Sec. 26, in Monroe Township, and removed his family thereon. The farm at this day was in a wild and uncultivated state, and was but little cleared; the dwelling was a log cabin constructed in the primitive style of the early pioneers. As soon as William arrived at the proper age, his father sent him to school; as soon as he was old enough to labor, however, his assistance was required on the farm, and he was permitted to attend school but a few months during the winter season; his father, however, was a teacher, and one of the best mathematicians in the county at that time, so that with his assistance and his other limited facilities for obtaining knowledge, William was enabled to acquire a pretty fair knowledge of the common English branches; he was trained by his father to habits of industry and morality, which early training proved highly beneficial to him in later life. Feb. 4, 1850, was married to Miss Susan Schrack, eighth daughter of David and Elizabeth Schrack; Miss Schrack, was born in Monroe Township May 25, 1832; after their marriage they moved to his father's farm, where they continued to reside as long as William lived, and where his widow still resides; at his father's death, he purchased the interests of his brothers and sisters in the old homestead and became the owner of the same. This is one of the best farms in that section of country; the soil is highly fertile, it is well watered, well timbered and well improved; there is no better spring of water in the county than the one on this farm. Mr. Wigton was an excellent farmer and never failed to have good crops when there were any in his section of country. Mr. and Mrs. Wigton were the parents of ten children, seven sons and three daughters; two of the daughters died in infancy: James Franklin, their second son lived to become a man of great promise. In order to assist his mother in paying her indebtedness, he left home and engaged labor in the oil regions, where he was suddenly stricken with disease, and cut off in the prime of life and the vigor of early manhood. William Wigton was an active and energetic member of Sturges Lodge No. 727, I. O. O. F., for many years prior to his death; he attained to the highest position in the lodge, and was highly esteemed and respected by all its members. He united with the Lutheran Church at St. Johns, a short time before his death; early in the winter of 1867, he was attacked with typhoid pnumonia, from which he partially recovered, when a fever sore set in, which eventually consumed the bone in one of his thighs; he lingered till spring, enduring in the mean-while, pain the most intense and agony the most intolerable; he departed this life May 27, 1868; he was buried in the St. Johns Cemetery; his deceased children were buried here also. Mrs. Wigton being thus thrown upon her own resources, with a large family of small children to support and educate, proved herself equal to the emergency; her husband was considerably in debt when he died, but by persevering industry, economy and careful management, on the part of herself and elder children, she was enabled in a few years to liquidate the entire debt. She has also been able to clothe and educate her large family in a very creditable manner; in this she was very materially assisted by her children themselves, having been trained from infancy to habits of industry and morality by their parents. Mrs. Wigton has for several years been a member of the Lutheran Church.

WOLF, ADAM (deceased): he was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Dec. 16, 1760; served in the Continental army during the war of the Revolution. He was married to Miss Rachel Oldham, of his native county, Jan. 16, 1790, by whom he had ten children, four sons and six daughters—Mary, born in Beaver Co. Nov. 21, 1790; Easter, Feb. 5, 1793; John, Aug. 16, 1794; Robert, Jan. 31, 1796; William O., Dec. 21, 1797; Elizabeth, Nov. 4, 1799; Joseph, Nov. 26, 1801; Rebecca, Sept. 19, 1804; Asenath, Aug. 28, 1806, and Rachel, April 29, 1809. Mary married Hiram Whitecotten April 10, 1816; John, Margaret Baughman Aug. 9, 1825; Robert, Rachel Shiver Jan. 13, 1825; Elizabeth, John Clark May 31, 1827; Rachel, Charles Young Jan. 15, 1829; William O., Sarah Kent Sept. 10, 1829; Rebecca, David Baughman July 10, 1832; Asenath, Henry Biltimier Nov. 8, 1832 and Joseph, Sarah Mecklem Dec. 1, 1845. Ruth Ann Whitecotten, daughter of Hiram and Mary Whitecotten, was married to Joel Smith Oct. 8, 1835. Adam Wolf removed to Richland Co. in 1816, and entered the southeast quarter of Sec. 26, in Monroe Township. His farm, at the time he took possession of it, was a frowning forest: he and his sons soon transformed it into fruitful fields. He continued to reside on this farm as long as he lived. He and his wife were both zealous members of the Baptist Church for many years. His wife died April 19, 1836; he departed this life April 24, 1845. They were both buried at Newville.

WOLFE, JOHN, Jr., farmer; P. O. Lucas. John Wolfe, Sr., was born in the State of Pennsylvania Aug. 13, 1794: he was a school teacher in early life, but he was by occupation a farmer; in the spring of 1816, he came to the State of Ohio with his father, Adam Wolfe. The Wolfes entered a quarter-section of land where Gould Tucker now lives. John was married to Margaret Baughman in 1825; they were the parents of ten children. Mr. Wolfe bought 160 acres of land near Pinhook, for $200, which he cleared and cultivated. His wife died on July 19, 1850. Mr. Wolfe was married to Mrs. Ann Force on March 23, 1854; his second wife had six children by her first husband, Mathew Force, and two sons by her second marriage—Perry and John Wolfe. Mrs. Ann Wolfe was a daughter of William Hunter. Mr. Wolfe died Feb. 22, 1876; his widow still resides on the old homestead; she is 68 years of age, being born Aug. 13, 1811; her daughter, Elizabeth, and her two youngest sons live with her, and care for her as her advancing years demand. John Wolfe, Sr., served in the war of 1812. Abraham and Solomon Wolfe and Oscar and James Force served in the late war. James died at Milliken's Bend and Solomon after he had started for home; the others came home safe.

WOLFE, SARAH, widow; P. O. Perryville. Joseph Wolfe, her husband, was born in Beaver Co., Penn., Nov. 26, 1801; he was the youngest son of Adam and Rachel Wolfe. When Joseph was 15 years old, his father removed, with his family, to Richland Co.; when about 16, he was thrown from a horse, which injured one of his thighs to such an extent as to make him a cripple for life; owing to this accident, he doubtless received a better education than he otherwise would have done; he qualified himself for a teacher, which profession he followed many years; he taught the first term of school in what is now known as Subdistrict No. 5, in Monroe Township; he taught ten terms of one year each, and several shorter terms; as a teacher, he met with very good success. Some years prior to the death of his father, he purchased the north half of the old homestead; about the year 1842, he sold this farm to his brother-in-law, Charles Young; he then went to Missouri, where he purchased 200 acres of land; returning in about a year, he traded with Mr. Young and got his first farm back again; shortly after his father's death, he again traded with Mr. Young for his Missouri land; in 1846, he traded his Missouri land to David Baughman for a portion of Sec. 27, in this township; besides what has been enumerated, he purchased various other tracts of land in the township, and owned at the time of his decease, 180 acres in Sec. 27. Sept. 1, 1848, he was married to Miss Sarah Mecklem, daughter of Samuel and Rachel Mecklem, of Beaver Co., Penn. Her father was born in Ireland, and emigrated to the eastern part of Pennsylvania, with his parents, when he was young. Was married to Rachel McDanel about the year 1803; moved to Beaver Co. in 1806, where he spent the remainder of his days; he died Oct. 23, 1832, aged 65 years. Rachel McDanel was born near Wilmington, Penn., July 6, 1873; was married to Samuel Mecklem as before stated; they were the parents of twelve children, eight sons and four daughters. Mr. Mecklem was a member of the Presbyterian Church, but his wife was a Baptist; she died Aug. 13, 1847, aged 64 years. Mr. and Mrs. Wolfe are the parents of four children, three sons and one daughter; their daughter died at the age of 5 years and 7 months, and was buried near Lucas. Charles C., their eldest son, was born Aug. 26, 1847; graduated at Amherst College in the year 1876; united with the Baptist Church at Perrysville, at the age of 19; went to Kansas in the winter of 1878, purchased a farm, and is now engaged in farming. Norman M., their second son, was born July 6, 1849; he received a pretty thorough education; attended the Wooster University a year or more; he then entered a law office; was admitted to the bar, and is now practicing his profession in the city of Mansfield. He was married to Jennie Leiter Sept. 22, 1877; became a member of the Presbyterian Church at Wooster, at the age of 25. Loram L., their youngest son, was born March 23, 1851; became a member of the Baptist Church at Perryville, at the age of 17; was married to Miss Mattie L. Baughman Sept. 27, 1875; purchased a portion of the old homestead in 1876, which he is now engaged in cultivating. Joseph Wolfe united with the Baptist Church at Newville July 3, 1829, and remained an active and consistent member of this branch of the church as long as he lived; he died Jan. 28, 1875, and was buried in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery at Lucas. Mrs. Wolfe became a member of the Baptist Church at the age of 20, and has been a member in good standing in that church up to the present time; they were both ever ready to contribute of their means for the support of the Gospel, and for the relief of the indigent and distressed. Mrs. Wolfe still resides on the old homestead.

PLYMOUTH TOWNSHIP.

BEELMAN, M. B., manufacturer and dealer in moldings, frames, etc., etc., Plymouth; was born Dec. 6, 1846, in Plymouth Township; when but 8 years of age the family moved to town, where he received his education; he afterward learned the carpenter's trade, which he followed for eight years; in 1870, he became one of the proprietors of the Plymouth Novelty Works; they found a ready sale for their wares—manufactured moldings, picture frames, etc., in all styles and varieties. In October, 1869, he was married to Miss Mary Meeker; they have two children—Calvin, born Sept. 27, 1870; Ethel, born April 4, 1876. Mr. Beelman's shop is on Plymouth street. In February, 1865, he enlisted in Co. G, 191st O. V. I.; the regiment spent most of the time in Virginia.

BEELMAN, B. F., he was born April 14, 1849, in this township; in his 9th year, the family moved to Plymouth, where he received his education; being a natural-born mechanic, he learned the carpenter's trade at the age of 16, and originated the Plymouth Novelty Works, also the first to patent a miter machine of which he sold thousands; after the novelty works were under headway, he took the road to sell and introduce their work, which consists of brackets, stands, all manner of toilet and fancy work, picture frames, moldings, etc.; he now has a large assortment of goods on hand, and is shipping to nearly every State in the Union. Mr. Beelman was married in 1870 to Miss Smith, daughter of Dr. S. S. Smith, of Plymouth, whom he has greatly aided in the preparation and sale of the Doctor's "King of Cure," one of the best family medicines made.

BEELMAN, J. FRANK, editor and proprietor of the Plymouth Advertiser; was born in Plymouth July 31, 1847; raised and educated here, and grew up with the town. In 1869, he, together with a Mr. Webber, opened a book and notion store under the firm name of Webber & Beelman. In August, 1872, he disposed of his interest in the bookstore, and became associated with and in the Plymouth Advertiser office. In April, 1876, he sold his interest, and in December following, he purchased the office and became sole proprietor, since which time the Advertiser has been on a solid and firm basis, and has a circulation and support second to no other paper in the county, with the jobbing department complete, which does credit and honor to the proprietor. Mr. Beelman is one of the first and foremost men in town, as the success of the Advertiser would indicate. He is Secretary of the Plymouth Agricultural Society, Township Clerk, and has occupied other offices in the gift of the people with marked satisfaction to all, and withal is a man well worthy the position he holds in society. He was married, Oct. 8, 1874, to Miss Frank Gipson, of Plymouth; they have one child—Grace W., born Oct. 10, 1876. Mr. B. was taken from school when 14 years of age, and served as apprentice in the printing business three and a half years. Finishing this, he engaged as clerk in the store of S. M. Robinson & Co., with whom he remained four years, until he formed partnership with Mr. Webber.

BEVIER, CALEB, farmer and stock-dealer; P. O. Plymouth; was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., in 1820; moved to Plymouth Township in 1824; the family first settled near where the village of Shiloh now stands; they lived in an old log schoolhouse; in October, they moved into their own house, where Mr. Bevier spent most of his life to the time of his marriage, which occurred in 1845; his lady's name was Miss Cornelia Brinkerhoff, of New Haven Township, Huron Co.; in 1846, they moved on the present farm; they commenced in the woods, and fully understand what the name of "pioneer" means; the first team he ever owned was an ox team; used to drive them when they went to church or visiting. Mr. Bevier has one of the finest farms and residences in the township, and has every improvement and building that is necessary, or that he could wish for. The farm consists of 203 acres, 150 acres well improved. Mr. Bevier is one of the reliable and influential men of the county; has served as Treasurer of Plymouth Township for thirteen years, and is now serving his third term as Justice of the Peace; his farm and residence is five miles south of Plymouth, near the Bucyrus road. Mrs. Bevier was born in Owasco in 1820; in 1837, her folks moved to Ohio; she died June 23, 1880. Mr. and Mrs. Bevier were both born in the same town; they have had nine children, seven of whom are now living.

BODLEY, JOHN J., farmer; P. O. Plymouth; was born July 8, 1829. He has always been at home, and now owns and occupies the old homestead. Was married April 11, 1831, to Mary W. Livingston, of Auburn, Cayuga Co., N. Y., where she was educated and lived until their removal to Plymouth, April 18, 1860; she was born in Cayuga Co., N. Y., Aug. 14, 1838; they have an adopted son, George McLelland Bodley; he is about 15 years of age. The old house, a frame, was built in 1834, and is one of the oldest frames in the township; they have a table made out of the wagon-box that they moved to Plymouth in, made in 1818 or 1819; they also have a sword, a relic of the war of 1812. His father, Jesse Bodley, and family, came to Plymouth in 1818; they started from Owasco., N. Y., Sept. 15, and landed here one month after, Oct. 15, 1818; they traveled all the way with an ox team. The names of the children are as follows: Dinah, born May 8, 1816 (she married George Kellogg, April 24, 1834, and lives in Fulton Co., Ohio); William E., born Feb. 1, 1819 (he was the first white child born in this vicinity; married Sarah A. Shaw, who died May 1, 1851, and he died June 29, 1857); Samuel, born Nov. 17, 1821 (married Harriet Richardson, April 9, 1846); Wilson, born April 10, 1825 (married, Feb. 3, 1848, to Orlena Richardson; they had six children, five of whom are now living); John J., subject of this sketch; Enoch Conger, born Nov. 30, 1831 (he graduated at Mansfield; was married May 6, 1860, to Martha A. Case, of Bodino, N. Y., and now resides in San Jose, Cal.; in the mercantile trade); Nancy Mariah, born March 14, 1835 (she lives with John J.). A brother of Jesse, William W., came to Richland Co. at the same time; he was born in Ulster Co., N. Y., April 2, 1797; they first came here in 1817, and, getting their land, returned to New York, and the next year moved here; he was married May 8, 1823, to Margaret H. Brink; they had five children; he died Nov. 11, 1849; his widow married James Ralston April 6, 1850; she died April 27, 1868.

BRIGGS, ROBERT, farmer; P. O. Plymouth; was born in Lincolnshire, England, Sept. 1, 1830; the family landed in Richland Co. when Mr. Briggs was but 3 years of age, and has lived in the county ever since, except one year that he lived in Hardin Co., Ohio, and has seen this country when it was very wild and but very little improvements were then made; he has grown up with the country; he now has a very fine farm only a few miles south of Plymouth. Was married in 1859, to Miss Martha Doty, of Richland Co.; they have one child, a daughter. When Mr. Briggs' father came here, he had to stand up in the saddle on the back of his horse and tie a knot in the limbs of a tree to mark the place for his farm, as the land was covered with a dense forest.

BRINKERHOFF, JOSIAH, banker, Plymouth; was born in December, 1815, in Cayuga Co., N. Y.; the family came West in 1834, to Plymouth Township; was raised a farmer, and, some twenty-one years ago, he moved to town. Mr. B. has been one of the prominent men of Plymouth, and ever ready to lend a helping hand to any improvement or enterprise for the benefit of the town or community; in the spring of 1874, he was elected President of the First National Bank, which position he now holds to the satisfaction of all concerned.

BROWN, OLIVER G., farmer and stock-dealer; P. O. Shelby; was born in Virginia, in 1833; his father, Mr. James Brown, came with his family to Plymouth in 1835, and from there moved to their present farm; there were six girls and two sons, three of the girls having died; when they bought the farm, there was but very little improvement—only a log house and, perhaps, twenty acres of cleared land, and, by hard work, they have now as fine a farm as there is in this part of the township; Mr. Oliver G. Brown now is living on the old homestead where he was raised. He was married in 1856 to Miss Elizabeth M. Castor, of Plymouth Township; soon after their marriage, they moved to Iowa, where they resided for nineteen years; he was engaged in farming and stock-dealing, buying and shipping. In 1876, they came back to their old home, where they are now living; they have five children now living, two sons at Salina, Kan., and one daughter married, and now lives at East Woolf, Russell Co., Kan., and two at home. Mr. James Brown was at one time in business at Shelby; was in the hotel business for about two years, when he went into business as a partner of Mr. Mickey; about the year 1843, he moved back to the old farm, where he has since lived; Mrs. Brown died Sept. 16, 1869. Mr. Brown and his family are highly respected citizens, and are well known throughout the community. Farm and residence south of Plymouth, on the northwest quarter of Sec. 31, about three miles northwest of Shelby.

BRUBAKER, J. C., merchant, Plymouth; was born Nov. 26, 1846, in Huron Co., Ohio; lived on the farm until 1869, when he came to Plymouth to attend school, and afterward was engaged as salesman in a grocery store till April 11, 1874, when he engaged in the business for himself, and has been very successful, and has a trade second to no other establishment of the kind in town. He was married to Miss Ellen Tyson March 11, 1872; they have three children—Lotta, born Sept. 25, 1873; May, April 17, 1876; Anna, Feb. 15, 1878.

CHANNING, J. R., farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Plymouth; was born and educated in England, and the family came to this country in 1851, and to Plymouth Township in 1870; he has one of the finest farms to be found in the county, and the buildings that he is putting up surpass anything of the kind in the county; he has just completed a barn 42x70 feet, being a bank barn and stabling under the whole of it, and for convenience and stability is far ahead of his neighbors'; when he put the roof on, he would paint each course of shingles with lead and oil, and has consumed in the building eighty-three gallons linseed oil, and 1,200 pounds best white lead; the whole building is put up in a workmanlike manner, and has cost him not far from $3,000. Mr. Channing is one of the successful men in the county, having made his money by hard and honest labor; residence and farm on Shiloh road, one and one-half miles south of Plymouth. Was married in October, 1864, to Miss Margaret Fulmer, of Ashland Co., Ohio; they have four children, all boys—W. G., born Sept. 1, 1865; A. J., born April 19, 1867; J. He was married, in 1870, to Miss Margaret Coe, of Ashland Co.; they have two children—Emma Grace, born Nov. 9, 1871; Charles Walter, May 23, 1877. Residence and factory on High street, near the B. & O. R. R.

CLARK, ELI, farmer, and owns a saw-mill; P. O. Plymouth; was born in 1824, in Connecticut; in the spring of 1846, the family came to Plymouth Township; they purchased a farm that was somewhat improved, but, generally speaking, it was very wild. His farm lies about three miles southwest of Plymouth. In 1848, he purchased the first saw-mill that was brought into the country. It was brought here during the building of the railroad; after the road was built, Mr. Clark bought the mill, and moved it to his farm, about four miles south of Plymouth. He has remodeled and rebuilt it, until it is all of modern style and improvements, and turns out work second to none. Was married, in 1850, to Miss Bolles, of Connecticut; they have three sons. His father bought the farm where Mr. Clark now lives, where he resided till his death, which occurred in 1871. His sons, Eli and John, bought the farm.

DRONBERGER, L. R., druggist's traveling salesman, Plymouth; was born Feb. 18, 1850, in Homer, Medina Co., Ohio. Mr. E. Dronberger, his father, moved to Richland Co. in the spring of 1853; bought a farm in the northwest corner of Plymouth Township, where the family lived till April, 1870, when they moved to Plymouth and engaged in the drug business, under the firm name of E. Dronberger & Son, where they did a profitable business and had a trade second to no other establishment of the kind in the town; in May, 1873, they met with a severe loss by fire, which consumed nearly everything they had; not long after the fire, Mr. L. R. Dronberger moved to Newark, Ohio, where they again purchased a stock of drugs and medicines and ran business for some time; when they sold out their business, he moved to Flint, Mich., and was engaged as head clerk in a large retail drug and prescription store for a year or more, when he engaged to a wholesale drug house of Detroit as traveling salesman, and has continued in this business for the past three years with marked success, as he makes many friends wherever he goes; he has made several changes in employers, and every time for the better, and now is with a New York firm, and he holds a good and increasing trade for himself and employers by his general goodwill and manliness. Was married, June 10, 1873, to Miss Frank Gunsaullus, of Plymouth.

FACKLER, DR. J. M., homœopathic physician, Plymouth; was born in Weller Township, Richland Co., Ohio, April 7, 1838; raised a farmer until he commenced the study of medicine; attended the schools of Haysville, Ohio, and Academy of Savannah, Ohio; commenced the study of medicine in 1859; attended the Cleveland Homœopathic Medical College in 1863–64; received the degree of M. D. at the Pulte Homœopathic Medical College of Cincinnati, Ohio, in 1877; he has been practicing medicine for seventeen years, with marked success, and the last ten years at Plymouth; the doctor fully understands his profession, and is regarded throughout the country as one of the best, and has a large and increasing practice, so much so that he was compelled to take a partner, and both are now kept busy. He was married to Miss Martha N. Fancher in 1862; they had two children—Nellie, born July 28, 1864; Clauda Blanche, May 28, 1873; died Dec. 12, 1878.

DRENNAN, JAMES (deceased); he was born in Carlisle, Penn., Feb. 18, 1783. When about 4 years of age, his father, David Drennan, moved from Carlisle to Beaver Co, making the journey across the mountains with pack-horses. Mrs. D. carried James on her knee, while she rode a horse. His father became Judge of Common Pleas Court there, and lived there until his death. When James was about 17 years of age, he was bound out to a cabinet-maker to learn the trade. After serving three years, he bought his time on credit of his master, and came to Steubenville, Ohio, where he took a job of carpenter work on bridges, at which he earned enough to pay his master for his time. He worked at his trade in Steubenville, Chillicothe, New Lisbon and Canton, settling in the latter place late in January, 1810. He married here Jane Patten, who bore him four children; she died Feb. 7, 1818. Sept. 27, 1819, he married Eliza Wolf, the first schoolmistress in Mansfield, and, in 1821, moved to the latter place, where he resided till 1825, when he removed to Plymouth. He lived in Plymouth until his death, which occurred Dec. 23, 1859. During the war of 1812, Mr. D. served as Lieutenant until he recruited two companies, when he was given a captain's commission, and was ordered to the front, where he served under Gen. Harrison. His eldest son, David Armstrong, was licensed as a Methodist preacher at the age of 22, and died soon after at Sandusky City. The second son that grew to manhood, John P., was a merchant in Mansfield till the late war, when, in 1861, he enlisted. After the war closed, he settled in Roodhouse, Ill., where he is now living. The third son, William W., has been a merchant and farmer, and now resides in Plymouth. The fourth son, James P., was a lawyer; he unfortunately lost his life by a steamboat accident on the Mississippi River when he was 28 years old. The fifth son, Jacob Manuel, is a Presbyterian clergyman in New York City. Two daughters and one son died while young. Two daughters are now married—Mrs. Robert McDonough, now living in Plymouth, and Mrs. B. A. Cash, in Brooklyn, N. Y.

DRENNAN, William W., lawyer. He was born in Canton July 18, 1820; when he was about 1 year old, his parents moved to Mansfield, and four years after, to Plymouth; since then Mr. Drennan has always lived in this county, save four years, when he was residing in Muskingum Co.; three years in Cincinnati, and a temporary residence in the South. When he was 12 years old, he was apprenticed to a dry-goods merchant to learn the business; the terms of his indenture were service and obedience on his part, and boarding and a monthly payment in money on the master's part, instead of "clothing, schooling and freedom suit," as was customary in binding boys in those days; he was not out of employment until he was 25 years old. At that age, he went into business for himself, succeeding Messrs. Barker, in Plymouth; since then he has been engaged in mercantile, produce and commission business and dealing in real estate, and in practicing law. He was married March 28, 1850, to Hannah Brinkerhoff, of Cayuga Co., N. Y.; they are the parents of six children, three of whom died in infancy, and three (one son and two daughters) are now growing into manhood and womanhood.

FENNER, FELIX (deceased), was born near Bethlehem, Penn., and raised a farmer; he located about 1813, on a small farm, and carried on blacksmithing; in 1825, moved to Lansing Township, Tompkins Co., N. Y., where he worked at his trade; in 1831, went to Ohio to look up a home for his already large family; he soon after returned, having been much encouraged by his visit, and in 1832 moved to Ohio, and soon after bought 122 acres of land in the woods, with a little log house on it, and about half an acre cleared. On Jan. 12, 1813, was married to Miss Elizabeth Trauger; they had twelve children, nine of whom are living. Mr. Fenner died Dec. 7, 1877; he left a good farm with all good buildings and 75 acres cleared and fenced. He had filled many of the township offices in the gift of the people. He was quite a musician in his younger days, and at one time had the honor of being the organist in the large Moravian Church of Bethlehem, Penn.

FENNER, F. T., farmer and stock-raiser; was born in August, 1825, in Tompkins Co., N. Y.; the family came West when Mr. Fenner was quite small; he was raised a farmer, and from the manner in which he does business, one is led to the belief that he fully understands every thing that he undertakes; he has, perhaps, as nice a farm as there is in the township, and his judgment on matters pertaining to the farm or stock-raising is considered solid. He was elected Township Trustee in 1866, and has held the office ever since, except one year, and has been Judge of Election at the three last Presidential elections; he has, perhaps, threshed more grain than any other man in the county, as he has followed it for twenty-eight years; he has come up from almost nothing to be a very wealthy man. Was married in 1848 to Miss Mary E. Hills; they have four children—Sarah J., born September, 1849; Clara E., born July, 1854; Henry L., born October, 1856; Ida Adora, born in 1863. Mr. Fenner has been engaged in the manufacture of sorghum molasses for the past eighteen years, and, like his farming, has made it a success.

FENNER, CORNELIUS, farmer and stock-raiser, P. O. Plymouth; was born in Tompkins Co., N. Y.; April 11, 1831; the family came West when Mr. Fenner was but 1 year old, landing in New Haven, Ohio. One year after this, his father, Mr. Felix Fenner, bought the present farm, there being but half an acre cleared and a small log house, he building the present house and the old barns on the homestead, consisting of 122 acres. Mr. Fenner died in November, 1856. Soon after his death, his son, Mr. C. Fenner, took charge of the farm, and now, together with what he has added to it and improvements made, makes it a premium farm. Mr. Fenner lived in Iowa four years, and came back after the death of his father. In 1863, he bought the farm, which is situated on the Columbus State road, one-half mile from the Huron Co. line. His principal farming is grain raising, and he raises and keeps stock enough to be profitable, and it is safe to say that Mr. Fenner is one of the first men in the county, and of good business principles. He has served a number of terms each as School Director and Supervisor. Was married, Dec. 29, 1863, to Miss Sarah A. Sheeley; they have three children—Frank C., born Jan. 8, 1868; Anna Bertha, Nov. 6, 1870; Charlie W., Dec. 22, 1873. Mr. Fenner's mother now lives with him; she is nearly 87 years old, and very active and smart for a person of such advanced years. Mr. Fenner has one of the finest barns in the country. It is finished up in good style, and has all the modern improvements; he has storage for 1,500 bushels of grain, with nearly all the conveniences that a well-informed man could make. The building is 40x66 feet, with stabling under the whole building, with "shoots" for grain and hay, so that his feeding can be done without going out of the stable; he has every facility for keeping stock, as his farm abounds with living water and a "spring-fed" creek. The farm now, with what he has added to it, makes it 153 acres of the choicest kind of land.

GETMAN, J. B., druggist, Plymouth; was born in Columbia, Herkimer Co., N. Y.; received his education at Whitestown. March 30, 1857, came to Plymouth, where he was engaged to teach in the public schools, which position he held for seven years without interruption. On the 5th day of December, 1863, he engaged in the drug business, and has been known throughout the country as a reliable and proficient druggist. He has been a member of the School Board twelve years, and has done much to elevate the schools to their present condition; has been a member of the Council four years. Was married, July, 1859, to Miss Helen M. Wicks, who was born at Genoa, Cayuga Co., N. Y., and who came to Ohio when 4 years old; they have three children—Ida C., born in June, 1860; graduated at Ohio Wesleyan Female College when she was 17 years old, and is now a teacher in the Plymouth schools; Walter Wix, born Sept. 30, 1867; Mable Helen, born in January, 1877.

GUNSAULLUS, F. DORR, attorney and counselor at law, Plymouth; was born Aug. 22, 1854, in Plymouth Township, receiving his education at the high schools of Plymouth. At the age of 15, he went into the foundry and machine-shops to learn the business, where he worked till July, 1872 (during this time, he attended school during the winters); in 1872, he accepted a position in the First National Bank as Teller, which position he held for two years, and had the confidence of all with whom he did business; in 1875, he began reading law, after which he attended the law school of the Cincinnati College; was admitted to practice April 18, 1877. Was married in October, 1877, to Miss Jennie E. Gettings, and on the evening of their wedding he and his bride started for the West, and landed at Aurora, Hamilton Co., Neb., Dec. 18, 1877; he was admitted to the District Court of the Fourth Judicial District of the State; May 6, 1878, was admitted as a counselor at law and solicitor in chancery of the United States Circuit Court for the District of Nebraska at Omaha. While at Hamilton, Neb., he organized a building association and was elected its President, he having the privilege of seeing built, by the aid of this association, the finest building in the county. At the earnest solicitation of his mother, and sickness of his father, he was induced to return to Plymouth, which he did in May, 1878; June 20, 1878, he opened a law office, and has been amply repaid for it, having the patronage of most of the business men, and the confidence of the community at large; he being a man of integrity and good business principles, his clients always feel that he does his duty for them.

HOFFMAN, G. W., jeweler and watchmaker, Plymouth, was born Oct. 18, 1832, in Mansfield, Ohio. In 1844, the family moved to Plymouth, which then had a population of about four hundred. Soon after their arrival, Mr. Hoffman's father engaged in the jewelry and watch business, and for more than thirty-five years this business has been carried on by some member of the family, and latterly by Mr. G. W. Hoffman, who now has one of the finest jewelry establishments to be found anywhere. His stock consists of watches, clocks, jewelry, in endless variety, guns and revolvers, also, watch repairing in all its branches. Store, south side of public square. Was married April, 1858, to Miss Frye; they have two daughters—Bell, born in January, 1859; Maud, born in July, 1861.

HOLTZ, DR. SAMUEL S., homœopathic physician, Plymouth, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Oct. 24, 1850; was raised a farmer. In 1870, he attended the "Baldwin University," of Berea, Ohio; graduated in pharmacy March 14, 1873; subsequent to graduating he began the study of medicine with Dr. J. M. Fackler, and received the degree of M. D. Jan. 17, 1877, at Pulte Homœopathic Medical College, of Cincinnati, Ohio, after attending one term of lectures at Hahnemann Homœopathic Medical College, of Chicago, Ill., since which time he has been practicing with Dr. Fackler. Was married July 4, 1878, to Miss Mattie A. Flora; they have one child, born Aug. 8, 187). The Doctor is a man of integrity, and an excellent physician. Office on Sandusky street.

KIEL, J. E., confectionery and grocery, was born in Philadelphia, Penn. In the spring of 1872, came to Plymouth and engaged in the manufacture of candies of all descriptions for the wholesale trade, which has proved to be a very profitable business. Mr. Kiel came from Mansfield to Plymouth; the family came to Richland Co. thirty years ago, and they have seen old Richland when it was pretty wild, and are numbered among the early settlers. His bakery and confectionery are on the north side of the square. Was married in March, 1872, to Miss Mary McCormick; they have one child, Maud, born Feb. 1, 1876. Mr. Kiel is numbered as one of Plymouth's reliable business men.

KIRKPATRICK, WILLIAM, farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Plymouth; was born May 25, 1822, in Plymouth Township, where he has always lived; he has traveled considerably, having visited most of the large cities of the United States; his father came to Plymouth Township in 1815; it was then almost an unbroken wilderness, there being only six families in the township, and but six little log cabins; he entered his quarter-section of land from the Government, where his brother and mother now live; after entering his land, he cleared ten acres and built a log cabin and then returned to Washington Co., N. Y., and was married in 1818, and moved, together with two or three other families, to Ohio; they came by wagons; they had two ox teams and two horse teams; they came through part of Pennsylvania, crossing the Alleghany Mountains; were six weeks on the way from the time they started till they arrived in Richland Co. Mr. Kirkpatrick remembers hearing his father tell of the spring after they came here; how and when he first got potatoes for seed, there being none in Plymouth Township, he and a neighbor concluded to go to Mansfield for some, and they started on foot, there being no roads, only a "trail" blazed through on the trees—by way of Truxville (now Ganges) then containing two or three houses; they arrived in Mansfield, which then had only six houses, and a block-house for protection against the Indians, at that time very numerous in the county. They bought a bushel of potatoes, for which they paid $2, and shouldered their bushel of potatoes, and started for home. When night overtook them, they lost their trail and had to lay out all night. They protected themselves from the wolves by building a fire of logs and brush, and laying by the side of the fire, the wolves would howl around them all night. But the worst of all was they had no supper, and nothing to eat but the potatoes, so they roasted about a peck of them for their supper and breakfast. By hunting around for some little time, they succeeded in finding the trail for home, and arrived home in the evening. He remembers another incident of his father killing a big deer with a club. He was out hunting his cows as they ran in the woods with a bell on, as was the custom, and his dog started a deer which he chased till he got tired, when he turned to fight the dog, when Kirkpatrick came up and the buck came at him, and he told the dog to "take him," which he did, while Mr. K. killed him with a club, by a well-directed blow on the head. They used to go to church or to meetings held in an old log church, and would ride behind their ox teams. The first schoolhouse that was built in the township was on their old farm, it being built of logs, and the first teacher was Robert Mackelvey. Mr. Kirkpatrick attended his school, together with an older sister. In 1848, he moved to his present farm, three-quarters of a mile west of the old homestead. He has been Township Trustee two terms, and is now Land Appraiser for the township, and is perhaps one of the oldest citizens living in the township, who was born and raised in it, and is one of the best men in the county. Was married, in 1847, to Miss Elizabeth Emmerson, of Richland Co.; they have six children—Emaline, born Oct. 31, 1850; Harriet, March 30, 1853; John Albert, Dec. 8, 1856; Mary Elizabeth, Dec. 8, 1858; William Henry, Dec. 10, 1860; Franklin Ellsworth, Feb. 6, 1863.

LOCKWOOD, I. L., Agent B. & O. R. R., Plymouth; was born in Cincinnati in 1847; educated in Kentucky. He was connected with the general office of the B. & O. R. R.; he commenced for the company in 1872, at Columbus, Ohio, where he remained about one year, when he went to Toledo, as Chief Clerk of the "Globe Line" offices, the B. & O. R. R. Co. being at the head of the line, which position he held up to the time that he was appointed to the agency at Plymouth to take charge of their offices, Dec. 1, 1874, the position he still holds to the satisfaction of the railroad company and the citizens generally. Mr. Lockwood is called one of the most gentlemanly agents on the railroad, and the company gave him credit for an increase of freight of over $14,000 in the last two years; the company highly appreciate his services, as he is a No. 1 man in every particular. Was married, May 18, 1876, to Miss Lilla A. Bowlby, of Plymouth; their residence is on Trux street.

LOVELAND, G. W., farmer; P. O. Plymouth; was born in New Haven, Ohio, in 1832; has always lived on the farm there until 1861, when he bought a part of what was then the Ammerman farm, which had been settled and improved for many years, he making the present improvements in the shape of buildings; he has perhaps one of the finest residences in the township, and everything around him to make home and life comfortable; he used to teach school in an old schoolhouse that was situated on the northeast corner of his farm; there was an old house and barn on the place when Mr. L. came here; five or six years after he moved here, he built his present handsome buildings. Mr. Loveland has served three years as Township Treasurer, and one term as Township Trustee; he is a man who well deserves the position which he holds in society. Was married in 1857 to Miss Delila H. Parker, daughter of Samuel Parker, Esq.; they have two children—Jessie Eugenia, born Aug. 18, 1861, and Polly, born Feb. 17, 1878.

McDONOUGH, ROBERT, Jr., furniture and undertaking, Plymouth; he was educated at Kenyon College, Gambier, Knox Co., Ohio; May 1, 1879, he bought out the firm of Kaylor & Sweet, furniture dealers; Mr. McDonough has one of the best selections of furniture, etc., to be found in town, and, although one of the youngest firms in town, yet he has a fine prospect before him, and tries to gain the confidence of the public. February 7, 1879, he was married to Miss Bell Hoffman, of Plymouth. Mr. McDonough's father, Robert, Sr., was born in Washington Co., Penn., Feb. 9, 1811; when but 9 years of age, he came, with his parents, to Millersburg, Ohio, where they remained until he was 18 years of age; thence he removed to Mansfield, Ohio, where he remained until 1832, when he came to Plymouth, where he resided until his death, which occurred May 17, 1873, he having been a resident of Plymouth forty-one years, consequently one of the earliest settlers in the town. Mr. McDonough was born of Scotch-Irish parentage, and, at the age of 23, he united with the Presbyterian Church; was engaged in the mercantile business thirty-eight years, and the two last years of his life he was in the banking business, with general favor and success, as had been shown him by the confidence of the business and farming community; in respect to his memory, all the business houses were closed, appropriately draped in mourning.

NIMMONS, E. H., farmer; P. O. Plymouth; was born in Plymouth Township in 1846; his parents came from Binghamton, N. Y., to Plymouth at a very early day; his father died in April, 1857; his mother now lives in town. Mr. Nimmons bought his present farm in 1872; has always lived within one and one-half miles of Plymouth till he came to his present farm. In January, 1865, he enlisted in Company G, 191st O. V. I., where he served till he was discharged, which was on Aug. 27, 1865, at Winchester, Va.; he went out under Thomas Kinney, as Captain. Was married in January, 1870, to Miss Brumback, of Plymouth; they have four children, two boys and two girls—James K., born Dec. 21, 1870; Frank, born Jan. 9, 1872; Edessa, born July 2, 1874; Mary E., born July 19, 1876. Mr. Nimmons has a nice farm and a very pleasant home, only three miles south of Plymouth, on the Shelby road.

PARKER, HURON M, merchant, Plymouth; was born in West Haven, Ohio, Sept. 24, 1845; in 1857 the family came to Plymouth; he learned the wagon and carriage trade of his father, and has since been in other branches of business; has been connected with the dry-goods trade of Plymouth for several years; on July 17, 1875, he opened his present business, which comprises dry goods, notions, and in fact everything pertaining to a first-class establishment. Mr. Parker is regarded as one of Plymouth's reliable men; is on the north side of the public square.

PARKER, SAMUEL, proprietor carriage and wagon factory, Plymouth; was born in Meriden, Conn., in 1803; in 1833, he came to New Haven, Ohio, and opened up a wagon and carriage shop, having learned the trade in 1821. In 1857, moved to Plymouth, and there carried on the above-named business. Mr. Parker is one of the successful business men of his day, and is counted as one of the best of citizens. He has been a stanch member and support of the Methodist Episcopal Church here for over thirty-nine years, having become a member in March, 1840. Mr. Parker has raised a family of children that he may well feel proud of, as they are all industrious, hard-working and honorable citizens. About nine years ago, Mr. Parker turned his business over to his son, Samuel R.

PARKER, SAMUEL R., carriage and wagon manufacturer, Plymouth; was born Jan. 24, 1848, in New Haven, Huron Co.; he came to Plymouth with the family in 1857; he learned his trade and business of his father: he took great pains while learning it, and fully understands it in all of its branches, besides being the largest and best establishment in town; he keeps constantly on hand other and cheaper work from the large factories in the cities, and can accommodate his patrons with all the popular styles and prices; his own work recommends itself wherever used. He is regarded by his many friends and patrons as a reliable and good business man, and as a successor to his father will do credit to the business which he represents. Warehouse and shops corner of Plymouth and High streets.

PACKER, J. H., school teacher, farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Plymouth; was born in 1847, in the State of Pennsylvania; in 1849, the family came to Ohio; he lived on the old homestead, on the Bucyrus road near the B. & O. R. R., in Plymouth Township, till he was about 8 years old, when he went to Shelby, where he attended school for several years, after which he attended the Savannah Academy for a period of four years, when he entered the University of Wooster, Ohio, where he graduated in 1871; soon after graduating, he was engaged by the School Board of Galion as Principal of the high schools of the town, which position he held for two years, when his health failing made it necessary for him to seek outdoor exercise, and he came back to Plymouth Township, and in the spring of 1876 purchased his present farm, about one mile south of Plymouth, on the Bucyrus road. He is a member of the Township School Board, and a good and efficient member of the Presbyterian Church in Plymouth. Mr. Packer is a thorough-going business man, and has one of the finest farms in Plymouth Township, and as a farmer is a success, as also a successful school teacher. He was married in 1872, to Miss Mary L. Ammerman; they have one child, Mildred E., born in January, 1875.

RALSTON, JAMES, farmer; P. O. Plymouth; was born in Washington Co., Penn., in January, 1799; came to Richland Co. April 13, 1814; he lived twenty years in the vicinity of Ashland; in 1834 he removed to his present farm about three miles west of Plymouth; there was but little improvement on the farm when he came here, and by hard and honest labor he has succeeded in making for himself a fine farm and a pleasant home; Mr. Ralston is perhaps the oldest settler in the township now living, having been in the county over sixty-five years; he has never been out of the county since he moved here, more than four weeks at a time; he has lived through the "pioneer" days, and fully understands the term "pioneer;" they first settled in Montgomery Township; there were but seven other families in the township when they moved in; the first thing that they could get money for was "ginseng"; about 1819 they began to find a cash market for their corn by selling it to distilleries that had come into the county; they paid from 20 to 25 cents per bushel for it; Mr. Ralston at one time sold 160 bushels of wheat at 3 shillings per bushel, and waited a year for his pay, to get the cash for it; they used to trade wheat, rye and corn to the distilleries for whisky, and then trade whisky for other merchandise at the lakes, and sometimes got money enough out of it to pay their taxes with; they were not high, only about $2; they could realize about 50 cents for wheat in trade; had to go to Knox Co. to mill, on horseback; he did the milling in this way for twelve of the family; usually took five days to go and come; they came soon after the war, and were compelled to move into a little log cabin about thirteen feet square, with no chimney or chamber; the first coffin that was made in the neighborhood Mr. Ralston's father helped make; they split a walnut log, hewed and planed it, and made a box, which they thought was pretty nice; he well remembered old Johnny Appleseed; he had a nursery near where Mr. Ralston lived. Mr. R. was married first in 1824, to Miss Murray; they had two children; she died in the spring of 1827; he was married again in December, 1828, to Miss Lincoln; they have eight children now living—one son in Tennessee, one in Texas, one in Illinois, and one in West Virginia; one son was accidentally killed in Montana Territory; he was Sheriff of the county where he lived, and went out to quell a riot, and was shot by mistake; one daughter in Indiana, and two in Richland County. The first salt they got he and a neighbor took maple sugar in sacks and went down to Huron, following an Indian trail down the river, and traded it for salt and carried it home, nearly fifty miles; there were no houses till they reached what is now called Milan.

REYNOLDS, BENJAMIN, farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Plymouth; was born Jan. 26, 1820; at an early day the family lived near Mansfield; the country was very wild, and the woods full of game, such as deer, turkeys, bears and wild hogs; they moved near where the town of Shiloh now is; Mr. Reynolds remembers well when the land that Shiloh now stands on was an entire wilderness, and the brush and timber were so thick that they could scarcely see through it, and the wolves would make night hideous with their deafening howls; he first moved to Plymouth in 1854; his first purchase of real estate was in Ripley Township, Huron Co.; he bought 50 acres at $8 per acre; he now has a very fine farm and residence only three-fourths of a mile south of the town, which makes it a desirable location, both as to church and school privileges. He was married in 1834 to Miss Sarah Jane De Witt, of Huron Co., Ohio; they have five children now living. Mr Reynolds is one of the solid men of the township, and has been a member of the M. E. Church in town for fourteen years; their children are all grown up, and they are a fine and respectable family. When Mr. Reynolds first started out for himself, it was with his ax, to cut and split rails, and thus got a start in this world by hard and honest labor. His son, W. G., now lives about two miles south of his father's, and has a nice little home of 25 acres, all well improved. In 1876, he was married to a Miss Parsel, of Plymouth Township; they have one child—William Orrin, born June, 1879.

ROGERS, WELLS, boot and shoe dealer, Plymouth; was born in Delaware Co., N. Y.; came to Ohio in 1832; moved to Plymouth in 1851, and opened a grocery store and continued in this business till 1863, when he retired for a short time. In 1864, he enlisted and commanded Co. H, 163d O. N. G., and did service under Gen. Butler, in and around City Point and Petersburg; in the fall of 1864, he returned home, and the following year engaged in the boot and shoe business, and has remained in it to the present time. He has occupied nearly all offices of trust in the gift of the people, from Mayor to Councilman, and has been a member of the School Board for more than twelve years, and perhaps has done as much toward making the schools of the town what they are as any other man in Plymouth. He was married first in 1854, to Miss Braven, who, a few years after, died, when he married for his second wife a Miss Day, in 1862, daughter of Esq. B. F. Day, of Plymouth; they have four children—Hattie, born in 1855; Mack, born in 1859; May, born in 1867; Nellie, born in 1877. Mr. Rogers' store is situated on the north side of the public square. He is regarded as a good, reliable and thorough-going business man.

RUCKMAN, JOSEPH, farmer; P. O. Plymouth; was born in Hampshire Co., Va., in 1811. The family came to Plymouth Township in 1817, and entered three quarter-sections of land under the dollar and a half per acre act; there were only one or two other families in the township when they moved here. The Indians were very numerous, and used to camp near where they now live. He tells a story of a squaw who came to the house one very cold day to warm herself, and had her "pappoose" tied to a board. As she came into the house, she left it standing up against the house, out of doors, in the cold and snow, and an old sow that belonged to Mr. Ruckman came along and rooted it over, and was in the act of making a dinner of the pappoose, when the old squaw heard a noise and went out in time to rescue her little one. He tells about going to Coal Creek to mill, some thirty miles distant, where they had a water mill; they would have to go on horseback, and would take two days for the trip; they had their horses trained so they would carry a sack of corn on their backs through the woods and not brush it off. There wasn't an acre cleared between his house and town, and he remembers well when Plymouth was first laid out for a town. He owns a part of the old homestead. His father was the first to propose to establish a Baptist society, and the first meetings were held in what is now Auburn Township; the society was organized about 1820, and the Presbyterian Church was built near their land; built of logs; the following lines were found tacked up on the church-door:

"Rusty-looking church, without any steeple;
Money-catching priest and a scurvey sett of people."

At one time, when the people of Plymouth wanted guide-boards, the Supervisor put up some rather rude-looking ones in town, and the citizens thought they would better the first ones, and they therefore put up a new set; John Webber came along and saw the boards, and went into a store and wrote these lines and put them on the "guide-boards:"

"If finger-boards direct the way
To hell or Tartaris,
Oh, great God, we all must say,
'Twill go hard with Paris."

Mr. Ruckman has lived and grown up with the country, so to speak. Was married, Nov. 28, 1840, to Miss Elizabeth Young; they have ten children—Alzina, born July 29, 1842; Peter, Feb. 20, 1844; Josephine, April 25, 1846; Lavinia, Nov. 8, 1848; Dolisca, Aug. 27, 1850; Emma, Dec. 3, 1852; Laura, March 26, 1855; Benton H., Aug. 21, 1857; Ethan A., Dec. 13, 1859; Nora P., Jan. 31, 1862; they have lost three children, as follows: Alzina, died July 9, 1850; Dora, April 14, 1866; Laura, Dec. 21, 1877. Mr. Ruckman and his family are well known throughout the country, and they have all seen as hard times in their day as any one; he now lives to enjoy his fine farm and pleasant home. The farm was in Auburn Township, but now, since the change of boundaries, is in Plymouth Township.

SEILER, M. K., harness-maker, Plymouth; was born in Dauphin Co., Penn., Sept. 18, 1842; the family came to Ohio when Mr. S. was quite young; he received his education at Plymouth; in 1858, commenced to learn his trade. In September, 1861, he enlisted in Co. D, 32d O. V. I.; he remained in this company till September, 1864, and participated in the following battles: Green Briar, W. Va., Alleghany Mountains, McDowell and Cross Keys, after which they returned to Winchester, Va., thence to Harper's Ferry, where they were captured on Sept. 15, 1862. (See history of the regiment.) Mr. Seiler endured many privations and hardships incident to war, and was a brave and valiant soldier; on their return up the Mississippi River, they had orders not to stop at Ft. Pillow, or they would all suffer the same fate as did the brave boys who were there; he was with Sherman's army during the battles and siege of Atlanta, he receiving a shot in the shoulder which laid him up for a time; after his discharge, he went to Little Rock, Ark., where he worked in the Government harness-shop till June, 1865, when he returned to Richland Co., where he has lived ever since, and to-day is numbered as one of the business men of the town, and his work gives satisfaction wherever used. June 6, 1866, he was married to Miss Clara E. Hull; they have three children—Charles, born Dec. 6, 1869; Ross, Feb. 23, 1876; Grace, Feb. 25, 1878.

SCHEAFFER, J. E., Plymouth; was born in Pennsylvania in 1845. April 13, 1861, he enlisted in Co. E, 1st Penn. Battery; there remained until Aug. 21, 1863, and participated in the following battles: Green Briar, W. Va., and Bull Run, where he was wounded on the 30th day of August, 1862; then he returned to Pennsylvania, and, in 1864, started West; in September, 1864, he hired to the Government to pack provisions, with headquarters at Leavenworth, Kan., where he traveled all through the territory and crossed the Rocky Mountains twice; was in Salt Lake City for ten days; in February, 1867, he returned to Pennsylvania; in December of the same year, he went to Crestline, Ohio. Was married, Dec. 22, 1868, to Miss Clara McKean, of Leesville, Ohio, whence he moved to Plymouth, Ohio, and began to work at his trade, manufacturing harness, saddles, etc., where he now lives, and is regarded by his numerous friends and patrons as a reliable and worthy man; they have two children—Frederick, born Sept. 29, 1869; Cora May, Aug. 10, 1873. Mr. A. McKean is a harness-maker with Mr. Scheaffer.

SHOUP, JOHN J., farmer; P. O. Shelby; was born in Pennsylvania in 1844; he has always lived at home and has helped to make the farm what it is to-day. Was married, Oct. 3, 1871, to Miss Adaline Miller, of Cass Township; they have one child—Martha J., born Sept. 2, 1873. His father, John Shoup, was born in Franklin Co., Penn., within nine miles of Hagerstown, Md., Oct. 31, 1812; was raised on the farm till about 14 years of age; he then commenced to learn the carpenter's trade; in June, 1833, came to Richland Co., where he remained two years, and returned to Pennsylvania; in 1845, moved back and located near his present farm, and, about one year after, he bought his farm; the old log house still stands there that was built nearly fifty years ago; the land was wild and very wet; his corn-field is now where what was known as the "big marsh," and used to be considered worthless. They have quite a curiosity in the shape of a dirk-knife, which they found in a limb of a large tree, about seventy feet from the ground; they cut it down for rails, and, on trimming it up, they cut the limb and split it, and there lay the dirk-knife inside of the limb, and how it came there is a mystery yet unsolved, as the limb had the appearance of being nearly solid. They have a very productive farm; have raised eighty bushels of shelled corn to the acre, and thirty-six bushels of wheat to the acre. Was married, Nov. 16, 1837, to Miss Logue; they had ten children, four of whom are now living. Mr. Shoup remembers well when the old log court house and jail was standing in Mansfield, and when they held court in it; his family all live with and around him; they moved from Pennsylvania in wagons; were three weeks coming through; his farm is five miles south of Plymouth and is as fine and productive a farm as there is in the township.

SMITH, S. S., DR., manufacturer of Dr. Smith's King of Cure; was born in Canada Dec. 12, 1822; the Doctor came to Ohio in 1850, and to Plymouth in August, 1864; commenced the study of medicine when quite young, and in 1861 commenced the practice; he has read a great many medical works, and is pretty well posted in medicine of both schools, having spent many years in the study of each, and finally settled down on Homœopathy; he attended the Western Homœopathic College, of Cleveland, Ohio, in 1862–63, since which time he has been following his profession; at the commencement of his practice, he found the need of a reliable agent to act upon the secretions, and not finding it in the general catalogue, he began to study up a remedy. As a result of his years of study and practice, has succeeded in placing before the public and profession his "King of Cure," which is well known where the Doctor has been making and prescribing it to his patients, improving and testing its merits for over ten years before putting it into market, except within the bounds of his practice, where it has won for itself a reputation at home never before equaled by any other remedy, as is shown by the thousands of testimonials which it has received. The Doctor is well known throughout the community, and has been very successful.

SYKES, W. H., Dr., physician and surgeon, Plymouth; he was born in June, 1836, in Genesee Co., N. Y., and was raised a farmer; the family moved West when the Doctor was quite young, landing in Huron Co., Ohio. In 1857, he attended the University of Michigan, at Ann Arbor, receiving the degree of M. D. in 1858; after practicing some eight years, he again took another college course, this time at the Cleveland Medical College, and received again the degree of M. D. In 1865, the Doctor came to Plymouth and has practiced medicine here ever since, and, it is safe to say, with marked success, he being well known throughout the country as a good and reliable physician, and the only one in town who makes a specialty of surgery, consequently he gets the graater portion of this branch of the profession. He was Assistant Surgeon in the 166th O. N. G.; was in the hospital service for a long time. In 1860, he became a member of the Delamater Medical Society, and, in 1870, of the Ohio State Medical Society; also, in 1874, of the American Medical Society. Was married first Sept. 30, 1860, to Miss Sarah A. Stewart, of Bergen, Genesee Co., N. Y.; they had three children—Ellen Ida, born June 18, 1863; Royal D., June 9, 1866; William S., March 15, 1876. Oct. 10, 1876, Mrs. Sykes died. Jan. 12, 1878, the Doctor was married to Miss Eliza Bevier, of Plymouth.

TRANGER, SAMUEL H., Sr. (deceased); he was born on the west bank of the Delaware River, forty miles north by northeast of Philadelphia, Penn., on Oct. 2, 1795; he was raised a farmer, and fully understood it in all its branches, as his prosperity and after-life would indicate; in his youthful days, all farmers of that vicinity did all their marketing and trading at that city; he always did a great deal of teaming to Philadelphia with four, and sometimes a six-horse team. In 1825, he was married to Miss Susannah Maust, with whom he lived happily for a period of more than fifty-four years; but in May, 1879, she was called from his side by death, at the advanced age of 80 years 3 months and 2 days, preceding him to the grave a little over five months; on Nov. 7, 1879, he was called to the spirit-world at the age of 84 years 1 month and 5 days; he said he was ready: he had no regrets; he had done all the good he could, and was ready to go to the Father. There were born to Mr. and Mrs. Trauger five sons and four daughters; two of the latter died in early life; the remaining seven children were present and cared for them in their last affliction and death; they lie side by side in Green Lawn Cemetery. In 1835, he and a cousin went West to buy land; his cousin bought near Toledo, but Mr. Trauger returned and bought in Plymouth Township, three miles southwest of the village, of Col. Woolf, the best quarter-section of land in the vicinity; it was all heavy forest. In April, 1836, he moved his family of nine persons, by wagon, from the place of his birth, over bad roads, swamps, rivers, hills and mountains, about 600 miles by the route traveled, to the farm on which he resided for forty-three years; he then in May erected his first cabin, near the "big spring;" the neighbors all worked till the house was ready to be occupied, and then for about twenty years the destruction of timber went on; it was the heaviest-timbered land in this vicinity; there was one poplar-tree from which was sawed 13,000 feet of lumber, by accurate measurement of the owner of saw-mill; the largest oak-tree measured twenty-two feet around at eight feet above the ground, and was fifty feet without a knot or limb, and many other trees nearly as large. This farm is one of the best in the State, having been awarded the first premium at three different contests for the best farms in Richland Co., in the years 1853–55. He was an experienced farmer; he raised a field of 8 acres of wheat that averaged 64¼ bushels to the acre, and has produced over 100 bushels of corn to the acre. In the forty-three years he lived on the aforesaid farm, he lived well, and contributed liberally to many charitable institutions, and the poor never failed to be noticed by him; every Thanksgiving Day he donated a grist of flour to them; he also gave much to churches; at one donation, about thirty years ago, he gave $600, which, with the other subscriptions to the same church, amounted to over $1,000 for the building of this church; besides all his liberal donations to charitable purposes, he distributed over $20,000 among his children. He was the first to be called, out of a family of six, two older and three younger than he—the oldest being 89. When young, he was a very prominent man in the community; at the age of 21, was chosen Chaplain of a militia company, which commission he held till he moved to Ohio. In his death the community sustained a great loss. He was a good citizen—honest as the day was long; was a kind neighbor; obliging, friendly, warm-hearted and true; every one who knew him esteemed him.

TRAUGER, SAMUEL, Jr., manufacturer of agricultural implements, Plymouth; was born near Philadelphia, Penn., on the 26th day of February, 1832. In April, 1836, he, with his father's family, came to Ohio, the whole distance about six hundred miles, by wagons, and settled on a farm three miles southwest of Plymouth. When 18 years of age, he began for himself by teaching school in the winter and carpentering in the summer. This mode of life he continued for seven years in the States of Ohio, Illinois and Iowa. In the spring of 1855, he bought of the Government 310 acres of land in Boone Co., Iowa, about twenty miles from the capital of the State. Mr. Tranger then returned to Ohio and taught school the following winter, and in June he started for Lake Superior, but at Detroit, Mich., he learned unfavorable news which changed his course, and he there took a boat for Chicago; he afterward went to Iowa and was engaged in various business. In May, 1860, he in company with forty others outfitted near Des Moines, Iowa, and traveled by wagon to what was then called Pike's Peak gold regions, a distance of about eight hundred miles, camping on the plains at night and doing their own cooking. They arrived at Denver, Colo., June 20. He and twenty others went on an exploring trip about eighty miles into the mountains, passing among and through the snow drifts larger than houses, crossing the range at Long's Peak, from which a magnificent view was had of mountains, valleys, plains, groves and cities, for a distance of more than a hundred miles. In the mines every foot of paying ground was claimed and held at fabulous prices. After searching a month for something that would pay, he and others purchased ranch claims in the valley and bought stock of emigrants and at the auctions in Denver, and drove it from the ranch to the mines; they pastured the year round, cattle getting fat in the winter; snow never lies on the ground more than two days at a time until there will be places where stock can graze again. While snow is on the ground, the stock have to live on "sage-wood" bushes and brush along the creeks. They also marketed hay and vegetables in the mines. While there, he descended a shaft where quartz was being mined, wishing to see one of the miners that was 125 feet under the ground. It appeared to him as though he had climbed a thousand feet and causes an unpleasant feeling to go into these places. Yet thousands go deeper every day. The mines in this country are mostly quartz mines. There being but little rainfall, and the main dependence for moisture is snow, which falls in the spring; people have to irrigate their land to raise crops. It consists of digging long ditches from the streams that come out of the mountains. In the spring of 1864, Indian troubles having begun, Mr. Trauger returned home. In 1865, he purchased 150 acres of land on the New Haven Prairie, intending to raise stock, but the war closed at that time and prices of stock declined. Then he, in company with a brother and S. B. Day, now of Mansfield, bought the "Plymouth Foundry and Machine Shops." After running them successfully for more than a year, they sold out to parties who moved the shops away. Then a joint stock company was organized, with a capital of $10,000, and built a new foundry; he being a Director, Treasurer, and a member of the executive committee. After two years, he sold out his stock and retired from the company. He then made a trip to Iowa and sold his lands at about $10 per acre; also sold 200 acres in Crawford Co., Iowa, that he and his brother had taken on a debt. In 1872, he engaged in manufacturing agricultural implements, and has built up a prosperous and increasing business. He was married May 13, 1875, to Miss Sarah E. Hutchinson, of Plymouth Township; they have one child, Grace Ann, born Feb. 8, 1878.

TRAUGER, HENRY, farmer; was born April 25, 1829, in Pennsylvania; the family came to Plymouth Township in 1836, and purchased the farm that he now owns. In 1853, Mr. Trauger took a trip to California, Panama, and many other places of interest; has traveled from the Atlantic to the Pacific Oceans, and, as a consequence, is a well-informed man; his trip to the Isthmus, etc., took him a period of six months; when he returned he lived six years in Iowa, going there in the fall of 1854, as a farmer, and various other trades; run a thrashing machine for several years; in 1860, came back to the old homestead and has there remained ever since, buying the old farm of his father. Mr. Trauger raises a large amount of grain, and keeps a fine lot of stock; theirs used to be the "premium" farm of the county. Was married Sept. 28, 1876, to Miss Stoutnour, of Mansfield; they have one child, a little girl.

WAITE, T. D., blacksmith and agricultural implement dealer, Plymouth; residence, warehouse and shop on Sundusky street; was born in South Wellingham, Lincolnshire, England, April 11, 1825. A brother of his, Mr. William Waite, came to Plymouth in 1853, their being six children in the family; their father, Thomas Waite, together with Mrs. Waite, and the balance of the children, came the following year, 1854, and all located in Plymouth and vicinity. The following are the names of the families and their occupation: William, a farmer; T. D., blacksmith and implement dealer; John, carpenter; Charles, carpenter; Sarah, the only daughter, married William Loffland; George, butcher, at Shelby. The old folks are still living in New Haven Township; they follow farming; three of the boys, John, Charley and George, were in the army; John enlisted in Co. H, 163d O. N. G.; Charley enlisted in the spring of 1861, in Co. D, 32d O. V. I.; George was in the 11th O. V. C., and was all through the Western States and Territories, where he hoped to fight Indians and doing scout duty. Mr. T. D. Waite, the subject of this sketch, learned the blacksmith trade of his father and older brother, when quite a small boy, and has worked at his trade for twenty-five years, and it is safe to say that he is one of the best in the country, as he fully understands it in all branches; in the spring of 1879, he added a full line of agricultural implements to his shop, consisting of wagons, carriages, sleighs and all kinds of farming implements, and the business has been very satisfactory to him; he being well-known as a reliable man in every way, and people have confidence in him. Was married, in 1872, to Miss E. Ladow, of Auburn Township, Crawford Co.; they have one child—Jesse, born November, 1865.

WEBBER, FRED. H., farmer; P. O. Plymouth; he was born Dec. 29, 1853; was raised and always lived at home on the farm; the balance of the family have all left, and leaves him at home to take care of his mother, who is quite an old lady, and to look after the interests of the farm. He was married in 1876 to Miss Harriet Kirkpatrick, of Plymouth Township; they have one little boy—Frank, born in 1877. Mr. Webber now owns the old farm where they live, it being the old homestead. His father, Mr. David B. Webber, was born in the State of Maine in 1800; came to Plymouth Township in 1817; the family located south of Plymouth about two miles; the county was but thinly settled at that time, and they were numbered among the pioneers of Richland Co., and have passed through all the hardships, privations, etc., incident to pioneer life and a new and unimproved country; he has always been a farmer and a highly respected citizen. He was married in 1824 to Miss Lucy Conkling, of Plymouth Township; in 1837, they moved to their present farm, now owned by their son, Fred H., about three miles southwest of Plymouth; when they came on to it, it was a dense forest, and, by hard and faithful labor, he succeeded in making one of the finest farms in the Township, and a very pleasant home. There were thirteen children in their family, and they are scattered from Plymouth to California; one son, Mr. M. Webber, is Postmaster at Plymouth, and another, Mr. T. J. Webber, druggist, in the same building. Mr. Webber died Nov. 5, 1874. Mrs. Webber is living at home with her son as above mentioned; they have everything around them to make home pleasant and comfortable.

WESTFALL, HANEY, was born in Beverly, W. Va. May 27, 1796; in his early youth, he came West to Lancaster, Ohio, to live with his uncle, David Pugh, and with him served an apprenticeship at the tanning business; upon the breaking-out of the war of 1812, he enlisted in Capt. Housker's company, Ohio militia, and served until the close of the war; after the close of the war, he came to Mansfield and worked in the tan-yard of his uncle, John Pugh, which was located just north of where the European Hotel now stands. He afterward removed to Plymouth, then known as Paris, and engaged in the tanning business there for a number of years. He was married there to Hannah Concklin, who now resides with her daughter, Mrs. D. W. Gibbs, at Toledo; he died Aug. 25, 1869, on his farm, one-half mile west of Plymouth. Mr. Westfall was a man of sterling integrity and most exemplary habits, and honest and upright in all his business relations. Politically, he was a Democrat of the old Jackson kind, but, during the late civil war, differed from his old party on the question of the conduct of the war, but returned to the party at the close of the war and died in the political faith in which he was reared; at the time of his death, he was a member of the Lutheran Church at Plymouth; he was a warm and intimate friend all his life of Father John Wiler and very seldom came to Mansfield without calling on his old friend. He left one son, Jacob Westfall, who resides on the old farm, and four daughters, all of whom are married and now living and located as follows: Mrs. Starr and Mrs. D. W. Gibbs at Toledo; Mrs. Nimmons at Butler, Ind., and Mrs. Whitehead at Kansas City, Mo. Mr. Westfall always took great pride in the growth and prosperity of the city of Mansfield; the following taken from the fly-leaf of his family Bible was penned by him a few years before his death and just at the close of the war of the rebellion, viz.: "I love my family and this Holy Book first, and my beloved Government of the United States second; I hope to stand by her as long as I live; I hope she will come out of her present trouble in triumph, and the Stars and Stripes wave over every foot of her territory, and that this blamed and wicked rebelling shall be put down never to rise again. May 1, 1864. H. WESTFALL."

WOLF, M. L., miller, Plymouth; he was born in Ashland Co., Ohio, near Haysville, in 1854; he learned the trade when a very small boy; he commenced when he had to stand on a half-bushel measure to pack flour in a barrel; he came to Plymouth with his father, something over four years ago, and he and his father are counted as good men at their business as there is in the country, and their large business shows them to be men who thoroughly understand milling in all its branches. He was married in 1873 to Miss Messamore, of Wyandot Co.; they have two children—Florence Lulu, born Sept. 2, 1874; Charley, Sept. 20, 1879.

WOLF, HENRY, proprietor flouring mills, Plymouth; he was born in York Co., Penn., near Little York, in 1831; came to Ohio in the spring of 1849; he learned the trade of milling, near Haysville, Ashland Co., Nov. 1, 1875; he came to Plymouth, and first purchased and conducted a hotel in town, and, in April, 1876, he bought the mill; it has four run of stones, and his mills are known throughout the community as turning out the best of flour; the mill has been built nearly fifty years, and is perhaps one of the oldest mills in the county; it has been rebuilt and remodeled, and does not look like the same old mill. Mr. Wolf was married in 1851, to Miss Carpenter, of Ashland Co.; they have three children—M. L., born in 1854; Barbara, in 1856.

WOLF, WILLIAM H., engineer and miller, Plymouth; he was born in 1858, and has always been in the mill with his father, and has learned the business, from engineering to milling, and is a steady, industrious young man.

SANDUSKY TOWNSHIP.

BAILEY, JAMES H., farmer; P. O. Corsica; was born near Shelby, in this county, on July 4, 1830; his father removed from Adams Co., Penn., to Hamilton Co., Ohio, in 1819, and thence to this county in 1826, and, with his sons and other pioneers, aided in clearing up the forest and making old Richland what it now is. James H., when quite young, had earned enough by hard labor to purchase 76 acres near his father's farm, which he improved, and after the death of his father, in 1869, bought the old homestead; in 1871, he sold both farms and paid $12,570 for the elegant farm of 229 acres on which he now resides in Sandusky Township. His improvements on the farm have made it one of the best in the township, and he is acknowledged to be one of our most successful farmers. He was married April 6, 1865, to Miss Amanda, daughter of the late John Root, who then lived on the farm adjoining the one now occupied by Mr. Baily. Mr. Root died Oct. 21, 1869.

BAKER, EMMAUS, farmer; P. O. Corsica; was born on the farm where he now resides in Sandusky Township, on Jan. 30, 1822; his father, Joseph Baker, was born in Vermont in 1789; removed to this county in 1820, and died in 1833. Emmaus and his brothers were among the pioneers who assisted in clearing up the forests, and converting the wilderness into fertile fields; he owns the old homestead, embracing 160 acres of well-improved land, and is well fixed for enjoying life. He was married in 1847 to Matilda, daughter of James Dunlap, of Morrow Co.; she died in 1862. On March 12, 1863, he was married to his present wife, Amanda, daughter of the late Daniel Logan.

BENNETT, MARCUS W., farmer; was born in Canada West on July 11, 1817, and came to this county in 1838, settled in the vicinity of Blooming Grove Village. Was married May 20, 1841, to Miss Mary Maranda, daughter of the late Tryan Harding, and has continued to reside in the same neighborhood ever since. Tryan Harding was one of the sons of Amos Harding, who removed from Susquehanna Co., Penn., to this county in 1819, and the family were among the pioneers who took an active part in clearing up the forest and making Richland Co. what it now is—one of the best agricultural counties in the State.

BOOKWALTER, JOHN, JR. (deceased). He was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Sept. 16, 1826; came to Ohio in 1835. Was married Aug. 30, 1849, to Abigail M. Crothswaite, who was born March 24, 1823; they had the following family: Alexander, born July 6, 1850; Elvira, born May 26, 1852; John, born Dec. 12, 1853; Samuel T. and Washington S., born Sept. 14, 1859; Leroy F., born Nov. 26, 1862; Eva May, born May 6, 1868. John, Jr., died Sept. 17, 1872; Samuel T. died Oct. 2, 1855. John Bookwalter came to Sandusky Township in 1865; resided here till his death. Alexander is engaged in the study of law with James Colter; Elvira married Wm. Sherry; Mrs. Bookwalter resides with her children on the home farm in this township.

CASSEL, JOHN, P. O. Crestline; was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Aug. 26, 1815, and removed to the vicinity of Ontario, in this county, in 1833, and from thence to the farm on which he now resides in Sandusky Township, in 1843; the improvements on his land at that time consisted of a cabin house, log barn, and about 15 acres partly cleared. He has since, by industry and perseverance, made it one of the best improved farms in the country, with an orchard of choice fruit, fine buildings, etc.; it is thought he raises the best horses and pigs in the county; the old gentleman says he has all of this world's goods he needs, and feels thankful that God has blessed him and his family; he has raised ten children, nine of whom are married and doing well, and has twenty-three grandchildren.

CATON, ANDREW T., farmer; was born in Sandusky Township, this county, Oct. 17, 1844, and was married to Martha J., daughter of Philip Corman, of the same township, on Dec. 25, 1865; Mr. Caton has resided all his life in this county, and for the last six years has been the only Justice of the Peace in Sandusky Township, and one of the leading citizens of that part of the county.

COOK, SILAS, farmer; P. O. Galion; was born in Richland Co., on Feb. 19, 1821; his father, Hiram Cook, was the proprietor of Ontario, and owned considerable land around the village. In 1846, Silas became a volunteer in the war with Mexico, being a member of Co. A, commanded by Capt. McLaughlin, of Mansfield. At the close of the war, he returned to this county, and was married on Jan. 2, 1848, to Miss Mary Ann, daughter of the late John H. Evans, of Ontario. He afterward owned, improved and sold one farm in Wyandot Co.; his father at Ontario, two in Crawford Co., and was six months in California; he now owns and occupies 125 acres of excellent land, well improved, in Sandusky Township, where he is well fixed for living in comfort, having by his untiring energy succeeded in clearing up the forest and making it "blossom as the rose."

CRISPIN, STEPHEN, farmer; was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, on Dec. 24, 1818, and removed with his father, Silas Crispin, to the vicinity of his present residence in 1837. He was married in 1838, to Miss Lona, daughter of the late Levi Logan, who then lived on the farm now owned and occupied by Mr. Crispin in Sandusky Township; Mr. Logan was one of the early settlers, and died in October, 1845, at the age of 75 years; Mr. Crispin's father was born in New Jersey, near Philadelphia in 1788; removed to Washington Co., Penn., in 1806, thence to Columbiana Co., Ohio, in 1815. His grandfather came from England with Wm. Penn in 1682; the family were among the early pioneers, who, by their energy and perseverance, aided their comrades in clearing up the forest and making the country the best land in the world.

FLOWERS, WILLIAM (deceased); he was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., Oct. 8, 1796; married Aug. 1, 1819, to Fanny Leiter, who was born in Perry Co., Penn., Nov. 14, 1800; they had the following family: Catherine, born May 12, 1820; Frances, Jan. 23, 1822; Elizabeth, May 31, 1824; Susan, April 22, 1826; Sarah, Feb. 20, 1828; Anna, March 15, 1829; John, Oct. 10, 1831; Mary, March 31, 1834; William, July 27, 1836; Barbara, Dec. 3, 1838; Samuel, Feb. 2, 1841; Jacob, Nov. 2, 1845; the following are deceased: William, died Sept. 29, 1878; Frances, Feb. 3, 1874; Catherine, March 18, 1821; Elizabeth, July 9, 1825; Susan, 1871; Sarah, Sept. 29, 1874; Barbara, Nov. 29, 1879; Jacob was married Nov. 15, 1866, to Mary E. Helfrich, who was born Dec. 14, 1847, in Newcastle, Springfield Township; they reside in Sandusky Township.

JOHNSON, TAYLOR, farmer; P. O. Crestline; he was born in Madison Township, in 1843; married in 1868, to Eleanor M. Cole, who was born in Fredericktown, Knox Co., in 1847; they have the following family: Norton T., born June 4, 1869; Laverne, March 2, 1871; Johnson L., July 15, 1874; Oro Viola, Jan 14, 1878. Mr. Taylor came to Sandusky Township in 1872; he owns a well-improved farm with good buildings; he is one of the active and energetic men of the township. He enlisted in the 3d O. V. C, Co. E; he remained in the service three years and one month, and was honorably discharged.

McCULLY, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. Crestline; he was born July 3, 1817, on the farm owned by his grandfather, James McDermott, in Mifflin Township, in this county; he had removed from Mercer Co., Penn., and settled upon it about the year 1812; he died there in 1859, aged nearly 100 years. Mr. McCully was married June 9, 1840, to May, daughter of the late Samuel Simpson, of Mifflin Township; she was born March 16, 1819. Mr. McCully removed from Mifflin to Sandusky Township April 3, 1843, where he erected his cabin and commenced clearing the beautiful farm upon which he now lives. He says: "Our first house had but one room, which answered for kitchen, bedroom and parlor—one corner, carpeted, was called the parlor." He began in the woods with 140 acres of land, but by his indomitable energy and industrious habits, he afterward added to his farm till he became the owner of 500 acres of most excellent land, all well improved; he is now one of the most extensive and successful farmers in the county. His children—three sons and one daughter—are all married and living in the immediate vicinity; like their parents, they are much respected by all. In pioneer times, the Indian trail from Greentown to Upper Sandusky passed over the land now owned by Mr. McCully, and a mound, together with many Indian relics, has been found on the premises. Among these is a stone skinning-knife and a red dart. At different places in the vicinity of the mound, the earth had evidently been excavated for lead or something of value to the "red men of the forest."

MILLER, CHARLES, farmer, was born in Union Co., Penn., on Aug. 9, 1815, and removed, with his father, Christian Miller, to Orange Township, then in Richland Co., in 1829. He was married, Sept. 23, 1841, to Miss Mary M., daughter of the late Daniel Riblet, and settled in Sandusky Township in 1853, where he now resides, and is much respected by all who have formed his acquaintance.

MORKEL, CHRISTIAN, farmer; P. O. Crestline; he was born in Germany in 1823; came to America when 5 years of age. He was married to Mary Ann Purky, who was born in Lancaster Co., Penn.; they had the following family—John F., born Dec. 7, 1853; George A., Sept. 13, 1855; Sarah A., Oct. 29, 1857; Matilda M., Aug. 26, 1859; Anna R., March 12, 1861; Jacob E., Jan. 24, 1864; Mary E., Feb. 7, 1866; Caroline E., Jan. 28, 1868; Leah E., March 22, 1870; Maria M., Dec. 24, 1871; Harriet S., Jan. 26, 1874; Charles E., April 29, 1876. Matilda M., died Sept. 1, 1861. Mr. Morkel came to this township in 1855; he is one of its leading and enterprising citizens.

MORTHLAND, JOHN, farmer, was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, on Jan. 4, 1836, and removed with his father's family to this county in the fall of the same year, settling in the vicinity of his present residence in Sandusky Township. He was married in 1858 to Miss Abby, daughter of Hiram Stevens. Abraham Morthland, the father of John, was born in Adams Co., Penn., on January 17, 1811, removed to Columbiana Co., Ohio, in 1830, and to this county in 1836; he not only aided in clearing up the forest, but devoted thirty years of his life as an active minister of the Baptist Church, and died at Shelby in 1876.

PARAMOUR, MORDECAI B., farmer; P. O. Crestline; was born in Springfield Township, in this county, on July 16, 1823; his father, John Paramour, having removed from Jefferson Co., Ohio, about the year 1813, was one of the original pioneers who aided in converting the forests of Springfield Township into beautiful farms; M. B. Paramour, possessing the energy and perseverance which characterized the old settlers, has earned by his own labor and good management the means which have enabled him to own the farm on which he now resides, containing 254 acres of well improved land, from the sale of the products of which he realizes annually about $1,600, and is considered one of the most successful farmers in the county. He was married on Oct. 13, 1849, to Susan R., daughter of Joseph Cox, then living near the village of Shelby; they have raised a large and respectable family of children, and are well fixed for the enjoyment of all the happiness this world can afford.

SCOTT, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. Crestline; was born on the farm then owned by Gov. Snyder, in Union Co., Penn., on Sept. 15, 1815, and removed to Sandusky Township, in this county, in 1835; he paid $150 for 40 acres in the woods, and commenced clearing off the timber; the next day after his cabin was raised, it was thrown down by a falling tree, but it was soon rebuilt and occupied; he afterward sold his 40 acres, with the improvements he had made upon it, for $350, which enabled him to purchase an unimproved 80-acre tract, in the immediate vicinity, to which he has since added the adjoining 80-acre tract, making a farm of 160 acres, now well improved, and considered one of the best farms in the neighborhood. Mr. Scott was first married to Mary Ann, daughter of the late Daniel Riblet; she was born in 1817, and died June 3, 1858; his second wife, Eliza, daughter of the late John Bookwalter and widow of Samuel Freed, died in 1869. He was married to his present wife, Charity, daughter of Jacob Sprow, and widow of the late David L. Chambers, in March, 1876; she was born July 10, 1828.

SCOTT, JOSIAH, farmer; P. O. Galion; he was born in Sandusky Township May 4, 1843. Married, in 1869, to Mary Brown, who was born in Wayne Co., Ind.; they have the following family: Mary Alice, deceased; Lydia Idella, born June 17, 1871; Katy Ann, May 22, 1873; Sylvia Rosetta, Aug. 13, 1875; William Franklin, Jan. 3, 1878; Cora Elca, Dec. 24, 1879. Mr. Scott enlisted in the late war, in 1861, in the 1st O. Independent Battery; he was engaged during the entire war.

SHARON TOWNSHIP.

ADAMS, ANDREW, retired farmer; he was born in Bedford Co., Penn., June 15, 1820; Andrew was the fourth of nine children; Mr. Adams spent his youth on a farm; he came with his parents to Ohio, and did such work as was usual with young men of that day. He was united in matrimony to Miss Ann Zeigler, April 7, 1842; she was born near Somerset, Perry Co., Ohio, and came with her parents to Blooming Grove Township, Richland Co., about 1817, being among the first settlers of that county; they have had five children, three of whom are living, viz.: William H., farmer, in Plymouth Township; John A., farmer in Plymouth; Sarah M., married to George Souders, farmer, and lives in De Kalb Co., Ind. Mr. Adams started with small means. He helped to clear up a large amount of land in the county, and, by diligence and economy, he has acquired considerable property.

BALLARD, ASA N., A. B., M. D., one of the practicing physicians of Shelby; he was born in Clinton Co., Ohio, Oct. 17, 1842; he spent his younger days on the farm. In October, 1861, he enlisted in Co. D, 48th O. V. I.; served four years and eight months, being retained six months after the close of the war for garrison duty in Texas, during which long period he missed but few days' duty; he took part in four sieges, ten hard-fought battles, besides many skirmishes, a full share of marching, etc.; the principal engagements were Shiloh, Corinth, Holly Springs, Chickasaw Bluffs, Arkansas Post, Vicksburg, Jackson, Sabine Cross Roads, La., Pensacola, Fla., Fort Blakely, and Mobile; he re-enlisted in February, 1864, but, before getting his furlough, was captured in the battle of Sabine Cross Roads, La., April 8, 1864; marched about two hundred miles to Tyler, Texas, where he, with over three thousand others, were kept for six and a half months almost exclusively on Indian meal and beef diet, in a stockade inclosure, with mother earth for a bed and a Texan sky for a covering; after his release, he was commissioned Second Lieutenant in December, 1865, and at once detailed for staff duty, in which capacity he traveled through Texas, but most of the time was Acting Ordnance Officer of the Eastern District of Texas, with headquarters at Galveston; upon arriving at Columbus for final muster-out, May 22, 1866, he was commissioned Captain by brevet. He then attended and taught school alternately until he completed the classical course at the National Normal School, in 1871; for a few years following, he superintended public schools, closing his labors in that direction as Principal of the Eighth Ward, Indianapolis. He married Miss Mary Harrison, of Morrow Co., Ohio, in 1873. While in Indianapolis, he began the study of medicine under Dr. J. B. Hurd, but resided in Cincinnati while attending medical lectures, practicing in the Free Dispensary during vacations, until he graduated at Pulte Medical College in 1876; in March of the same year located in Shelby, where he enjoys a good practice.

BARGAHISER, JACOB L., farmer; was born in Richland Co. Nov. 29, 1834; his father, Levi Bargahiser, was born Dec. 5, 1791, in Pennsylvania. When he was 12 years of age, he came to Ohio with Martin Ruffner; he remained in the cabin when Ruffner went to the Zimmer family and was killed by the Indians, of which a full account will be found in another part of this work. He entered the southeast quarter of Sec. 6 in 1815, and about 1818 or 1819 he commenced the first clearing. He was married to Susanna Eshelman, of Licking Co.; they had five children, three of whom are living, the subject of this sketch being the youngest; he died Dec. 26, 1868; his wife survived him until May 25, 1878. Jacob was married to Sarah E. Price Sept. 4, 1856; they have seven children—Andrew, Levina D., Lorenzo D. and Susanna, living; Levi, Isaac M. and Frankie are dead. Mr. Bargahiser is a Director of the Buckeye Insurance Company, and is what is termed a solid farmer.

BLOOM, S. S., attorney at law. He was born in Waterford, Juniata Co., Penn., March 11, 1834; he never knew a mother's fostering care, and at her death, quickly following his birth, was moved to his grandfather's family, Mr. John Stambaugh, near Blain, Perry Co., Penn., where he spent his entire youth on the farm. His grandfather dying when he was 19 years of age, he soon came to Shelby, Richland Co., where his father had settled in 1836, but where he died in 1843. He was married to Miss Anna M. Stambaugh, a lady of the same name but not the same family as his grandfather. In March, 1856, moved with her to Shelby; his wife and infant son dying in August, 1857, he was again left alone in the world, but this gloom cast so early upon his life, did not deter him from pursuing the even tenor of his way. In 1859, he was again married to Mrs. Jennie M. Smily, daughter of the late Robert Mickey, with whom he is still living, happy and contented, surrounded by the children which have blessed their union—a son and two daughters. In 1858, Mr. Bloom was elected Mayor of Shelby by the votes of both parties, for, though a Democrat, his party has always been in a large minority in his village and township. He continued to be re-elected until the spring of 1863, when the party lines were closely drawn, and he was defeated for a sixth term by a few votes. During this time he also held the office of township clerk for five years, and Justice of the Peace for three years; in 1863, he was nominated without opposition to the Legislature, and was one of the few who were that year elected upon the Democratic ticket in the county. He served two years in the House of Representatives, with only eighteen Democratic colleagues. In 1865, he was re-elected by a handsome majority. During the two terms he served on the Committee of Agriculture (being then a farmer), and also on the Committee on Benevolent Institutions. During his second term, having been admitted to the bar, he served on the Judiciary Committee; he also raised on his motion a special joint committee on insurance, of which he was made chairman, to which committee all bills relating to insurance were referred. His labors on the last-named committee were untiring, and finally culminated in State supervision of insurance, and soon after, the creation of the present insurance department in the State government, so fraught with good results to the people of the State. During the war, he was a warm advocate of its vigorous prosecution, and, as a friend of the soldiers, he may well be proud of his record. In 1866, he first introduced House Bill No. 3, to provide a bounty for veteran volunteers, who had not heretofore received a local bounty, and, later in the session, House Bill No. 200, requiring Assessors to make returns of necessitous soldiers' families, and estimate the amount required for their relief. In addition to this, he had a resolution passed for the investigation of the condition of soldiers in the hospitals, and in his own counties he encouraged enlistments by speeches and otherwise. While at Columbus, all business passing through his hands, for soldiers or their families, and at home, in the distribution of relief funds, was performed gratuitously. His entire life throughout the war period bears the record of a true patriot, and of a man who felt the importance of the issues involved in the vexed questions growing out of our internecine conflict. In public life, Mr. Bloom has never shrunk from avowing the moral sentiment which governed his private actions, being a member of the Lutheran Church. In 1864, he was admitted to the bar, and had built up a good and growing practice in the State and United States Courts, until he was again elected to the Legislature, Nov. 11, 1868; he became the founder of the Shelby Independent News, which has remained under his editorial control ever since, in connection with his other business. In 1875, he was President of the Democratic District Congressional Convention in Mansfield, and by his skill and ability in managing that body through a two-days turbulent session, won distinction as a presiding officer. In 1877, he was nominated against strong competitors for a third term in the Ohio House of Representatives, a distinction granted to no other candidate in the county for the past fifty years, and subsequently elected by an overwhelming majority, and in January, 1878, took a seat in the Sixty-fifth General Assembly, a body which had the great work before it of completing the codification and consolidation of the laws of Ohio since the organization of the State, of which project he had always been an ardent and enthusiastic supporter. Of his course during this session we find the following, cut from a Columbus paper published at the time, which is all that need be here said on that subject. The writer says:

"If there is one member deserving of more credit for actual labor and industry in pushing forward the business of the House than another, that gentleman is the Hon. S. S. Bloom, of Richland Co. You will always find him occupying his chair, which is just in front of the Speaker's stand, in the front row of seats, generally employed, with pen in hand, busily engaged in writing, and if not, paying the strictest attention to the business before the House. He is among the first of the members who puts in an appearance in the morning, and the last at leaving on an adjournment in the evening; nor does he merely come to be seen and to put in his time reading newspapers or in frivolous conversation, as do too many of the people's representatives. Mr. Bloom, on the contrary, is a worker; he is never idle. He is either engaged in the committee-rooms, or participating in the discussions on the floor. Having been a worker all his life, he has illustrated the injunction, 'Whatsoever thy hands find to do, do it with all thy might,' and he knows no abatement of energy in the public service. He examines, with scrutiny, every topic of legislation, and is always ready with his strong reasons and sound arguments, to defend or enforce any course of action he has decided on pursuing. He has made the codification of the laws a specialty, and, being a member of the Joint Committee on Consolidated Laws, he has rendered valuable service toward the completion and perfection of this important undertaking. The Democracy of old Richland need not blush to own her representative, for his standing on the floor, in all the elements that go to make up a good legislator, is second to none in the House."

At the close of that session, on June 23, 1879, he had the great satisfaction of seeing his object fully completed, and the Revised Statutes of Ohio became an accomplished fact. During this session and without any effort on his part, he was again nominated for the same position, against strong competitors, who made an active canvass (which public duty forbade him doing). He was again elected for a fourth term, and, upon the assembling of the Sixty-fourth General Assembly, was nominated by acclamation by the Democratic minority as their candidate for Speaker, and was at once recognized as the leader of the Democracy in that body. His knowledge of parliamentary law and the rules of the body in which he had so long served, and his knowledge of the new code of Ohio, made his services invaluable to his fellow-members, of which all the members of the House freely availed themselves on all occasions. His candor, earnestness and courteous treatment of all his fellow-members won their united esteem, and, aside from political questions, he wielded, perhaps, more influence than any other member of the House. His enlarged experience and general knowledge of men and things, coupled with a broad and liberal mind, gave him a great influence in shaping legislation, and, as the laws now stand, we doubt whether any other member of the Legislature has more generally stamped the impress of his views upon the laws of the State than has the subject of this sketch. He has still one session to serve of the eight-years service in the House of Representatives of Ohio, of which he has so long been a valuable and honored member.

BRICKLEY, D. V., boot and shoe dealer, and one of Shelby's successful young men; was born in Perry Co., Penn., and spent his youth on a farm. At the age of 21 years he enlisted in Co. F, 208th Penn. V. I. for one year; on his return home, he attended school for some time; in 1868, he went to Buffalo, N. Y.; was there one year, and then went West to Illinois and Missouri, where he remained for three years; he returned to Buffalo and remained two years, being engaged in the grocery business; in 1874, he came to Shelby, and took charge of the shoe store of S. F. Stambaugh; in 1876, he purchased the stock, and has been successful, and purchased the property known as the Davis corner, and for many years occupied by Mr. Lybarger. Mr. Brickley is well and favorably known, and by honesty and fair dealing he has established for himself an enviable reputation.

BRICKER, W. R., M. D., was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., in 1820; his youth was spent on a farm; he read medicine with his uncle, Dr. Jonathan Bricker, of Euphrata, Penn., who moved to Mansfield, where the Doctor finished his course of reading; he then attended the Willoughby Medical School, afterward graduating in the Western Reserve College, of Cleveland, Ohio; he commenced the practice of medicine, September, 1845; he has been eminently successful in his practice; he is a man of sound judgment and close observation, and is regarded by the profession as a good counselor; he has also been identified with the interests of Shelby, and is now President of the First National Bank, and for a number of years Treasurer of the Buckeye Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Shelby. He was married to Miss Esther E. Taylor Dec. 12, 1848, and as a result of their marriage they had four daughters, two of whom are living.

BROWN, DANFORTH, farmer; was born in Brook Co., W. Va., May 7, 1829; his father, James Brown, was born Feb. 19, 1794, and his grandfather, Capt. Oliver Brown, was born in Lexington, Mass., and served with distinction in the war of the Revolution; he was personally acquainted with George Washington; he was in ten different engagements. His ancestors were among the first settlers of the Massachusetts colony; in 1835, James Brown emigrated from Virginia and settled in Plymouth, where he remained for some time and then moved to Shelby, where he kept hotel, and was in the drug business for some time; he was the first partner of the late Thomas Mickey. He was married to Miss Jane McGuire in 1814; they had ten children, five of whom are living. The subject of this notice is a man of force of character; he is an advocate of any measure which will improve the community in any way. He is Township Trustee, and makes an efficient officer. He was married to Miss Emiline Cornwall, of Richland Co., Feb. 6, 1856; they had four children, three of whom are living; they are a happy family.

BRUBAKER, HARRISON, farmer, was born in this county, Oct. 30, 1840, on the old homestead, where he still lives. He spent his youth on the farm. He attended the schools of the district. He enlisted in Co. H, 84th Regiment, O. V. I., for three months. He is an intelligent farmer, social, industrious and reliable. He was married to Miss Mary Wills April 16, 1863; they have four children, one daughter and three sons —Burton D., born Aug. 10, 1865; James, born Aug. 29, 1867; Harry E., born Nov. 9, 1873; daughter, born Dec. 1, 1879. His father, Jacob Brubaker, was born Dec. 16, 1789, in Somerset Co., Penn. He was married to Miss Christina Huffman, June 13, 1816, in Washington Co., Penn. She was born June 5, 1798. He died March 30, 1870; she died May 7, 1872. They had a family of ten children, five of whom are living, and all well to do, showing that they implanted the same industry and economy in the lives of their children which they possessed. He was the first man to cut a stick of timber in what is now the public square of Mansfield, and he helped to build the first cabin there. He was engaged with a surveying party about six weeks in Richland County. He entered the land on which Harrison, his son, now lives, March 16, 1816. When he was with the surveying party, he had no shoes, and as they remained until the weather was cold, he suffered very much. Canton was where the land office was located. The surveying party's headquarters were located there, and when cold weather came they returned there. The night previous to their going, there was a fall of snow several inches deep, through which Mr. Brubaker was compelled to go without any covering for his feet. The first day's travel brought the party to where Olivesburg now stands, where there was an Indian camp. The party remained over night. The chief, seeing that Mr. Brubaker had no covering for his feet, took compassion on him and gave him a pair of moccasins to wear, so he could reach his destination.

BUSHEY, ABRAHAM, carpenter and builder, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Feb. 14, 1819; he learned his trade with his father; he came to Ohio with his parents, in 1836; they settled in Cass Township; Mr. Bushey followed his trade for a number of years in the county; in 1864, he came to Shelby, where he has since resided; he has been a successful business man, and by industry and honesty he has obtained a competence; he is one of the Directors of the Underwriters' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, of Shelby. He was married to Miss Barbara Fireoved Nov. 24, 1840, who was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Aug. 26, 1820; she had two children—Sarah A., born Nov. 14, 1841, and married Henry Wentz, Jr.; Mary J., born March 21, 1846, and married to W. S. Finecle.

BYRER, H. J., furniture dealer and undertaker is one of Shelby's successful men; he was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., October, 1841; until about the age of 17, he remained on the farm, working for his widowed mother; he then went to Uniontown, Penn., to learn the trade of cabinet-making by hand; he remained two years, and then went to Pittsburgh, Penn., to work under instructions by machinery, and remained about six months. He enlisted in the 12th Penn. V. I. for three months; after his return, he worked at his trade seven years, five years under instructions, and during the early oil excitement of Pennsylvania he went to the oil regions, where, with other business, he carried on his trade, making undertaking a specialty; his first impressions of undertaking were made when quite a child; he accompanied his mother to a funeral, and there was implanted a desire to follow the business which he never lost sight of; Mr. Byrer's first business enterprise in furniture and undertaking combined was commenced in Apollo, Penn., in 1867; he commenced life without aid, and it was a struggle for him to obtain a foothold, but once started, he succeeded by punctuality and good business habits in establishing himself; he remained in Apollo for about six years, and then emigrated to Ohio, and settled in Shelby, where he has since been engaged in successful business; he built his present handsome business rooms in 1879; the building is of brick, 25½x80 feet, three stories; the first floor is occupied as a furniture room, it is fourteen feet in the clear; the front contains two plate glass, each 68x138 inches; the second story is eleven feet in the clear, and in this story coffin trimming is done; the third floor is twelve feet in the clear; there is a No. 5 H. J. Reedy elevator which runs to the third floor; the front of the building presents a neat and substantial appearance; this building is a credit to the projector and an ornament to the town: As a professional undertaker, Mr. Byrer has few rivals and no superiors, consequently the recipient of many favors from patrons all over this section of the country. It seems to be his special object of favoring the public in Shelby and surrounding country with all of the newest appliances, and goods known in his profession with his sterling qualities, as an undertaker, he is much better prepared to take care of the dead than any other of his profession in the county. He has two hearses, and seems to take peculiar care in all things to merit the support and confidence of those calling upon him for the sad duty of burying their loved ones. In all things Mr. Byrer has shown the straightforward, energetic, honest business man, and has worked himself to the front rank as one of the solid men of Shelby. In common with all others, the writer can only wish him abundant and complete success in his business.

CLAPPER, SAMUEL, was born in what is now Blair Co., Penn., Nov. 7, 1814. When he was a child, his parents came to Ogdensburg, Stark Co., Ohio, where they lived for some time, and moved to Dover, Wayne Co., where they remained awhile and then removed to Newville, Richland Co. Mr. Clapper died a comparative young man. After his death, Samuel was taken by Mr. Herring to work in a woolen factory and learn the trade; he remained there until the spring of 1834; he then went to Bucyrus, Crawford Co., Ohio, and followed his trade for several years; in the spring of 1843, he associated himself in business with A. M. Jones, his capital being the sum of $5.75; he continued in partnership for three years, and succeeded in making some money; he then purchased the interest of Mr. Jones, and continued business there until 1866, when he sold out and purchased at Delphos, Ohio, where he remained one year; he sold at Delphos and purchased a building in Independence, Richland Co., and converted it into a woolen factory; in the spring of 1872, he sold his factory at Independence and came to Shelby, where he erected the two-story brick factory on Main street, and run it for several years. Mr. Clapper has been in the business fifty-four years; he commenced in the world without a dollar, and, in fact, he helped to maintain his younger sisters and brothers, his father being unfortunate in the loss of his property; he has succeeded, by economy and industry, in gaining a competence. On his father's side he sprang from German, and on his mother's side of Scotch extraction. He was married to Miss Susan Parcher Jan. 7, 1836; they have four children, three daughters and one son—Sylvania (married to Mr. Orweiler), Martha (married to Mr. Phillips), Mary (married to J. C. Sutter) and John, who reside in Shelby; Henry Clapper, first and only son, married Addie Austin, of Huron Co., Ohio.

COBLE, MARY, MRS., was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., July 17, 1814. Her father, Peter Gortner, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., in November, 1806, and emigrated with his family to Wayne Co., Ohio, about 1833, where he remained about three years and then went to Crawford Co. She was married to Christian Coble Nov. 10, 1833, in Wayne Co., Ohio, and, about a year afterward, moved to Sharon, where Mr. Coble had previously entered the southwest quarter of Sec. 13. It was heavily timbered and required time and work to clear it up; he succeeded in making for himself a pleasant home; he died April 15, 1870; they had nine children, eight of whom are living—Susan (married to John Nicolieu, farmer, and resides in Williams Co., Ohio), Martha (married to Marion Keith, carpenter, and lives in Isabella Co., Mich.), John (resides at Chicago Junction, Ohio), Fannie (married to George Bargahiser, farmer, Sharon Township), Elizabeth (married to Michael Crum, farmer, Sharon), Israel (farmer, Sharon), Levi (farmer, at home), Mary (at home).

COOK, GEORGE, farmer; P. O. Vernon Junction; he was born in the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, May 10, 1802; he, with his present wife and only sister, Mrs. Valentine Will, left their native place near Heidelberg on the 17th of May, 1838, traveling over land to Havre, where they embarked June 7 on the sailing vessel Burgundy, landing at New York about July 9, going up the Hudson River to Albany and down the Erie Canal to Buffalo, where they embarked on a steamer and arrived at Sandusky the latter part of July and at his present home Aug. 1, 1838. George Cook, Sr., father of the subject of this sketch, was born about the year 1770, and married a Miss Catharine Eick about 1795, and by their union had three children—George, Elizabeth and Philip, the latter dying when 2 years of age at his birthplace, about 1826 or 1827. Mr. Cook has some very old relics, among them a large family Bible, printed in German, said to have been in the family several hundred years and in an excellent state of preservation. He married a Miss Schumann, who was born January, 1811, near Heidelberg, and by their marriage had eight children, seven of whom are living—Charlotte, George, Maria, Elizabeth, Margaret, Abraham and John. He is a member of the Reformed Church; was confirmed and became a member in 1816. He owns 60 acres of land, on which remain some of the old log houses built in a very early day. He is a man of a very retentive memory, honorable and upright, and has a pleasant home.

CRALL, DAVID, farmer; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Dauphin Co., Susquehanna Township, Penn., Nov. 25, 1821; he remained with his parents on the farm until the spring of 1844, when he, with his elder brother, Simon, came to Ohio on horseback, and purchased his present farm of about 235 acres; he returned to Pensylvania and remained until 1845, when he again came to Ohio, where he has improved his farm and has become one of "Old Richland's" most esteemed farmers. He married Miss Mariah Stentz April 12, 1846; they have nine children—Elizabeth, John, Sophronia, William Rhinehart, Susan, Mary Sophia, Emily, Alice, Henry Nelson and Ann Eliza. Henry Crall, father of the subject of this sketch, was born near Harrisburg, Penn., about 1779, and married Miss Elizabeth Henshaw; they became the parents of six children—Simon, John, Elizabeth, Susannah, Henry, Jr., and David. The subject of this sketch is one of the leading members of the United Brethren Church, where he has exhibited that fidelity that has made him a man of mark in his community.

CULLEN, GARVIS, retired farmer; was born in Lincolnshire, England, July 14, 1803; he spent his time working on a farm in England; about 1831, he emigrated to the United States and remained a few months in New York; he then came to Mansfield, where he remained until the following spring, and went to Plymouth Township, where he worked on a farm for a year; he entered some land in Plymouth Township, and, some time afterward, sold it and purchased the farm where his son, John W., now resides; at the time he purchased, it was almost entirely covered with timber; he cleared the farm and improved it with handsome farm buildings. He is a good citizen, a man of quiet turn, and honest in all his dealings. He was married to Miss Mary Jackson, of Richland County, May 18, 1845; they have one son, John W., born Aug. 10, 1848; he resides on the old homestead; he was married to Sarah I. Myers Oct. 3, 1872.

DAUGHARTY, WILLIAM, farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Shelby; was born in Burlington Co., N. J., Sept. 22, 1831; his father, Daniel D., moved to Crawford Co. in 1832. For fifteen years before the rebellion he followed farming and thrashing. He enlisted in Co. H, 64th O. V. I., and served eleven months, when he was discharged on account of disability. After recruiting until Feb. 10, 1865, he enlisted again in Co. C, 82d O. V. I., and was again discharged May 24, 1865. He was married to Miss Mariah E. Hann Feb. 1, 1866. Since the war, he has been farming in Richland and Crawford counties. His father lived with him several years, and died there at the age of 98. His mother died in the 84th year of her age. His wife was born in Perry Co., Penn., Sept. 17, 1848.

DAVIS, HENRY, grain and produce dealer, Shelby. He was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, in 1822, and moved, with his father's family, to Crawford Co. in 1832, where they settled on an unimproved heavily timbered farm. Their means were limited; land had to be cleared and buildings erected, and all hands had to work to make a living. School advantages were very few and poor. At the age of 21, he set out to do for himself with no money and but very little education; after looking over the ground and fully taking in the situation, formed a resolution to try and get an education sufficient to transact any business that he might be fortunate enough to get to do, take a fair position in society and qualify himself to teach school, that he might make wages in the winter as well as in the summer, hoping, at some future time, to be able to purchase a farm and become a farmer; by diligent study, he soon succeeded in getting a certificate to teach school, and, by teaching in the winter, he was able to attend school in the summer at Ashland Academy under instruction of that celebrated teacher, Lorin Andrews, to whom he is much indebted for giving him correct ideas as to teaching and governing a school; he remained in this school three summer sessions and paid his way by teaching in the winter; in 1847, Mr. Henry Leyman, of Shelby, offered him a situation in his store, which he accepted. This circumstance threw him into a channel, and from that time up to the present he has had the confidence of the business community so far as he was acquainted, and a very liberal patronage from the public; he has had many offices of trust and profit, which he would not accept, for all of which he has always felt very grateful. In 1848, he was married to Margaret A. Stone, with whom he has lived up to the present time; they have been blessed with five children, two of whom are dead and three living, at home, constituting a happy family. He has had quite a number of partners, and has done a large business and never had a misunderstanding or difficulty with any of them. Among the most noted of his partners were Mr. David Anderson and Mr. Thomas Mickey. He was connected in some way with Mr. Mickey for twenty-five years, most of the time in general merchandising, but for the last ten years of Mr. Mickey's life, they were exclusively engaged in the produce and grain trade, and, had Mr. Mickey lived, they would probably have continued much longer. So great was his attachment for his friend that, when Mr. Mickey died, he felt like retiring from business, but has since associated with himself the firm of Fish & Stour in the produce business, under the firm name of H. Davis & Co. He has lived in Shelby over thirty years, and has been identified with her growth, prosperity and interest all this time, advocating and voting for nearly every public improvement in both the town and county. He has always been a strong advocate of education, but believed it should be broad enough to develop the muscle and energy as well as the reasoning powers of the mind.

DEMPSEY, JOHN, was born in Ireland in 1829, where he remained until 1848, when he emigrated to Ohio; he came to Shelby in 1854; prior to coming to Shelby, he sold dry goods for four years; he commenced the grocery business shortly after coming to Shelby, and by strict attention to business, he soon had a large and growing trade, adding with the retail a wholesale department, in which he was very successful. He was well known throughout the surrounding country as a reliable business man, and succeeded in bringing to Shelby a large amount of business, which had usually gone to other towns; in 1874, he sold his business and turned his attention to his farms in the vicinity. Upon all questions of improvement, he has been an advocate of advancement. He has aided in improving the town by building several of the substantial business blocks of the place. He is a Director of the First National Bank; he was Lieutenant Colonel of the 48th O. N. G., and also held the same position, subsequently, in the 163d O. N. G. Mr. Dempsey is a man of few words in business matters. He is decided in his views and is regarded as a man of sound judgment. He is entrusted with a large amount of business in the community.

DICK, HIRAM W., Superintendent of Construction on the C., C., C. & I. R. R.; was born in Bedford Co., Penn., October, 1824; he spent his youth on a farm with his parents; at about 22 years of age, he learned the carpenter trade, and, in the year 1850, he first commenced to work on the railroad, as a hand at his trade; his steady and industrious habits were soon noticed by the officials of the company; they recognized in him a man who was qualified to take charge of their interest, and they gave a position, since which time he has risen to the position of Superintendent of Construction; he has relied upon his own exertions, and has been successful, not only as a railroad man, but as a business man; he is the possessor of several farms, and has always aided in improving Shelby; he built an addition to the Mickey Block, which he had previously purchased. He is an advocate of advancement, and gives his influence to the improvement of the town. He was married to Miss Swanner, daughter of John and Agnes Swanner, nee Waugh, in 1855, and to them three children were born. Mrs. Dick was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., in 1833; her father was born in Chester Co., Penn., Oct. 11, 1800, and was married to Agnes Waugh, by whom he had nine children, three of whom are living; in 1834, he emigrated to Mansfield, Ohio, where he remained about eleven years, and where he carried on the trade of blacksmithing; he came to Jackson Township about 1845; his wife is dead; he now resides in Shelby.

DOUGLAS, WILLIAM, farmer, was born in Stark Co., Ohio, Nov. 25, 1835; he spent his young days on the farm with his parents, and attended such schools as were then taught in the winter; when he was about 19 years of age, he went to California, where he was engaged principally in mining about one year, when, on account of sickness, he returned to Ohio, and engaged in farming; he is a man of force of character, and exerts an influence in the community; his parents were English. They were married in Westmoreland, and emigrated to Stark Co., Ohio; remained there for some years, and then moved to Richland Co., and settled in Sharon Township, about three miles west of Shelby, where they died. The subject of this notice was married to Miss Annie Woodhouse March 20, 1860; she was born in Mifflin Township June 3, 1837; there were born to these parents eight children, seven of whom are living; they have a pleasant and happy home.

DUBOIS, F. A., M. D., was born in Richland Co., Ohio, May 23, 1843; his youth was spent in the country, and attending school at Mount Gilead and Wooster; when he was about 18 years of age, he enlisted in Co. H, 15th O. V. I., for three months; on his return home, he re-enlisted in the 86th O. V. I., and was in service four months as hospital steward; shortly after his return from the four-months service, he recruited Co. A, of the 12th O. V. C., and was commissioned Captain, and commanded the company until the close of the war; the regiment was with the Army of the Cumberland; at the close of the war he took up the study of medicine, and read with Dr. Baker, of Wooster, and Dr. Mitchell, of Mansfield; he graduated at the Brooklyn Medical College, of New York; he shortly after came to Shelby, where he began the practice of medicine, and in connection carried on a drug store; seeing a remunerative opening, he disposed of the drug business and gave his attention to dealing in lumber, in which he has been eminently successful; he deals principally in hard lumber, and ships to Liverpool, London and Hull, England, Glasgow, Scotland, and to Hamburg and Bremen, Germany; he was associated with Thomas Mickey in the grain business for about ten years, and during this time he purchased the two warehouses on the B. & O. R. R. on Main street; he was successful in business with Mr. Mickey, making considerable money for the firm; he is a Director in the First National Bank of Shelby, and of the Underwriters' Mutual Fire Insurance Company, and President of the Good Samaritan Aid Association of Shelby; he is an active business man, prompt in his dealings, and liberal in his views. He was married to Miss Sarah R. Mickey, only daughter of Thomas Mickey, deceased, Dec. 19, 1867.

EVANS, D. B., farmer; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Richland Co. Jan. 15, 1828, and was married to Sarah A. Kerr in 1850; he formerly worked on a farm; about sixteen years ago he began the hardware trade in Shelby, Ohio; this he discontinued recently; his wife was born in Beaver Co., Penn., October, 1830; she came the same year to Richland Co. with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jessa Kerr. Mr. and Mrs. Evans are the parents of six children—Wilba Kerr, Cara Alvaretta, Rolla B., Frank Seigal, Clara Bell and Emma Dell.

FLETCHER, HENRY, monumental works, Second street, East Shelby. He was born in Bedford Co., Penn., June 15, 1845; moved with his father, Jacob Fletcher, to Shelby, Ohio, in 1855; in 1856, he moved with his father to the farm now owned by Mr. Bloom, and remained there until the commencement of the war of the rebellion, when he enlisted as a private in the 84th O. V. I.; he served three months, was discharged and remained at home one year, when he enlisted in Co. I, 15th O. V. I., and served until the close of the war; he was in the severe battles of Chattanooga, Mission Ridge and Nashville; he went from Nashville to San Antonio, Tex., at which place he was discharged and came home, engaging with the B. & O. R. R. Co., as carpenter; he was with this company for four years. On the 3d day of September, 1868, he was married to Eliza Hershiser, who was born in London, Richland Co., June 2, 1846; by this marriage he had four children—Joseph A., born Sept. 28, 1869; Nella A., Nov. 1, 1871; Lavern, Dec. 15, 1875, and Fanny Fern, July 19, 1878. The subject of this sketch, for the past five years, has been working at the marble business in East Shelby, Ohio, where he may be found at all times.

FEIGHNER, JONAS, sewing-machine agent, Shelby; was born in Jackson Township Oct. 22, 1846; his youth was spent on a farm; he enlisted in Co. H, 64th O. V. I., for three years; his regiment was with the Army of the Cumberland and the Army of the Gulf; he participated in many of the battles of that memorable campaign, such as Dallas, Ga, Columbia, Tenn., Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville and others; he sprained his ankle at Rocky Face Ridge, Ga., and was taken to the hospital at Camp Dennison, Ohio; he returned to his regiment in the fall of 1864, and remained on duty until Jan. 16, 1866, when he was discharged with his regiment at Columbus, Ohio.

GAMBLE, HUGH, was born in Saratoga Co, N. Y., Oct. 21, 1789. His father, James Gamble, was a farmer, and Hugh received his early education as farmers' sons of those days usually did. He immigrated to Richland Co. in 1823 and entered the farm on which he now resides; he returned to New York some time afterward, and remained until 1828, when he returned; his brother John came about 1823, and his father about 1825. Mr. Gamble has held very many trusts, and was honored with many positions in the State and neighborhood; he was elected Justice of the Peace in 1834; this office he filled nine years; he was elected to the Ohio Legislature in 1835, and re-elected in 1838 and 1839; he was on several important committees; he was appointed by the Legislature Associate Judge of Richland Co., in which capacity he served seven years, presiding as President Judge for five terms; he was one of the Board of Directors of the Sandusky & Mansfield R. R., and was appointed a committee by that board to receive the transfer of the Sandusky & Monroeville R. R. to the Sandusky & Mansfield road; he was appointed by the Legislature to lay out numerous State roads, and has helped to lay out many of the county and township roads. He was a man of muscle as well as brain, as he cleared a large part of the farm he occupies. He was an enthusiastic agriculturist; he has also given horticulture considerable attention and study, and a number of the ladies of Shelby remember the beautiful flowers he brought to the town; he was the third President of the Agricultural Society of Richland Co. He has been three times married, and has several daughters who are married, and who reside in the neighborhood.

GARNHART, JACOB, farmer; was born in Perry Co., Penn., July 29, 1830; he came to Ohio with his parents, who came about 1833, and settled finally in Sharon Township in 1835; he spent his time on the farm until 1852, when he, with a party of his neighbors from Shelby and vicinity, went by team to California, where he remained for two years and nine months, being engaged principally during that time in mining; he took passage on the steamship Yankee Blade home, and when some fifteen miles from Point Concepcion, on the coast of California, the ship was wrecked, and he, with numerous others, came near losing his life; but after some fourteen days' delay at San Diego, Cal., he again got passage and returned to Shelby; he then purchased the farm on which he now lives, about two and one-half miles northwest of Shelby; the improvements were poor on the farm when he purchased, but he has succeeded in making for himself and family a beautiful home; he built the present comfortable dwelling in 1862; he keeps his farm under good cultivation. Mr. Garnhart is in all respects a self-made man; he started in life without a dollar, but by industry and economy he has been successful in life; he is a man of force of character, and has the esteem and confidence of the community. He was married to Miss Catharine Myers Jan. 29, 1856; they have been blessed with a family of two children—George F., born March 12, 1858; Amanda E., June 21, 1861.

HAWN, DANIEL, was born in Perry Co., Penn., Sept. 12, 1824; his father, Mathias Hawn, removed to Cumberland Co., Penn., when Daniel was about 9 years of age; early in life he learned the trade of carpenter, and, coming to Ohio in 1844, followed his trade for a time; later he engaged in the business which he has pursued to the present time; in 1853, he removed to Crestline, Ohio, where he remained three years, and at the expiration of that time returned to Shelby, where he has since resided. Mr. Hawn has been twice married, first to Miss Magdalena Bloom in 1847; they had three children, two sons and one daughter; his wife dying, he was again married, to Miss Mary Bloom, by whom he had five children. He brought his parents from Pennsylvania, and kindly cared for them in their old age; he is a man of generous impulses and good business qualifications; has a fine family of children, who are noted for their activity and intelligence; the eldest at home, Linda M., is by choice a teacher in the public schools, also a teacher of music; the second daughter, Eva, died in her 23d year, respected by all who knew her; Bertha and Georgia are the remaining children at home; Mrs. H. E. Kendall, a resident of Mansfield, Ohio, is the only surviving child of his first marriage; the present Mrs. Hawn is a daughter of Jacob Bloom, deceased, who was one of Richland's pioneers, a man of unusual prominence and intelligence in the community.

HAWK, JACOB, farmer and stock-raiser, was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Sept. 17, 1837; moved to Sharon Township (Sec. 19), November, 1851. Was married to Miss Sarah Will on the 31st day of May, 1868, when he moved to the farm he now occupies (Sec. 20). His father, William Hawk, was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., Jan. 12, 1812; moved to Richland Co. in 1851; died Nov. 16, 1873; Mrs. Hawk died Aug. 9, 1866. The subject of this sketch is the father of six children—William, Edgar E., Burton W., George, Daisy, Elizabeth and Clara S.

HILL, J. G., editor and proprietor of the Shelby Times. The Times, which has recently come into Mr. Hill's control, is proving to be one of the best papers in the county; Mr. Hill fully understands his business and makes an excellent paper.

HOCKENSMITH, ADAM, farmer, was born in Frederick Co., Md., Dec. 21, 1801; when he was 12 years of age, his parents moved to Mifflin Co., Penn., where they remained for some years, and emigrated to Stark Co., Ohio, where they lived and died. Adam was married to Miss Sarah Myers Oct. 9, 1828, in Stark Co., and, in 1830, they came to Vernon Township, Crawford Co., where he entered a 40-acre tract of land; they now reside on the southwest quarter of Sec. 14, Sharon Township. Mrs. Hockensmith was born in Adams Co., Penn., April 6, 1806; her parents finally moved to Richland Co., where they died. As a result of the marriage, there were born four children, three daughters and one son, two of whom are living. Sarah Ann is married to John Sutter. Ervilia Ann married to William Smith.

HOLGATE, ELISABETH, MRS., Shelby; she was born in Tompkins Co., N. Y., Feb. 5, 1821; she moved to Steuben Co., N. Y., at the age of 16 years, and remained there seventeen years, then moved to Shelby, Ohio. In 1837, she was married to William Reynolds, who was born in 1813, in Otsego Co., N. Y.; had by this marriage six children; Miss Josie, William and Altha, who are now living in Richland Co.; three died when infants. Her first husband was killed on his farm in 1842. She was married to Reuben Holgate Sept. 23, 1876, who was born in Pennsylvania in 1795, and died near Shelby, Richland Co., Ohio, April 24, 1879; she was Mr. Holgate's third wife; he was a Mason in good standing and a man respected by all.

HOLLENBAUGH, ISAAC, farmer, was born in Richland Co., Ohio, Nov. 6, 1840; his father was born Nov. 15, 1803; emigrated to Ohio in 1834, and was engaged in farming. He was married to Miss Mary Stroup, of Perry Co., Penn.; they had eleven children, ten sons and one daughter; seven living, the subject of this notice being the seventh child. He was married to Miss Emily Roush, of Richland Co., Jan. 4, 1866; they have two children—Cora D., born Oct. 19, 1868; Ira Burton, July 19, 1872. Mr. Hollenbaugh was a member of Co. F, 163d O. N. G., and was with the regiment during the time it was in service.

HOUPT, W. H., proprietor of Shelby Marble Works, importer, and wholesale dealer in all kinds of marble and granite; was born in Seneca Co., Ohio; his parents removed to Crawford Co., Ohio, where he spent his youth on a farm; at the age of 26, he went to Somerset Co., Penn., and engaged in the marble business for some two years and a half; he then came to Ohio and purchased an interest in the works and ran in partnership for about a year; in the spring of 1872, he purchased his partner's interest and took control himself; he has superior advantages in the purchase of material; he buys directly from the quarries of England, Scotland, Ireland and Canada; he purchases American granite and marble from all quarries in the United States; he has recently purchased the marble works of Plymouth, Ohio, and opened works in Bucyrus, Ohio; from the long experience of Mr. Houpt in his business, and his well-known and honorable dealing, coupled with first class material and workmanship, he has established a large and increasing trade.

HUSS, JOHN A., stonemason, Shelby, Ohio; he was born in Lancaster, Penn., Aug. 16, 1844; he came to Richland Co. in 1867. He was married to Sarah E. Craiglow Nov. 25, 1869, who was born in Jackson Township June 4, 1850; they are the parents of five children—Clara S., born April 30, 1871; Eva L., Oct. 21, 1872; Ida M., July 12, 1875; Ursa L., March 4, 1877; Daisy H. A., Feb. 11, 1879. Mr. Huss volunteered in the service of the United States at the commencement of the civil war, and remained in the army during the entire struggle; he was in thirteen hard-fought battles, and for his bravery had the office of Lieutenant conferred upon him.

KERR, ROBERT, farmer and stock-raiser; lives on Sec. 18, Sharon Township; he was born in the last year of the eighteenth century, the last month but one, and the last day but four, in Beaver Co., Penn.; in May, 1821, he moved to Mansfield, Ohio, and hired with Robert Bowlan, to make brick; he worked for him eighteen months, and never lost a day's time, a part at $7, part at $8, and the remainder of the time at $10 per month, taking one-half out in store goods. In the year 1831, he entered 160 acres of land on Sec. 25, built a hewed-log house, cleared up and commenced farming. Nov. 20, 1832, was married to Abigale King, and moved to his home April 2, 1833. By his industry and economy, he has purchased the pleasant home he now ocupies. Mr. Kerr, though an old man, is in good health, does his own choring, and can do an ordinary day's work. His wife was born in Union Co., Penn., April 2, 1811, and is living and in good health. Mr. and Mrs. Kerr are the parents of thirteen children—Catherine, born Sept. 11, 1833; Matilda, died an infant; William H., born Oct. 1, 1836, and died Dec. 18, 1836; Cornelia A., born Jan. 11, 1838; Sarah A., Feb. 3, 1840; Isaiah, Oct. 13, 1841, was a member in Co. I, 15th O. V. I.; he was killed at Dallas, Ga., May 27, 1861; Mariah, born Dec. 8, 1842; Benjamin, born Jan. 6, 1846, was a member of Co. I, 15th O. V. I., and died April 8, 1866; Rebecca E. and Joseph N., born Aug. 9, 1848: Sophronia, born Oct. 15, 1850, died Aug. 25, 1855; Abigale Y., born Feb. 10, 1853; Robert C., born April 22, 1855.

LOWE, J. S., PROF., Superintendent of Shelby Schools, and a minister in the Disiciple Church; he was born in Virginia in January, 1839, and has been teaching and preaching since he was 17 years of age, except while he attended Bethany College in Virginia. He had charge of the normal school at Geneva, Ohio, where he was very successful. He was President of the Farmers' College, College Hill, near Cincinnati, four years; he then came to Shelby, where he has resided most of the time since. He is regarded as an educator of excellent ability, and a minister of fine talents.

LYBARGER, H. R., was born in Richland Co., near where Galion now stands, July, 1820. His father, Lewis Lybarger, emigrated from Bedford Co., Penn. about 1815 or 1816, and settled near where Galion is located; at that time it was on the frontier settlements; he helped to build the block-house at Mansfield, and also the jail. Harrison first commenced in Ganges, in 1844, and remained there until 1854, when he moved to Shelby, and commenced business on the corner on which Bowman's Hall now stands; he remained there for about ten years, and sold his business and went to "West Town" and opened business on the corner now occupied by Farrar & Seltzer, where he remained until the spring of 1880, when he again went to East Side and opened the dry-goods business in the Bowman building, under the firm name of H. R. Lybarger & Son. He is the oldest business man in Shelby; he has been associated in business in the firm name of Lybarger, Anderson & Co., and J. F. Saiger & Co., and Lybarger, Farrar & Co.; he is a thorough, practical business man, and from his long experience he is well qualified to give satisfaction to his customers.

MACK, ANDREW J., attorney at law, Shelby; was born March 15, 1845; his parents are Dr. John and Sophronia B. Mack, of Shelby. He attended the schools of his native village until he arrived at the age of 18 years, when he entered the preparatory department of the Western Reserve College, Hudson, Ohio; he spent one year in the preparatory department, and then entered the freshman class in 1864, and graduated in 1868, having taken a full and complete collegiate course; soon after graduating, he entered the law office of Jenner & Jenner, in Mansfield, Ohio, and commenced the study of law; he spent the year 1869–70 in the Law Department of Ann Arbor University, and was admitted to the bar in June, 1870, beginning the practice as a partner of Jenner & Jenner, the firm being Jenner, Jenner & Mack. In the fall of 1871, Mr. J. K. Cowan was elected Prosecuting Attorney of Richland Co., but resigned soon after his induction into the office, as he had a very favorable and flattering offer from the B. & O. R. R. Co.; Mr. Mack was appointed to fill the vacancy; in September, 1873, he associated himself with Judge Joel Myers in the purchase of the Ohio Statesman, of Columbus, and removed to that city; Mr. Myers assumed the business and Mr. Mack the editorial control of said paper; this partnership lasted until the spring of 1876, when they sold their interest, and Mr. Mack returned to Shelby and immediately entered into a law partnership with T. H. Wiggins, Esq., under the firm name of Wiggins & Mack; this partnership lasted until June, 1878, when, by mutual consent, the firm was dissolved, and Mr. Mack opened a law office of his own, where he has since been engaged in a lucrative practice. As will be noticed, Mr. Mack has an extended business experience; he has had good opportunities to become acquainted with the various "dealings of men," and from his naturally quick and ready discernment, he has laid a foundation which will be of great benefit in his profession; his classical education and his experience in the editorial sanctum have qualified him fully in the presentation of his cases; he is a ready and impressive pleader, logical in his conclusions and earnest in his efforts—points essential to the success of a lawyer; he is prompt in his business, and few young men of "the bar" have a brighter future.

MARVIN, STEPHEN, is the second son of Isaac and Hannah Hoyet Marvin, born Jan. 8, 1797, in Fairfield Co., Conn.; he was of a family of fourteen children—eight brothers and six sisters; the Marvin family are of English descent; the original ancestral emigration to this country is believed to be about 1700. At the outbreak of the Revolution, there was quite a numerous family; with a single exception, all embraced the patriot side of the question, and several enlisted in the army of the Revolution; one Charles rose to the rank of Colonel. The principal inheritance of the subject of this sketch was a good ancestral name and a vigorous constitution—a will to encounter the difficulties incident to pioneer life and successfully overcome them; his father being blessed with only a small share of this world's goods, necessitated that the boy should be placed upon his own footing; accordingly, at the age of 14 he was duly apprenticed to one Ebenezer Scribner, to learn the tanner and currier business; a service of seven years completed this compact, and the "boy was his own man" With the wide world all before him, blessed with health, courage and a business vocation, the West presented to him an attraction—a field suited to his purpose. April 5, 1818, he was married to Sarah Burr Sherwood; this young couple, with love in their hearts, soon took up the line of march to the then far off Ohio; other families accompanied them in their journey, among whom were his father and the father of Eli Wilson, making a company of over twenty persons; a single wagon, drawn by one horse, was sufficient to contain the outfit of this newly wedded couple, with their faces turned to the west, intent upon spending their honeymoon in purposing more than mere travel and recreation. Deborah Moyer, mother of Mrs. Marvin, then a widow, accompanied these people, and when, after many weary days, a home of 50 acres was located and purchased in Sharon Township, Richland Co., Ohio, the cabin home was erected and life in earnest entered upon; from a wilderness home, with the log cabin and its usual accompaniments, to one of modern elegance and convenience, is a triumph for a lifetime; yet this much was vouchsafed to this worthy couple in the sear and yellow leaf of their lives. As a citizen, few men were more useful than Stephen Marvin; he established himself at his business by first tanning in tubs and vessels, pounding the bark as fine as possible, that the strength might be extracted; with years of industry came a well-established business of tanning and shoemaking, all carried on with care and profit. To Stephen and Sarah B. Marvin thirteen children were born, as follows: Angeline, Burr, Charles W., Daniel S., Edward, Hiram, Elanor, John J., Jane, Ellen, Laura L., George F. and Emily A.; ten of them survive at this writing, May 1, 1880; two died in infancy, and one (Ellen M. Conover) died July 21, 1866; Angeline, the eldest of the family, was married to Downing H. Young Sept. 4, 1837, and now resides at Norwalk, Ohio; Burr Marvin was married to Lucy Thomas Sept. 2, 1843; Charles W. Marvin to Martha Brooks Dec. 17, 1857; Hiram Marvin to Maria Hinman Oct. 22, 1854; Ellen Jennette Marvin married W. W. Conover Oct. 15, 1862; John J. Marvin married Harriet Eliza Guilford April 21, 1863; Daniel Sherwood Marvin married Caroline Sherman Dec. 21, 1863; Isabel Jane married Fritz A. Ott March 8, 1864; George F. Marvin married Harriet E. Riggs Oct. 28, 1866. In religious sentiments, Mr. Marvin was liberal, believing in the final salvation of all of God's people; he was an active member of the Universalist Society of Shelby: in politics, he was an Old-Line Henry Clay Whig, with decided antislavery convictions; hence it was that, when the Whig party did not keep pace with the public sentiment of distrust of the demands made in the interests of slavery, he was found doing battle in the front ranks of the newly formed Republican party, never swerving in his devotion to the Union, watching with earnest anxiety the results of the terrible conflict, whereby slavery sought to establish itself permanently in a government of the people. Too old to enlist in the army himself, for the overthrow of the rebellion, he had four sons who stood ready to discharge such duty; two of them—Daniel S. and George F.—joined the Sherman Brigade, and each testified full faith, and attested their devotion to the Union; Daniel was seriously wounded at the battle of Stone River, owing to the character of which he was soon discharged from the army; George F. was wounded at the same battle, although not so seriously; his services were continued to the close of the war, during which time he received five different wounds, from the effects of which neither Daniel nor George will ever recover; Charles W. was mustered into the service as surgeon of a Michigan regiment, and served with distinction; John J. enlisted in an Ohio regiment, and was down on the Potomac.

As the log cabins of Eli Wilson and Stephen Marvin were the first erected in the vicinity of where Shelby now stands, so, too, were their new, comfortable home structures the first to take the place of the log cabins, that of Mr. Wilson being erected during the summer of 1833. April 5, 1868, they celebrated their golden wedding, where children, grandchildren and numerous other friends assembled to pay their respects, and where many testimonials of sincere regard were tendered; this was truly the season of fruition that crowned Stephen and Sarah Marvin with joy and satisfaction that their lives, though frought with pioneer hardships and privations, had not been in vain; a large family had grown up around them, the wilderness had disappeared, and in its stead a thriving village of 2,000 inhabitants, with churches, schools, and all the accessories to make life comfortable, and beloved by all, because they were the friends of all. Little is left for the writer to chronicle here but the deaths of this venerable couple; Stephen Marvin died, after a brief but painful illness, Aug. 18, 1868, aged 81 years 7 months and 2 days; Sarah B. survived him nearly ten years, she departed this life March 31, 1878, aged 77 years 8 months and 5 days. Most of the children of the deceased have taken up their residences in different parts of the country; one—Jennie M. Ott—is married and has at present a family of four children, and is living near the old home, while Laura and Emily A. are unmarried, and own and occupy a part of the old homestead," where the annual thanksgivings of the family are held; Hiram Marvin, the only son resident in the vicinity, after the death of his grandfather, Isaac Marvin, Oct. 12, 1850, located upon the old farm in Jackson Township, residing with his grandmother until her death, March 27, 1858; he married Maria Hinman Oct. 22, 1854, and removed to Shelby in April, 1865; he engaged in the drug business with John Kerr, under the firm name of Kerr & Marvin, the said firm building the block they now occupy, in 1869, having carried on a successful business and earned an enviable reputation. Hiram and Maria Marvin have four children living, viz., Sarah Malinda, Laura Caroline, Hubbard Orton and Wilbur Hiram.

MICKEY, HARRISON, retired blacksmith, was born in Orange Township, Richland (now Ashland) Co., Dec. 1, 1819; he is the third son of Robert and Mary Mickey, who emigrated from Westmoreland Co., Penn., in 1817; he experienced all the trials of pioneer life from infancy, and especially so in his case, as there was a family of thirteen children, five daughters and eight sons, all of whom are living except Nicholas, who died in California in 1876, aged 58 years, and have raised families, and deserve especial mention for integrity and industry; in 1834, the "old farm" was sold; on the 14th of May the family started for their new home, and arrived next day; this farm was located in Madison Township, adjoining the Michael Newman farm on the east; there, as in earlier years, Harrison helped to clear the farm, and attended school for a short time during the winter; he knew well the value of time, and during the short sessions applied himself with diligence; a friend visiting the family when Harrison was about 8 years old, as a token of esteem gave him 12½ cents, which was his first money, and with which he purchased a spelling book: at the age of 17, he left the farm, and was apprenticed to John Swanner, of Mansfield, to learn the blacksmith trade; during his apprenticeship he associated himself with a reading club, where he spent his leisure time obtaining useful information and increasing his limited education; to use his own term, he graduated in Swanner's blacksmith-shop, with the highest honors of his trade, when 21 years of age; on Dec. 1, 1840, the day he was 21 years old, he commenced to work in the employ of Albert Minerly and Downing H. Young, in Shelby, in which place he has since resided; he some time afterward started for himself, but had the misfortune, about the time he was fairly under way, to lose his shop by fire, consuming two sets of tools; by the aid and kindness of his neighbors he was set at work in a short time; he worked at his trade until the fall of 1852, when on account of physical disability he quit the shop; after the election of Franklin Pierce, and through the advice of Dr. John Mack, Thomas Mickey and other friends, he applied for the appointment of Postmaster of Shelby; he received the indorsement of every county official, and his application was numerously signed by his neighbors, with several prominent men from other States; this was necessary, as he had rabid opposition from the friends of the acting Postmaster; he was appointed Postmaster about June 1, 1853; he filled the same acceptably to Oct. 1, 1860; during this time he acted as Mayor for nine months, filling an unexpired term; during the campaign of 1860, the Breckenridge and Lane committee asked him to contribute the sum of $10 for political purposes, but being a Douglas Democrat he wrote a scathing letter, which lost him the position; the following is the reply, and at the time it probably was more circulated than any document of the campaign:

"SHELBY, Ohio, July 24, 1860.

"SIRS: In answer to your note of yesterday, demanding $10 in consideraiton of my official position as Postmaster, to aid in making a political canvass in favor of Breckenridge and Lane, I will say that it can in no way be acceded to by me.

"Under the present circumstances, and the manner in which you make the demand, I deem it an insult and an outrage upon every principle of honor, integrity and independence, that ought to characterize the conduct and actions of every American citizen, be he high or low, rich or poor; and I cannot do otherwise than treat it as such, without a total sacrifice of the rights of conscience, and a cowardly submission of every principle of manly independence.

"I therefore spurn your demand as an offered bribe for the paltry place of a few official crumbs.

"I wear no official halter around my neck. I learned the principles of Democracy from my mother's knee; I have been a Democrat all my life, and expect to die one.

"In 1852, to the extent of my humble ability, I did what I could in contributing to the election of Franklin Pierce and sustaining the compromise measures of 1850.

"To carry out the same principles and measures in 1856, I again did what I could to aid in the election of James Buchanan, to maintain those principles and measures, so just to all sections of the country.

"And now again in 1860, if God spares my life, when a still more dangerous and formidable attack is made upon those time-honored principles of the Democratic party by fanatical disunion factionists, both North and South, and an unholy attempt is made to break up and crush out the only national conservative party—and to that end I am invited to contribute aid.

"I will do all I am able in any honorable way to sustain and carry out those principles, and uphold the nationality of the Democratic party, in the election of our noble standard-bearers, Stephen A. Douglas and Herschel V. Johnston. If I cannot do this and longer hold my official position as Postmaster of the little village of Shelby without offending the powers that be, then I no longer desire the position—they may cut off my Douglas head. 'If this be treason, then let it come!—let it come! may we profit by the example!'"

MORTON, N. S., farmer and an early settler; was born in Massachusetts Aug. 12, 1808; his parents were farmers; they emigrated to New York about 1817, where young Morton remained until he was 21 years of age; he then emigrated to Richland Co., and entered an 80-acre tract of land, now known as the Jacob Clark farm; after being on the farm for ten years, and clearing a considerable portion of it, he sold and purchased the farm on which he now resides; he is an intelligent, comprehensive man. He was twice married: his first wife was Eliza Ann Gamble, of Sharon Township, to whom he was married Aug. 16, 1830; they had six children, all living, five sons and one daughter; his second wife was Mrs. Ann E. Douling; they had nine children, three of whom are living.

MOYER, HENRY, of the firm of Brubaker & Moyer, clothiers; was born in Berks Co., Penn., in 1839; he spent his youth in the country, and, at the age of 16, he went to the trade of stonemason; in 1863, he came to Ohio and settled in Shelby, where he followed his trade, contracting stone and brick work until Feb. 1, 1879, when he purchased a third interest in the store of J. H. Brubaker; Mr. Moyer conducts the sales department and the cutting and fitting is conducted by Daniel Sipe; the firm carry a large and well-selected stock of ready-made clothing, and, also, a full line of cassimere and furnishing goods. Mr. Moyer is a salesman of no mean ability; he is an upright business man and takes especial pride in suiting the public. He was married to Miss Angeline Garber, daughter of Joseph Garber, of Perry Co., Penn., July 20, 1864; they have two children.

MYERS, ISAAC A., physician; he was born of religious parents, in Allegheny City, Allegheny Co., Penn., in August, 1839; he was the oldest son of Samuel and Maria C. Myers; about 1849, his parents removed to Ohio and settled in Ashland, where his father carried on painting; subsequently they moved to Richland Co. and located in Shelby, where the subject of this sketch now resides. At an early age, he united with the Methodist Church, and continued as such till dissensions arose in the church in Shelby, when he withdrew his membership and united with the Reformed Church, then in charge of Rev. N. H. Loose. While in Shelby, he became an apprentice to his father in painting and worked at that till 1859, when he commenced the study of anatomy and physiology, and, in 1860, entered the office of Dr. W. R. Bricker, in Shelby, Ohio, where he remained till the 18th of April, 1861, when he entered the service and was enrolled in Co. I (Capt. A. C. Cummins), 15th O. V. I., serving in the capacity of private, nurse and steward in hospital until discharged from the service Aug. 29, 1861; again enlisted as a private in Co. I, 15th O. V. I., Sept. 7, 1861, and served in various departments until discharged under special field order No. 32, Department of the Cumberland, for promotion, Feb. 4, 1863; eight days later, he received a commission and was ordered on duty at Hospital No. 23, Nashville, Tenn.; after serving in the capacity of Ward Surgeon for several months, was ordered to take charge of the U. S. general hospital train, running from Nashville to all points in the rear of the army; in this connection, he served till Aug. 4, 1864, when he was transferred to the Department of the East, by order of the Surgeon General, and, on Aug. 29, 1864, was ordered on duty at Grant General Hospital, Willet's Point, New York Harbor, by the Medical Director of the Department of the East; at this hospital, there were 1,500 patients and twelve assistant surgeons, under charge of Surgeon A. H. Thurston, of New York City; during the time he was here, his promotions were rapid, till he was made executive officer, Treasurer, etc.; in 1865, he resigned and came home to Shelby, and again entered the office of Dr. W. R. Bricker, where he remained till fall, and then went to attend the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor, where he remained six months (having attended the University of Nashville Medical Department in 1862 and 1863); returning from Michigan in 1866, continued on in the office with Dr. Bricker till the fall, and then went to Cleveland and graduated at the Western Reserve College in 1867; in the same year, entered into partnership with Dr. Brickee and continued as such for over a year, when he went West, then returned and located in Shelby in the fall of 1868. In October, 1869, the Doctor was married, by the Rev. N. H. Loose, to Miss Vince A. Matson, daughter of Uriah and Elizabeth B. Matson, and, at present writing, have two children living—E. Roy and R. Guizott. In November, 1872, went into partnership with Dr. McMillan and dissolved the same March 31, 1874. Politically, he has always been a Republican, advancing the interests of the cause and maintaining the principles of the party. In December, 1862, he became connected as a local correspondent with the Herald at Mansfield, Ohio, and also with the Shelby papers and others, writing up all points of local and general interest, as well as those of a religious, historical and scientific character.

OVERDEAR, MICHAEL, farmer, Shelby,; he was born in July, 1821, southeast of Mansfield, on the farm now owned by Mr. Campbell; he has always lived in Richland Co., and for the past twenty years, one and one-half miles south of Shelby. In 1840, he was married to Ellis Deardoff; they have had but one child—John, who was born in 1842, and who died in 1847; he has reared three girls and one boy for other people. His wife died Dec. 24, 1876. Mr. Overdear is one of the early settlers of Richland Co., and can tell of the many hardships of pioneer life.

PITTINGER, J. L., was born in Blooming Grove Township June 29, 1839; his youth was spent on a farm; when he was about 15 years of age, he went to the village of Ganges, and clerked in a store about one year; he then came to Shelby, and clerked for Mr. Lybarger for about five years; he was in the grocery and provision business, also in the lumber and in the shoe trade, in which latter business he was engaged six years. He is a Director of the First National Bank of Shelby. Mr. Pittinger is a men of quiet demeanor; he is a correct business man, and weighs matters fully before deciding upon a course to be pursued. He was married to Miss Gibson Nov. 16, 1861; they have had two children, both of whom are dead.

POST, DAVID, farmer; was born in Richland Co. March 11, 1820; his father, Daniel Post, was one of the early settlers; he emigrated from Washington Co., Penn., about 1817, and settled near Lexington; he came to Sharon about 1830, where he lived until he died in the spring of 1876. He was married, in Pennsylvania, to Miss Hannah Martin; they had four sons and three daughters. The subject of this sketch came to Shelby in 1840, and worked at blacksmithing until 1848, when he moved to the farm he now occupies, which was entirely covered with heavy timber; by hard, persistent work he has cleared his farm, and has a pleasant home. He was married to Miss Elisabeth Bargaheiser Dec. 4, 1845; they have four sons and two daughters. His wife died, and he was again married to Christina H. Hopp Oct. 16, 1861; they have three children, one daughter and two sons. Mr. Post is a good farmer, and has the esteem of his acquaintances.

POST, L. B., farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Sharon Township Aug. 26, 1846. He was married to Hattie L. Lewis on the 28th day of Dec. 1869; had by this marriage two children—Frank Ida, and Charles L. Mr. Post was born and reared on a farm, and is one of the enterprising farmers of Richland Co. His wife was born and reared in Richland Co. His father is one of the early settlers, and now lives in Sharon Township; his mother died in June, 1861.

RAYNOLDS, WILLIAM F., farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Sharon Township Sept. 14, 1857; his father died when he was but 10 years of age, and, as he was the oldest of the family, it left him with considerable responsibility. In 1866, his mother married her second husband, Robert Holgate. June 29, 1877, the subject of this sketch married Miss Libbie Feighner, daughter of Solomon Feighner, who was born in Richland Co. in October, 1858; by this marriage they are the parents of one child—Mirtle, born Feb. 13, 1879. Mr. Raynolds is an enterprising young farmer.

ROBERTS, ANNA, MRS., was born in Fairfax Court House, W. Va., March 11, 1787. Was married to Richard Roberts June 11, 1807; moved to Ohio in 1828; she had by this marriage eleven children, all living—John, born July 22, 1808; Polina, May 18, 1811; George, May 2, 1815; Benjamin, Aug. 19, 1817; Thomas, Aug. 14, 1819; Nancy Ann, Sept. 21, 1821; William, Aug. 5, 1823; Richard, Aug. 5, 1825; David, Nov. 25, 1827; Obadiah, July 23, 1829. Mr. Richard Roberts was born in Culpeper Court House, Va., June 30, 1782; he died Dec. 8, 1838. Mrs. Roberts is now over 93 years of age, is in reasonable good health, and lives with her son and daughter, Richard and Nancy, on the old homestead south of Shelby.

ROCKWELL, MARY P., widow of Samuel M. Rockwell, was born in Perry Co., Penn., Nov. 14, 1814; her father, Gen. Leiby, removed from Pennsylvania to New York, where he remained for some time, and, in Sept., 1834, came to Ohio and settled near Mansfield, where he remained two years, and then removed to what is now Jackson Township, where he resided some five years. In 1840, he moved to Indiana, where he died, in 1859, aged about 73 years. Mr. Rockwell was born in Norwalk, Conn., Dec. 2, 1811; when he was 4 years old, he was left an orphan; he was taken by his grandfather, Joseph R. Rockwell, who came to Ohio and brought Samuel with him; Mr. Rockwell took an interest in the history of Richland County, and was instrumental in having a series of articles published in the Independent News, Shelby, on the "History of Sharon and Jackson Townships." It was his intention to have a full and complete work of the county compiled. Miss Leiby and Samuel M. Rockwell were married March 24, 1836; they had nine children, six of whom are living.

SKILES & SKILES, attorneys at law, Shelby. W. W. and G. M. Skiles were born in Stoughton, Cumberland Co., Penn. W. W. Skiles was born Dec. 12, 1849: G. M., Feb. 25, 1852. Their father, John G. Skiles, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., and is of Irish descent. He was married to Sarah Jane Martin, of the same county, who is of Scotch descent. John G. is a cabinet-maker by trade, but has been engaged at farming for some years. As a result of the union of the couple, there were born seven children, four daughters and three sons, all living. They emigrated to Ohio in 1854. W. W. and G. M. were raised on a farm with their parents, attending the common schools of the district, about two and one-half months in a year, but by close application they became sufficiently qualified to teach common school in the winter, and thereby save the necessary means to enter the preparatory department of the Baldwin University at Berea, Ohio. They attended seven or eight months a year, and during the remainder of the year they taught school and worked in the harvest field, in order to pay their way. They kept up with their class the year round, and graduated June 18, 1876, being among the first in a class of twenty-six. As they intended entering the legal profession, they lost no time, and at once commenced to read with the well-known law firm of Matson, Dirlam & Leyman, of Mansfield. They were admitted to the bar, July 24, 1878, and shortly afterward opened an office in Shelby, where, by strict attention to the business which is intrusted to them, they have succeeded in obtaining quite a lucrative and growing practice. William M. Skiles was married to Miss E. Dora Matson, only child of John S. B. Matson, Oct. 3, 1878. G. M. Skiles was married to Miss Elizabeth Clark, eldest daughter of Samuel Clark, of Jackson Township, Aug. 22, 1878.

SLAYBAUGH, WILLIAM, bricklayer and stonemason; was born in Adams Co., Penn., Sept. 5, 1813; his youth was spent on a farm; when about 18 years of age, he commenced the trade of stonemason and bricklaying; his parents, George and Magdalena Slaybaugh, whose maiden name was Starry, came to Ohio in the spring of 1834, and settled about three miles south of Shelby. Mrs. Slaybaugh is still residing on the farm she and her husband first settled. Mr. Slaybaugh died in January, 1865. The subject of this notice came to Shelby in 1845. He was married to Miss Sarah Rank May 16, 1837; she was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., March 8, 1820; came to Ohio with her parents in 1833. Mrs. and Mr. Slaybaugh had six children, five living—D. B. Slaybaugh resides in Shelby; George E., at home; Ida Salome, married to James Shultz, and lives in Crestline; W. R., farmer in Richland; Lizzie, at home. Alice L. died in infancy.

SLAYBAUGH, D. B., was born in Richland Co. Feb. 8, 1846; he is engaged in the manufacture of brick, in which he has been successful. He first commenced the business with his father, and, after continuing with him for some time, he purchased his father's interest, and has since been sole proprietor. He has furnished most of the brick for the town and surrounding country. He was married to Miss Alice J. Curran July 27, 1871; she was born in Indiana Jan. 6, 1855.

SOTZEN, HENRY, merchant tailor, Shelby, was born in Canton Basil, Switzerland; he remained with his parents on the farm till the age of 16; he was bound to his trade, having to pay $40 and work two and one-half years to learn it; at the expiration of one-half the time, he left his employer, for the purpose of coming to America; his employer bringing suit against him for balance of his time, the court decided that any one wishing to emigrate to America was at liberty to go at will; he left Canton Basil in April, 1844, in company with his brother, Jacob Sotzen, Samuel and Crist Sutter, traveling in wagons to Havre de Grace, embarking about the 1st of May; they sailed for New York, making the voyage in thirty-six days; he came direct to Shelby, remaining about three years. He then went to Olney, Ill., having to go to Sandusky, from there to Toledo, by steamer, and to Terre Haute, Ind., by way of Maumee Canal, and thence to Olney by stage. He worked at his trade about two years. He married Miss Nancy Ross in December, 1847, who died in November, 1848. About this time, the gold excitement reached Olney, when he, with a party of twelve, started across the Plains March 15, 1849, arriving at Sacramento, being just 100 days crossing. The party traveled with three wagons, four men and as many mules to each wagon. After being on the Plains about eight days, Henry Raust (an old resident of Shelby, and one of the party,) sickened and died, after an illness of about three days, the remainder of the party digging a grave. Nothing further of importance occurred until they reached the Humboldt River, in Nevada. As they were in camp one evening (at the west side of the river), they discovered a hot spring on the opposite side, and those who could swim crossed to see the curiosity. One Dr. Eckley, a former citizen of Richland Co., going too close, the sod gave way and he was precipitated into the boiling water nearly to his waist, which confined him to his wagon until they reached California. August 15, they disposed of four mules and a wagon, and started for the mines; taking sick a few days after his arrival at the mines, he returned to Sacramento and went to the hospital, where he remained three days, for which he paid $75. He then contracted with the Government of the Territory to carry provisions to emigrants who were destitute. In this he was engaged about a month. He then went to Auburn, Cal., and, in the spring of 1850, he went to the Middle Fork of the American River, where he took up a mining claim, and remained about in six weeks. He then left the mines, first casting his vote for the Territory to be admitted into the Union as a free State. Embarking at San Francisco for Panama, C. A., he crossed the Isthmus on foot, where he remained one week. He embarked at Chagres for New York, from where he came direct to Shelby. He was the first to open a merchant tailor shop in Shelby, where he remained until 1852. He married Miss Julia Whitmore March 15, 1852. He, with twelve others, started in wagons for Sacramento. He settled in Cold Springs, Eldorado Co., five miles from where the first specimen of gold was found in California, and engaged in general merchandise; in connection with the above business, he, with his partner, Mr. Goodnow, built a saw-mill, and followed lumbering; in 1857, they formed a stock company and built a quartz-mill, by which they lost heavily. In 1859, the court granted him a divorce and his children, which he sent to Shelby to be cared for by friends. In 1860, he, with his partner, engaged in freighting across the Sierra Nevada Mountains; in November, 1862, he disposed of his entire interest, and embarked, at San Francisco, for New York, by way of Panama and Aspinwall; the steamer Ariel, on which he came home, was captured on his return trip between New York and Aspinwall, by the rebel pirate Simms; he again reached Shelby Jan. 1, 1863, and purchased the interest of T. Mickey, in a merchant tailoring establishment, and remained five years, during which time he married Miss Lou Garnhart; they have three children—George, Harry and Walter. In March, 1858, he again went to Olney, Ill., where he spent two years handling eggs, and two years under the firm name of King & Hotzen, as merchant tailors; he again returned to Shelby, and, since the spring of 1873, he has been engaged in the business of a merchant tailor, in which he has been very successful.

STEFFEY, EMILY A., was born in Franklin Co., Penn. Her father, Jonathan Steffey, was born in Washington Co., Md., Sept. 21, 1800, and when a young man he came to Franklin Co., Penn., where he was married in 1830, to Miss Rebecca Maybury, who was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., Dec. 22, 1806. They had seven children, six living. In 1838, they came to Ohio and settled in Ganges, where he followed the carpenter trade for some years. He remained in Ganges for thirty-six years, and then moved to Shelby, where he died Aug. 1, 1876.

SUTTER, GEORGE F., farmer; was born in Crawford Co., Ohio, Sept. 29, 1854. He attended the district schools of the county during the winter months, and in the summer worked on the farm. He was married to Miss Nora Boner, of Richland Co., July 6, 1875. His father, John Sutter, was born in Canton Basil, Switzerland, June 22, 1818. He was the son of a farmer, and he spent his youth on a farm. He emigrated to America in 1840, and remained in New York for some time, and then came to Norwalk, Huron Co., Ohio, and from there to Richland Co. He was married to Miss Sarah Ann Hockensmith Nov. 9, 1847. They had seven children, three daughters and four sons; one daughter and three sons living. Sarah A. was married to Butler Albertson, farmer; Henry F., farmer; William J., at home, and George F., the subject of this notice. The elder Sutter, began life poor, but by industry, economy and honesty he obtained a fair competence. He died March 8, 1876, mourned by all who knew him. His wife still survives him.

SUTTER, SAMUEL, is one of the few business men left who have seen Shelby grow from small beginnings to its present prospereus condition. Mr. Sutter was born in the Canton of Basil, Switzerland, in May, 1823, where he remained until he was 4 years of age, when, with his mother, his father having died, he went to Orisdorff, in Basil, and remained there until 1841. There he learned his trade, that of cabinet-maker. It is a well-known fact that throughout Europe, and especially in Germany and Switzerland, learning a trade means more than it does in this country. Mr. Sutter, after having served his apprenticeship, spent two years, after the manner of his countrymen, in traveling through his native country, working at his trade; in April, 1844, he started from Basil to come to this country, having heard that here skilled labor was more generously rewarded than in fatherland; about the 26th of April, 1844, he embarked at Havre for America, and after a pleasant voyage, landed in New York about June 1; he went up the Hudson to Albany by steamer, and from there to Buffalo, where he took steamer for Port Huron, on Lake Erie, and from there he came to Shelby, arriving here about the 11th day of June, 1844; in the spring of 1846 he purchased an interest with a Mr. Row in that portion of Shelby known as Texas, where he remained for about two years; about this time Robert Mickey, with others, began to lay out and build up East Shelby; Mr. Sutter came to Shelby an entire stranger, being the first European German to locate in this place, and at this time could neither speak nor write a word of English; this was not an enviable position in which to be placed, to say the least; a stranger in a strange land, unacquainted with its language and customs, and yet dependent upon the resources of his own brain and muscle to hew out a path to future comfort and a competency for old age; in Mr. Sutter's vocabulary there was no such word as fail; he had, as all who are acquainted with him know, under a quiet exterior an indomitable will, that would bend before no obstacle, and overcome all opposition; he could not but succeed; Mr. Sutter commenced business for himself as a cabinet-maker in 1848, in the present Samuel Clapper house, where he manufactured furniture by hand for the home trade; so well had he learned his trade in Switzerland, that the finish and strength of his work commended itself to all, and orders poured in so rapidly that he had no idle hours; he continued to manufacture furniture by hand up to 1863, when his business became so extensive as to compel him to bring steam and machinery to his aid in manufacturing for home trade; in 1875, he largely extended his facilities, and began to manufacture on a large scale, supplying numerous orders, not only throughout Ohio, but also having an extensive trade in adjoining States; he is now extensively engaged in the manufacture of furniture, employing many hands, and supplying the trade with a class of goods not excelled by any manufacturer in the country; Mr. Sutter has long been identified with the interests and growth of Shelby; he erected all the buildings on the north side of Main street, from the dwelling of L. Clapper to the Black Fork. He also built and ran the first steam sawmill in the village, and beside all this, erected five dwelling-houses in different parts of Shelby; thus Mr. Sutter has, without doubt, done more to build up his adopted place than any other within its limits; Mr. Sutter was married, Dec. 24, 1846, to Miss Elizabeth Will, who was born in the Grand Duchy of Baden in 1825, and by whom he has had nine children, eight of whom are now living; their names are V. W., Lovina, Elizabeth, John Calvin, Margaretta, Samuel Zwingly, George Koch, Sarah Rebecca and Frederick. It is well for our country that there are such men as Mr. Sutter, who leave the crowded marts and workshops of the Old World, and, emigrating to this country, add so largely of their skill in advancing and developing its resources.

SUTTER, SAMUEL J., furniture and undertaking; is a son of Samuel Sutter, mentioned above, and possesses in a remarkable degree his characteristic pluck and energy; he was born in Shelby, Ohio, Sept. 20, 1856; he remained with his parents until he was 20 years old, attending school in Shelby until he was 16 years of age, when he went to Zanesville and took a thorough business course in the business college of that place, and the thoroughness of the instruction and aptness of the pupil are well exemplified in his splendid business; Mr. Sutter learned thoroughly every department of the furniture and undertaking business, under the tuition of his father, who has no superior in this country in either branch; thus making him an excellent judge in the selection and purchase of furniture with which to supply the market; as to the other branch, undertaking, though young in years he is old in experience, having served a long apprenticeship under his father, and learned thoroughly every branch of the business; he has a magnificent hearse, and is bountifully supplied with the very latest and best appliances for properly taking care of the dead; Mr. Sutter only commenced business a little over two years ago, yet such are his energy, pluck, perseverance and business ability, that he has already built up a retail trade in Shelby and surrounding country never before equaled by any other furniture dealer in the place; his fame has gone abroad, until he now does a large business in retailing to citizens of neighboring towns and cities, who come to him to buy in preference to purchasing at home, on account of the superior quality as well as the extremely low price at which he offers his goods. In the undertaking branch of Mr. Sutter's business, he has become deservedly popular; Mr. Sutter possesses qualities that fit him in an eminent degree to perform these duties, and the greatly increasing demand for his services in this department of his business testifies the high esteem in which he is held by the citizens of Shelby and the surrounding country. Mr. S. J. Sutter was married to a Miss Shiffer on the 16th day of January, 1877.

TAYLOR, JOHN W., machinist, Shelby; was born in Weller Township, Richland Co., Dec. 18, 1820; remained there on a farm until he was 22 years of age, when he went with Hoy & Williams to Lexington, Mo., and engaged in the fanning-mill business; stayed there two years and then went to Kentucky. In 1846, enlisted in the Louisville Legion and served as a private soldier under Zachary Taylor, in the Mexican war, and was discharged at Vera Cruz; from there he moved to California, where he remained until 1850, then returned to Kentucky by way of Isthmus of Panama. In 1859, he went to Missouri and went to raising cotton, which business he followed until the war broke out. He volunteered as Captain in the Confederate service under Gen. Forrest; was in all the principal battles of the Army of the Cumberland, and at the close of the war surrendered with Joseph E. Johnston to Maj. Gen. Sherman at Jonesboro, N. C.; after the war closed, he came to Kentucky and engaged in the fanning-mill business again. In 1875, came to Shelby, where he now lives. Was married to Amanda Killingsworth, of Georgia, in 1850. Had by this wife two children, one of which is now living. His first wife died in 1854; in 1856, was married to Sarah C. Thurman. Had by this marriage four children—Alonzo, Cleopatra, John T. and Lena. His second wife died May 1, 1870. Married as his third wife Mary A. Nunamaker, Sept. 28, 1875. Mr. Taylor is a man of good moral habits, neither drinks, chews nor smokes. Both of his grandfathers were Revolutionary soldiers, and his father a soldier of the war of 1812. His father, John Taylor, a noted pioneer of Weller Township, Richland Co., was born in Greene Co., Penn., in 1788; moved to Weller Township in 1818, where he entered his land from the Government. He remained on this farm until July 26, 1875, when he died.

TUCKER, BENJAMIN, farmer; lives in Sec. 20; P. O. Shelby; was born in Washington Co., Penn., in 1812; he moved to Shelby in 1819. He was married to Nancy Wentz in 1844, and moved to Crawford Co. in 1850; he lived there as a farmer eight years, when he returned and located on a farm near Shelby, where he now lives; his wife was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., Jan. 4, 1820; she came to Richland Co. in 1821; Mr. Tucker by this marriage was the father of eight children—Samuel H., Mary E., Jos. W., Margaret J. (died July 31, 1867, at the age of 15 years), Paulina, Sarah, Christopher and William A.; Samuel H. was a soldier in the late war of the rebellion. The subject of this sketch is a man of feeble health, in consequence of many hardships of his pioneer life in Sharon Township; his wife is in good health.

URICH, ISAAC, farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Dauphin Co., Penn., April 20, 1808; he moved to Sharon Township in an early day, and entered 80 acres of land, where he now lives; he built a house, and on the 28th day of November, 1848, was married; by this marriage he had six children—David G., born July 15, 1849; Elizabeth Mary, born Dec. 18, 1850; Amos C., born Sept. 27, 1853; Sarah A., born Nov. 4, 1855; infant son born July 11, 1858 (died soon after its birth); Isaac N., July 14, 1859; Mr. Urich's first wife died Sept. 1, 1860. He was married to his second wife, Mrs. John Hersh, June 24, 1861; by this marriage he had four children, three are living—Wm. Riley, born March 7, 1862; Ezra C., born June 6, 1864; Mattie E., born May 3, 1867, and a daughter who died in infancy. The subject of this sketch is one of the enterprising farmers in Sharon Township, a careful business man and an excellent neighbor.

WARD, J. L., proprietor Beverstock House, Shelby, Ohio; was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, in 1837. His father, J. W. Ward, moved to Richland Co. about 1847. About the age of 15 years he began clerking, which he followed for a number of years; he also taught for a number of terms; he engaged in several business enterprises, furniture and undertaking being the principal; he has lately taken charge of the Beverstock House. This house was built in 1847, and is well calculated for the business. Mr. Ward is gentlemanly and accommodating; he and his wife fully understand the wants of the traveling public. He was married to Mrs. Ann E. Kline Feb. 22, 1880, and has settled in Shelby.

WEBER, SOLOMON, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., September, 1820; when he was about 2 years of age his parents died. He then went to live with his aunt, Mrs. Weber, with whom he stayed about five years and then went to his brother's, who was a wagon-maker, and with whom Solomon learned his trade; when he left Pennsylvania he came to Jefferson Co., Ohio, and in 1840, he came to Richland Co.; he followed his trade until 1849, when he went to farming, which he followed until 1870, when he moved to Shelby. He has been following his trade mostly since he has resided in Shelby; Mr. Weber has been a successful man; he started poor, but by industry and perseverance he has made a competence; he is well informed although his educational advantages were limited; he is a comprehensive man, and takes an interest in the affairs of the country. He was married to Miss Sarah Miller, Feb. 27, 1844; they had four sons—two of whom are living—George A., a minister in the M. E. Church, John L., farmer. Mr. Miller, father of Mrs. Weber, was born in Lebanon Co., Penn., in 1792, and came to Ohio about 1815. He some time afterward returned to Pennsylvania, and married Catherine Bricker, and returned about 1823; he settled permanently in what is now Jackson Township. He died in 1863; his wife still survives him and resides with her daughter, Mrs. Weber.

WENTZ, HENRY, JR.; fourth son of Henry Wentz, Sr., who moved from Perry Co., Penn., in April, 1834, and settled in Cass Township, was born Dec. 9, 1839; lived with and aided his father on his farm until the age of 18 years, when he went to Crestline, Ohio, as an apprentice to the carpenter trade; served an apprenticeship of three years; when attaining his freedom he went to Fort Wayne, Ind., and obtained employment in the car-shops of the P., Ft. W. & C. R. W. Co. at that place, and remained until the breaking-out of the late war, when he, on July 11, 1861, enlisted as a private in Co. E, 11th Ind. V. I. (Lew Wallace's Zouave Regiment), and immediately entered upon his duties as a soldier; the arrival, by express, of his trunk, tool-chest, etc., at Shelby, Ohio, was the first intimation his parents and friends had of his enlistment; from Fort Wayne, his company was sent to Indianapolis for drill, where it remained at Camps Morton and Robinson until Aug. 6, 1861, when the regiment was sent to Benton Barracks near St. Louis; in September of the same year the regiment was sent to Paducah, Ky., where it was made a part of the force under Gen. Grant, styled the Army of West Tennessee; on Feb. 5, 1862, Mr. Wentz accompanied his regiment, and took part in the capture of Fort Henry; also participated in the siege and capture of Fort Donelson, Feb. 14, 15 and 16, 1862, and in the battle of Shiloh in April 6 and 7, same year; in the siege of Corinth, capture of Memphis, and in the campaigns through Arkansas under Gen. Fred Steele; in the flank movement on Vicksburg, viz., Atchafalaya, in the movement on Vicksburg, viz., Milliken's Bend; was present at the running of the blockade by Commodore Porter's fleet; participated in the battles incident to the approaches to Vicksburg, viz., Grand Gulf, Port Gibson, Beaver Station, Raymond, Jackson and Champion Hills; the latter one of the severest, for the number engaged, of the war; Mr. Wentz at this time held the rank of First Lieutenant; his company entered the fight with forty-five men and came out with twenty-three, but had the satisfaction to capture, aided by the regiment, four guns in this engagement; the boys used the bayonet and butt of the gun at close quarters; Lieut. Wentz coming out without harm except that caused by a minie ball that carried away the heel of his boot and another passing through his cap, received while aiding the Colonel in changing the position of the regiment; participated in the siege of Vicksburg, and was present at its surrender, and was with Gen. Sherman on his Jackson (Miss.) campaign; in August, 1863, his regiment was transferred to the Gulf Department, where Mr. Wentz took part in the campaigns under Gens. W. B. Franklin and Nathaniel Banks; re-enlisted as a veteran in 1864, after which his regiment was transferred to the Shenandoah Valley, reaching Washington Aug. 4, 1864, and Harper's Ferry, Va., on the 10th; took part in the skirmish at Halltown, battle of Winchester, Sept. 18, Fisher's Hill, Sept. 22, and Cedar Creek, Oct. 19, 1864, where Gen. Phil. Sheridan so greatly distinguished himself by taking command of a defeated army and winning one of the most brilliant victories of the war, after making his famous ride from Winchester, twenty miles away; although Mr. Wentz was a perfect stranger to all in his regiment, he, by his faithfulness to duty, won the confidence of his superiors, and thereby promotion, he having held all the subordinate positions from the command of his company down to private; was also at different times detailed on staff duty and acted as Adjutant of his regiment. After the war, Mr. Wentz returned to his home, afterward engaged in the lumber business at Crestline, but after one year, finding that his health would not permit him to continue, he sold out his interests and engaged in the hardware business, which business he followed until September 1874, when he sold out and entered the fire insurance field; since then he has been engaged at Dayton, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Shelby, Ohio; in the spring of 1880 a new fire association was formed at Shelby, and Mr. Wentz was offered the secretaryship, which he accepted and now holds. Mr. Wentz married Miss Sarah A. Bushey June 8, 1865; the fruits of this union were two sons and one daughter—one daughter and one son now living. Although a strong Republican, Mr. Wentz was three times elected a member of the City Council at Crestline, Ohio, the usual Democratic majority being about two to one.

WHEELER, ISAAC S., was born in Plymouth Township, Feb. 11, 1822; his father, Oliver Wheeler; immigrated from Connecticut to Ohio at an early day, and settled two miles northwest of Shelby. His father served in the war of 1812; his mother, whose maiden name was Rebecca Holston, was born in Pennsylvania; she died when Isaac was 13 years old, and his father died when he was 14, thus leaving him to take care of the younger children, as he was oldest son, and second child. He thus at an early age was deprived of the fostering care of his parents, and had the charge of his younger brothers and sister, who depended on him in a great measure for their raising. He managed the farm and kept the family together until they could do for themselves, for which he certainly ought to take a just pride. He is Vice President of the Shelby National Bank, and Treasurer of the Buckeye Mutual Insurance Company; he is a practical business man, and considers well any enterprise he undertakes; he is a self-made man; his educational privileges were poor, as he was compelled to work when young, but he has acquired sufficient education to see to his business properly conducted, and is a close observer of the issues of the times. Mr. Wheeler was married in 1851, to Mrs. Martha Moore, whose maiden name was Rambo; they are the parents of six children.

WHITE, WILLIAM C., farmer, was born in Richland Co., Oct. 18, 1836; he has lived in Cass and Sharon Townships all his life except five years he resided in Marshall Co., Ind.; he sold his farm in Indiana, and on his return to Ohio, purchased the farm known as the "John Snyder" farm, where he has since resided. He was married to Miss Susan Snyder Feb. 23, 1860; she was born Oct. 3, 1840; they are blessed with five children, four living, namely: Mary E., married to Laurence Lake, farmer; Dorah Matilda, Irene Jane and Minnie May, at home. Mr. White started in life without material assistance, but by industry has made for himself a comfortable home. Mrs. White's mother, Mrs. Mary E. Snyder, whose maiden name was Magner, was born in Greene Co., April 30, 1818; her parents, Samuel and Catharine Magner, immigrated to Columbiana Co., Ohio, where they lived for some years, and then came to Richland Co., in April, 1829, and settled on the farm now occupied by Mr. White. This farm was entered in 1827. Mary E. Magner was married to John Snyder April 28, 1837; he was born Sept. 4, 1804; they had four children, all of whom are living.

WILL, PETER, farmer and stock grower; he was born in Bedford Co., Penn., March 19, 1833; his parents emigrating to Richland Co., Ohio, in May of the same year, purchasing what is familiarly known as the Will homestead, composed of 155 acres, where he received his education, remaining with his parents until December, 1860. He married Miss Humphrey, January, 1857. They have six children—Ivin E., John Sherman, Franklin E., Jennie E., Sarah E., and George B. His father, Vallentine, was born in the Grand Duchy of Baden, Germany, about 1802, and married Elizabeth Cook, who was born in the same place about 1805, and had twelve children, nine of whom are living—Elizabeth, Henry, Peter, Margaret, Mary, Rebecca, Sarah, John A. and Lottie. Peter, the subject of this sketch, was elected Assessor in 1874, and has been re-elected six consecutive years; he also was elected Land Appraiser in October, 1879; on leaving the homestead, in 1860, he moved to Shelby, where he purchased an interest in the Sutter saw-mill, remaining until October, 1867, when he disposed of his interest, and went to Marshall Co., Ind., remaining there about four years, when he returned to his native county, and purchased 75 acres of Sec. 11, Range 20, in Sharon Township. Politically, he is a Republican, and possesses the confidence of the community; he enlisted in Co. F, of 163d O. V. I., May 2, 1864, and was mustered out of service at Columbus, Ohio, in September of the same year.

WIRTZ, HENRY, Sr., father of Henry, Jr., and John; was born near Heidelberg, Germany, in the Grand Duchy of Baden, in April, 1806; he married Miss Bowman about 1828; they had thirteen children; they emigrated to Ohio about 1840, with three children, locating on what is known as the Wirtz homestead; he lived to the age of 72, his wife and two sons surviving him; he died in the faith of the Reformed Church, of which the remainder of his family are members.

WIRTZ, HENRY, farmer; P. O. Shelby; he was born on the Wirtz homestead in March, 1844; he received his education at the district schools, remaining with his parents until he was 20 years of age, when he married Miss Mary Frank, of Sharon Township; they have quite an interesting family of children—John Henry, Lewis Philip, George Adam, Charles William, Francis Marion, Allen Willard, Oliver Wesley and Sherman Edward. Mr. Wirtz was elected Trustee of Sharon Township in the spring of 1876, and has been re-elected four consecutive years, having the confidence of the community at large; he owns 80 acres of land, under a splendid state of cultivation, and erected a fine brick building in 1875; he is a member of the Reformed Church at Shelby.

WIRTZ, JOHN W., farmer; P. O. Shelby; he was born in Sharon Township Aug. 29, 1849; he remained with his parents until 1872, receiving his education in the district schools. He married Caroline Beach Nov. 16, 1872. They have three children—Mattie Florence, Mary Etta and Birdy Hortense. The subject of this sketch has erected an elegant residence, the finest in his immediate vicinity, on his 80-acre farm, which is under a high state of cultivation.

SPRINGFIELD TOWNSHIP.

ANDREWS, HARRISON, is a resident of Ontario; his father at one time lived in Brooke Co., Va., but moved to Washington Co., where Mr Andrews was born May 3, 1818. He was married, Jan. 14, 1841, to Mary Ann Rankin; he lived in Washington Co. until the year 1867, when he came to this county. Mrs. Andrews died Jan. 14, 1878. Mr. Andrews has six children living and one dead.

AU, HENRY, farmer; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., Aug. 16, 1817; he came to this county, in 1839. He was married in 1850 to Eliza Blower, who was born in England Sept. 9, 1832; she came to America in childhood; they had nine children—John F., born May 19, 1851; William H., Jan. 31, 1853; Samuel A., Sept. 9, 1855; Thomas J., March 12, 1857; Charles H., March 22, 1858; Theodore L., Feb. 18, 1860; Mary E., March 31, 1862; Robert E., Feb. 16, 1866; George W., March 24, 1868. The following are deceased: William H., died April 23, 1864; Thomas J., March 23, 1857. Mr. Au resided in Mansfield 13 years; in 1851 moved to Mifflin Township; remained till 1855, then bought a farm in this township; has resided here since.

AU, CHRISTOPHER; merchant, Ontario; he was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., in 1824, and came to Ohio in 1843. He was married June 27, 1848, to Laura J. Greenfield, who was born Nov. 16, 1829, in the State of New York; they have the following family: John H., born May 2, 1852; Mary E., March 27, 1854; Martha A., April 8, 1856; Sherman G., July 10, 1858; Abraham Hamlin, Sept. 1, 1860; Laura F., Nov. 15, 1862; Christopher Sheriden, Oct. 25, 1865. Mr. Au resided in Mansfield for one year and a half; then spent six years in the Western States; returned to Mansfield and remained till 1855, then removed to Springfield Township, and engaged in farming till 1869, when he located in Ontario, and engaged in the mercantile business; he also has been Postmaster for eleven years. Mr. Au recruited a company for the 120th O. V. I., of which he was Captain, during the war. John H. Au was married, April 18, 1878, to Miss E. M. Hartupee; they have one daughter, Minnie L., born Feb. 8, 1879. He is now a partner in the mercantile business with his father.

BRANDT, DAVID, resides on the southeast quarter of Sec. 5; he was born in Franklin Co., Penn., in the year 1805; at 20 years of age, he moved with his father into Maryland, and married the next year; from Maryland he came to this county in 1837, and lived on the farm now owned by J. W. Niman twelve years, when he removed to his present place; Mr. Brandt lost his first wife, July 30, 1865; he was married a second time to Margaret Augustine, a sister of his former wife, in the fall of 1866; he has nine children living and two dead. His trade has been that of a carpenter and builder, in which he was one of the best; all over the township and in those adjoining are evidences of his skill; so successfully has he followed his business that he has now a small improved farm and a handsome competence besides. Mr. Brandt is a member of the Lutheran Church; is highly respected, and widely known as an able, honest, and, in times past, a most useful man.

CAMPBELL, DENNIS, farmer; he was born in Berkshire, Vt., Aug. 29, 1825; he came to Richland County with his parents in the spring of 1840; his father, Shepard Campbell, resided for many years in this township; in 1863, he removed to Fayette Co.,

Iowa, where he was killed by a falling limb while engaged in cutting timber; his family consisted of seven children, five of whom are living. Dennis is the oldest son and resides near the southeast corner of Springfield Township; he was married April 24, 1861, to Miss Sarah Sweeney; she died July 8, 1875.

CONDON, J. M., lives on the southeast quarter of Sec. 29; his grandfather, Richard Condon, came into the county in 1814, from Westmoreland Co., Penn.; he entered a body of land at Spring Mills. J. M. Condon was born at this place in 1828, and, when 2 years of age, his father, John, moved to Plymouth, thence to the farm now owned by Mr. Condon, two years later. He was married on the first day of 1858 to Maria Walters, and has a family of eight children. Mr. Condon comes of a hardy stock of people, who knew well what hardships, privations and dangers the early settlers were obliged to endure while clearing their farms and making the improvements which the present generation now enjoy.

COURTNEY, WILLIAM, sawyer; P. O. Ontario; he was born in Troy Township March 26, 1846. He was married in 1873 to Anna Lindsey, who was born in this township June 12, 1852; they have two children—Elmer, born Sept. 25, 1874, and Carrie A., Oct. 6, 1876.

CRAIG, WM. N., was born in Jackson Township in the year 1828; his father came from Belmont Co., Ohio, and settled in the above mentioned township (then Sharon) in 1825; Mr. Craig describes the country as being very wild and unimproved, when he was a boy going to school; the first teacher he had of whom he can remember, was an old Irishman, named Wm. Bailey, who taught in a log schoolhouse near his father's farm; the scholars were large boys and girls not far advanced, and their illustrious teacher made frequent use of the rod as a means of advancement. There were plenty of wolves and deer, but the more dangerous wild animals were scarce; they were, however, occasionally met with, as will be seen from the following incident which Mr. Craig relates: He and another boy were sent one day to carry a bucket of water for the school; when they had gone some distance from the house, they met some wild animal, which he now thinks was a panther; they did not then know what it was; it sat in the road watching them and lashing its tail against its sides; presently it jumped behind a tree, and the boys went on unharmed; Mr. Craig remembers when the first railroad train came through the county, his father was some distance from the house at the time, and mistaking the noise for that of a storm coming upon them, ran home with all speed to close the house. Mr. Craig was married in 1857, and has two children; his wife died in 1875; he owns and resides on the northwest quarter of Sec. 8. He is a member of the United Presbyterian Church at Ontario.

CHRISTMAN, CHARLES, farmer; P. O. Crestline. He was born in Germany in 1832; he came to America in 1849. He was married in 1855 to Mary Elizabeth Delph, who was born in Germany; they have ten children, Frederick, was born Jan. 1, 1857; Peter, Nov. 14, 1858; George, Sept. 19, 1860; Mary Jane, Feb. 14, 1862; Charlie, July 25, 1864; Louis, Sept. 9, 1866; Elizabeth, July 27, 1868; Catherine, March 20, 1872; John, Nov. 28, 1873; Caroline, July 16, 1878. Mr. Christman came to Springfield Township twenty-five years ago, and still resides here, owns a good farm.

CROW, JOSEPH, farmer; P. O. Ontario.

DAY, MARCUS, came to this county with his father when he was 8 years old. His father came from Washington Co., Penn., where he lived previous to his removal to this State, to this county in 1814, and cleared a small piece of ground in the north part of Troy Township, which he planted in vegetables of different kinds, and then returned to Pennsylvania. The next year, he brought his family out, and they moved into a log cabin on his farm. Mr. Day was born in 1808, in Washington Co., Penn. He was married, Sept. 15, 1830, to Mary Ann, daughter of John Young. He united with the Methodist Church when in his 30th year. He has held the offices of Township Trustee and Justice of the Peace, the duties of which he discharged with ability and with satisfaction to all. Mr. Day was very fond of hunting when a young man and found plenty of game in the then thickly wooded forests. He tells of the following occurrence which took place when he was still a boy living with his father in their cabin: "His father had started from the house and had gone twenty or thirty rods, when he came running back saying he had heard a rattlesnake and that it was somewhere near the house. On looking they found one which had just crawled from under the cabin. It sported seventeen rattles." Mr. Day moved into Springfield Township in 1830, and now lives on the northwest quarter of Sec. 36.

EVERITT, PETER,; P. O. Ontario. He was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., July 16, 1838; he came to Ohio in 1865, and was married the same year, to Elzora D. Evans, who was born in Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., March 6, 1848; they have the following family of children: Thomas Miles, was born Oct. 7, 1866; Angelia, July 21, 1868; William M., Sept. 2, 1870; Ella May, June 14, 1873, and Cornelia Maud, Dec. 12, 1874. Angelia died March 16, 1873. Mr Everitt enlisted at the first call for soldiers, for three months, and served his time; he then enlisted for three years; he was a member of Co. K, 53d Penn. V. I.; he was wounded June 1, 1862, in the battle of Fair Oaks, East Virginia; lost his left limb; also shot through the right limb; he received four balls; after being wounded, he laid on the field of battle four days, without any attention, and suffered intensely; at the expiration of four days, was put on an ambulance and taken to Savage Station; he lay there one night, and next morning was put on a freight car with other wounded soldiers, taken to Whitehouse Landing, and from there to a boat (called the State of Maine), and was taken to Fortress Monroe and thence to New York City, then up the Long Island Sound to New Haven, Conn., to the State Hospital; he then at the expiration of nine days, received medical treatment; he lay nine weeks before his limb was amputated; three weeks after the amputation, the main artery ruptured, from which bled till his bed was completely saturated; he was attended by seven nurses, taken from among the soldiers; the main artery was closely compressed three months, by which process, his life was saved. After the war, Mr. Everitt located in Ontario; is receiving a pension, and is a worthy citizen.

FINNEY, JOHN, a resident of Springfield Township, and well known throughout the county, came into Ohio in 1804. He was born in Fayette Co., Penn., in the year 1801; three years later, his father constructed a flat-boat, and with his family and possessions, floated down the river to Wellsburg, bought a section of land in Harrison Co., Ohio, and put up a cabin 18x20 feet; there Mr. Finney had his first experience in pioneer life. The country was wild and unimproved; wild animals and game of all kinds were plenty, and the comforts and conveniences of life scarce; especially was this the case with schools; Mr. Finney at one time went to live with his grandfather, six miles from home, that he might go to school; but, as he was the oldest one of the children, he was needed at home, and his education was neglected to such a degree, that when at the age of 24, he was married, he could not read a newspaper. His father moved to Richland Co. in 1820, and settled on the farm now owned by Mr. Finney; in 1823, the family moved to Madison Township, but continued to farm the place in this township; three years afterward, they returned to Springfield Township, where Mr. Finney has continued to reside since. On the 26th of September, 1825, he was married to Elenor Marshal; by this union he had twelve children, only four of whom are now living; Mr. Finney was married, the second time, to Isabelle Alban, July 14, 1858, his first wife having died Dec. 22, 1857; his second wife died Jan. 9, 1874. Mr. Finney has been a great reader in his life, and an active worker in such causes as he conceived were for the public good. He signed the first temperance pledge in the township, and in company with David Trimbal inaugurated the first temperance movement. He was an active Antislavery man, and has labored continually in opposition to secret societies. As a member of the United Presbyterian Church, he has always endeavored to live consistent with his professions. A more extended account of his work may be found in the history of this township.

FREED, JOSEPH, deceased, came to this county in 1833; formerly lived in Pennsylvania, where he was born 1808. In 1827, he married Hanna Snider; they had fifteen children, seven of whom are dead. The youngest son, Isaac Freed, was born in 1849, and lives on a farm of 123 acres, a part of the southwest quarter of Sec. 19. Joseph Freed died Feb. 6, 1873.

FURGESON, JOHN P., farmer; P. O. Mansfield.

HOUT, CHARLES, farmer; P. O. Crestline; he was born in Springfield Township March 22, 1841. He was married in 1872 to Hester S. Barnes, who was born in this county. They have the following family: Harlon Wesley, born May 25, 1875, and one infant child. He owns an improved farm with good buildings.

HOUT, JOSEPH, farmer; P. O. Crestline; he was born in Mifflin Township Feb. 9, 1845. He was married in 1866, to Amanda Kurtz; they had the following family: Eddie C., Ellie, Levi and Charles. Mrs. Amanda Hout died in 1878. Mr. Hout married Jennie Pool, who was born in this county.

LAMBERT, WILLIAM, was born in Knox Co., Ohio, in 1850; in the spring of 1879, he removed to the southern part of Springfield Township. He was married in the year 1877, to Caroline Jackson; they have three children.

HOUT, JOHN (deceased); he was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio; he came to Mifflin Township April 4, 1820. Married, April 30, 1844, to Fanny Boals, who was born in Harrison Co. Oct. 30, 1816. They have a family of three children—Joseph, born Feb. 9, 1845; Charles, born March 22, 1847; John, born Jan. 2, 1855. Mr. Hout died April 3, 1878, in Springfield Township, at his residence; in the spring of 1846 he removed to Springfield Township, and remained there until his death. His son, John Hout, Jr., remains with his mother, and is engaged in farming; during the winter season, he is engaged in teaching.

McCONNELL, CURTIS, farmer; P. O. Ontario.

MATSON, J HN, S. B., was born in the year 1828 in Jackson Township, one half mile north of his present residence. His father, Uriah Matson, was one of the early pioneers, having come into the county in 1815. He was of Scotch-Irish descent. He came from Westmoreland Co., Penn., to the vicinity of Lebanon, Ohio, in 1812, and three years later to Richland Co., where he spent the remainder of his life. As a woodsman he had, probably, no equal in the county, and did a great deal of work at chopping and clearing. It is said to have been the custom of a firm of Mansfield, which manufactured axes, to give, at meetings of the citizens of the county, an ax as a premium to the oldest man, the oldest pioneer, etc. At one of these meetings, it was suggested that an ax be given to the man who had done the most work with an ax. It was decided that Uriah Matson was entitled to the award, which he accordingly received. Although he was a great worker, he was very fond of books, and did a great deal of reading. He was born in 1793, and died in 1873. His wife was Elizabeth Beech, whom he married in 1822. She is still living at the age of 81 years. Their children were six in number and were born as follows: Albert F., in 1824; U. J., in 1826; John S. B., in 1828; Araminta, in 1831; Charles C., in 1833; Melvina, in 1836. Albert, Araminta and Charles are now dead. John S. B. Matson was brought up in the neighborhood of where he now lives; and when 21 years of age, began work on the railroad. In 1856, he married Mary A. Finfrock, and moved on his farm in 1860. In 1862, he enlisted in the 120th O. V. I., and was out nearly three years, over one year of which time he lay in a rebel prison. He has one daughter who is now married. Mr. Matson has taken great pains in collecting archæological specimens and Indian relics, and has a large, rare and valuable collection, of which he may justly be proud. Many of his best specimens were on exhibition at the Centennial, in the archæological exhibit from this State.

MARSHALL, JAMES, Sr. (deceased). He was born Feb. 22, 1796, in Pennsylvania. He was married June, 18, 1828, to Jane Edgington, who was born July 28, 1805; in Jefferson Co; they had the following family: David, born April 6, 1830; Thomas, 1832; Alexander T. 1834; John, March 22, 1835; George, Nov. 7, 1837; James, June 21, 1839; William Franklin, April 16, 1842; Samuel, April 22, 1844; Gilbert, Feb. 1, 1847; Amanda Jane (deceased), 1849. James Marshall, Sr., died Feb. 11, 1877; Mrs. Jane Marshall, Jan. 21, 1876; Thomas, died in 1833; Alexander T., died in 1856. David Marshall was married to Mary Gray (now deceased), they had six children. John Marhall married Mary A. Cookston. George Marshall married Sue Finfrock, they have one child, Harry. James Marshall married Hattie Patterson, they have one daughter, Nora. William F. Marshall married Rebecca Will, they have two children, Flora and Hermon Roy. Samuel Marshall was married to Maggie A Cook Feb. 14, 1878; she was born in Wyandot Co. April 3, 1859; they have one daughter, Arvada, born Jan. 29, 1879; they reside on the home farm. Gilbert Marshall was married to Ellie Hann Dec. 29, 1875; they also reside on the the home farm. David, John, George and James Marshall, Jr., were in the late war. David Marshall (father of James), was one of early settlers of this county. He came from Pennsylvania, also the parents of Mrs. Jane Marshall. Thomas Edgington and wife emigrated from Jefferson Co. to this county, at an early day, and were among the pioneers of Richland Co.

MAY, LYMAN A., farmer; P. O. Crestline; he was born in Huron Co. Nov. 31, 1837; married April 17, 1866, to Sarah A. Seamon, who was born in Springfield Township March 30, 1845; they have the following family: Jennie E., born March 31, 1867; Dora F., June 4, 1868; Hattie E., Sept. 11, 1870; Ella, March 15, 1872; Annie, Oct. 1, 1874; William A. and Francis J., Oct. 22, 1877; George, Feb. 25, 1880. Mr. May enlisted in the late war. He was first a member of the 25th O. V. I.; served in this capacity for one year, then was transferred to 12th Independent Ohio Battery; remained in the service during the war and was honorably discharged.

MILLIKIN, WILLIAM B., resides one mile and a half southwest of Ontario. His grandfather was one of the first settlers in this part of the county. He came from Washington Co., Penn., and entered the southeast quarter of Sec. 33. Mr. Millikin's father was born in 1812; was married to a daughter of Jeremiah Bowers, who was a pioneer of this county. He moved to Allen Co., Ohio, in 1836, where William was born Dec. 2, 1837. He lived with his father until he had reached his 19th year, when he came to this county. In 1861, March 13, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth Walker. The next year, a call for volunteers was made. Mr. Millikin enlisted Aug. 11, in the 120th O. V. I., and marched South as a private, but subsequently rose to the rank of Second, then First Lieutenant. He was along with the disastrous Red River expedition, and was captured and taken to Camp Ford, Texas, where he was held as a prisoner twenty-four days. At the close of the war, Mr. Millikin returned and moved to Ontario. He was engaged in teaching for awhile and, in the spring of 1866, formed a partnership with J. T. Woods and S. A. Walker, and kept a store in Ontario about six months. About this time, he purchased a piece of land in Sec. 29, known as the old Mitchell farm, where he moved, Nov. 7, 1866. This place was in very poor repair when it came into his possession. A small log house and log barn constituted the farm buildings. The farm is now in good condition, and has all the buildings necessary to a farm, built with particular reference to convenience and durability, and at the same time presenting a very fine appearance. It is such men of enterprise and energy as Mr. Millikin, who improve our lands, bring up the market value of property, and exert about them a prosperous influence. He has two sisters living and one dead. A brother died Feb. 27, 1862, at Lebanon, Ky. He was 16 years old, and at the time of his death, was a member of the 64th O. V. I. Mr. Millikin's children are named Luemma, Mary, Laura and Stella. His father is still living in Allen Co., Ohio, at the age of 67 years. His land consists of his home farm and 120 acres of improved land in Shelby Co., Ohio.

MUNNELL, JOSEPH H., farmer; P. O. Ontario; he was born in Sharon Township in 1840. Was married in 1863 to Rosetta Nazor, who was born in this township March 7, 1844. They have the following children: Edward, born Aug. 3, 1864; John, Jan. 1, 1865; Kittie May, born in Wells Co., Ind., July 17, 1871; Claudy C., born in Jefferson Township, Wells Co., Ind., April 7, 1874. Harry was born in Shreve, Wayne Co., Ohio, Feb. 14, 1877; died on the 25th of March, at the age of 3 years 1 month and 11 days.

RACE, JOHN, L., harness-maker, Ontario. He was born in Columbiana Co. in 1833, and came to this county in 1853. He was married, June, 2, 1866, to Urilla J. Hackedorn, who was born in this township in 1846; they have the following family: Olive L. born Sept. 4, 1867; Emma G., March 18, 1869; Lizzie G., May 20, 1872; Walter H., Sept. 10, 1876; Della B., Oct. 25, 1877; Howard C., Nov. 27, 1879. Mr. Race enlisted in the late war in the 2d O. H. A; remained till the close of the war, after which he located in Ontario, and engaged in the harness business. He is a practical mechanic, is doing an extensive business, and is one of the leading and enterprising men of this township.

REINHART, WM. H., SR, came with his father, from Greene, Co., Penn., in 1830. He is of German descent, his great-grandfather, it is thought, having come from Germany. His father lived for many years in Greene, Co., Penn. In 1829, he came out and purchased a farm in Green Township, Ashland Co. (then Richland). The next year, he moved his family to this state, and settled on a farm in Mohican Township, which he leased for a term of seven years. At the expiration of this lease, he moved to his farm in Green Township, at which time Mr. Reinhart was 14 years old; and as that township was then in Richland Co., he came into this county in 1837. His father's family sustained all the hardships incident to pioneer life after their removal to this State. The part in which they settled was heavily timbered, and many years of hard labor at clearing were spent, and that, too, with but poor accommodations in the way of living. When Mr. Reinhart was about 20 years of age, he left home to learn the carpenter trade with an older brother. After working four or five years at the trade, he was married, Nov. 8, 1848, to Rebecca Ewalt, and began housekeeping in Loudonville in the spring of 1849. He lived there one year; he then bought his wife's old homestead, in Lake Township, Ashland Co., and lived on that farm four years. Having sold this place he removed to Wooster, and worked while in that town at his trade; but soon after going there he purchased a farm east of Wooster, one mile, and lived there two years. His next removal was to the vicinity of Shreve, Wayne Co. He purchased a farm there which he held until the year 1862, when he came to Mansfield. soon after coming to Mansfield, he purchased a farm in the eastern part of Springfield Township, on the Galion road, but continued to reside in Mansfield until the year 1867; at this date, he removed his family to that place, and lived there until the fall of 1879, when he made another exchange, and removed to the vicinity of Spring Mills, where he still resides. In all of these removals, Mr. Reinhart has invariably taken property in exceeding poor repair, and left it well improved, and with the value greatly enhanced. He is known as a skillful workman as a carpenter and builder. He is the seventh one of a family of nine children. Four of these are still living: J. Hughes Reinhart, still retains the old home in Green Township, Ashland Co.; B. F. Reinhart, a younger brother, has attained to high eminence in art circles as a portrait and landscape painter; and an aged sister, Mrs. Eliza Dalley, resides in Hancock Co., Ohio.

RINGER, ELIAS, merchant, Ontario. He was born in Stark Co. Jan. 28, 1825. He was married in 1849 to Mary A. Hohenshil, who was born Oct. 7, 1826. They have the following family: Caroline, born Feb. 18, 1850; Parven M., Oct. 30, 1852; Lydia R., March 14, 1861. Mr. Ringer came to this township in 1853, engaged in farming till 1878, then engaged in the mercantile business in Ontario, where he is doing a prosperous and successful business.

ROE, JOSEPH, farmer; P. O. Ontario. His parents, Thomas D. and Elizabeth Roe, were married in Orange Co., N. Y., in November 1802. His father's ancestors emigrated from England some generations previous; on his mother's side from Holland. His mother's father, Judge Holmes, was from Ireland and settled in Newton, N. J., and his mother was a native of New Jersey. His parents came from Jefferson Co., Ohio, 1804, and lived a few years about seven miles west of Steubenville. When the war of 1812 commenced, his father was drafted, and went to Mackinaw and other points under Col. Cotgrove; William Alban was his Captain, and Lieut. Solomon Gladden, late of Monroe Township in this county, his Orderly Sergeant; he went for six months, and while absent Joseph was born, May 18, 1814; when his father returned from the army, the family moved to Richland Co. in July, 1815, and settled in Vermillion Township, two miles northeast of Hayesville. In July, 1835, the subject of this sketch was married to Miss Jane Woods, and moved to Springfield Township, where he commenced improving a new farm, then in the woods, the southeast quarter of Sec. 19, one and a half miles west of the village of Ontario. After many years of toil, he succeeded in getting this land under a good state of cultivation. His wife died in April, 1838, leaving a daughter who survived her but a few years; he was again married in December, 1839, to Miss Margaret Chambers, who died in August, 1840. In October, 1843, he was married to Miss Martha Ann Lorimor, of Guernsey Co., Ohio. They have been permitted to raise nine children; the oldest, J. A., married Miss Crooks, and is a farmer; the second, Maggie M. J., married A. F. Sawhill, a druggist, and lives in Pittsburgh, Penn.; the third, J. C., is a minister and lives in Beaver Co., Penn.; the fourth, Sarah M., married J. Q. Codding, an attorney, and lives in Marion, Ohio; the fifth, T. S., married Miss Gibson, is a farmer, and lives in Madison Co., Iowa; the sixth, C. M., is a dentist in Mansfield; the seventh, Susannah L., the eighth, Lewis W., the ninth, Lillian May—the three younger—are at home. Mr. Roe has been active and prominent in his neighborhood both politically, and otherwise. In an early day he was prominently identified with the "underground railway," and with his hands, his influence and vote, worked against slavery until it went down in the great war of the rebellion. In the history of Springfield Township, his movements in this and all public interests are fully given.

ROE, G. W., was born in Ashland Co. Aug 16, 1825, and came to Richland Co. when a boy 7 or 8 years old; soon afterward he went to Sandusky, where he lived two years with a brother; he then returned to this county. and lived with his brother, Joseph Roe, until he became of age. He married Susanna Offineer, and by this marriage had nine children, one of whom is dead. They are members of the Methodist Church Mr. Roe owns a part of the southwest quarter of Sec. 30; he has been engaged for some years in selling medicines, prepared by Dr. U. C. Roe, for which he claims superior healing properties, especially for chronic diseases.

SEIBERT & BRO., blacksmiths; are following their trade, two miles south of Ontario, where they are ready to do all kinds of repairing, whenever wanted; horseshoeing is made a specialty. They are of German descent, their father, Adam, having been born in Germany, in the year 1812; he came over in 1830, and settled in Washington Co., Penn.; removed to Mansfield in 1839, and, in the fall of 1879, to Springfield Township, when his sons erected their shop, and began work at their trade, which they had previously followed in Mansfield.

SHAFER, J. M., an emigrant from Bavaria, Germany, Sept. 29, 1823; his parents were wealthy, and gave him an education necessary for a veterinary surgeon. After attending the public schools for some time, he continued his studies at home, under the instruction of a tutor; when he was 24 years of age. he obtained permission from his father to visit the United States, promising to return in two years; he came here in 1847, and worked one year at blacksmithing in a carriage-shop at Mansfield. In 1848, he was married to Verone Divel, and removed to Washington Township, where he lived a short time, when he bought a piece of land in the southern part of Springfield Township, and moved there; he soon sold this place, and purchased the southwest quarter of Sec. 9, where he now lives. Mr. Shafer has living nine boys and six girls; four of whom are married. Farming and stock-raising are his occupations.

STEWART, ROBERT, resides in the south part of Sec. 3, on a farm of 143 acres; he was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, and came into this county in 1816. with his father, who settled on a piece of land near where Mr. Stewart now lives. The land was, at that time, almost entirely covered with timber. The mill to which they carried their corn—on horseback at first—was thirty or forty miles distant. Mr. Stewart was married in 1844, and now lives with his family, on the farm he cleared, and in the county whose varied steps of improvement he has observed since the days of the early pioneers.

WALKER, ROBERT; he was born in Knox Co. (now Morrow) in 1809, on the John Walker farm, one-half mile north from Chesterville; remained there till he was 25 years of age. He was married, May 1, 1834, to Mary Mettler, who was born in Northumberland Co., Penn., Dec. 13, 1813; they had the following family: Elizabeth, born July 18, 1835; Smith A., born Aug. 15, 1838; William W., born March 17, 1841; John L., born July 10, 1844; S. Findley, born Sept. 11, 1848; Mary E., Feb. 13, 1851; Robert Miles, Aug. 26, 1854. Elizabeth married William B. Millikin; Smith A. Walker married Sarah Gass; William W., died near Pana, Ill., Feb. 16, 1873; John L. Walker married Laura Brown; S. Findley married Anges E. Mitchell; Mary Walker resides with her parents; Robert Miles died March 11, 1858. Mr. Robert Walker came to Richland Co. in May, 1834; located in Springfield Township, and engaged in the tannery business; continued till within a few years. His father, John Walker, settled in Knox Co. in 1807; settled seven miles west of Fredericktown; his nearest neighbor resided three and a-half miles; they were surrounded by Indians; Mr. Walker was drafted in the war of 1812; the night after the Zimmer family slaughter, Mrs. Walker took up her family of small children and went to the block house for shelter; she took three children on horseback, and wrapped them up in blankets; they were compelled to make this retreat for their safety; the country, at that time, was a dense forest, infested with wolves, bears, panthers and wild cats. Robert Walker's grandmother was taken prisoner at one time by the Indians, and made a very narrow escape. Smith A. Walker enlisted in the 15th O. V. I., under Capt. Dawson, in 1861; he was taken prisoner at Stone River; was held by the rebels sixteen days; he then came home; was exchanged and returned to his regiment on the march to Atlanta, Ga.; he was wounded in the left arm; when his time expired he returned home; he afterward went as substitute and remained during the war.

WALKER, JAMES P., farmer; P. O. Ontario; he was born near Iberia, Morrow Co., Jan. 6, 1851; married Sept. 3, 1872, to Margaret H. Sipes, who was born in Morrow Co. March 4, 1850; they have two daughters—Ella, born Oct. 22, 1875; Ada, born Aug. 16, 1879; Mr. Walker has been engaged in farming, is the owner of a good farm and is an enterprising and active man.

WARK, R. F., physician, Ontario; he was born Dec. 25, 1831, in Zanesville, Ohio. He was educated in District No. 1, Highland Township, Muskingum Co.; he commenced teaching school at the age of 16 years, in Sub-District No. 3, same township, and continued teaching in the same neighborhood thirteen years. He studied medicine with Dr. J. W. Craig, of Mansfield, and attended the Cleveland Medical College in the winters of 1862–63, and graduated in 1864; then went to Sago, Muskingum Co., Ohio, and remained there for ten years engaged in the practice of medicine. He then returned to Ontario and resumed his practice, has a family of two daughters and two sons.

TROY TOWNSHIP.

ABERNETHY, ALEXANDER, M. D., Lexington; Dr. Abernethy is the oldest resident physician of Troy Township. He was born in Pennsylvania in the year 1810; graduated at Jefferson College in Philadelphia in 1831; preached in Ferry Co., Penn., for six years; he then came to Ohio and settled in Lexington in 1836; at that time, Lexington had about fifty dwellings, three churches, two stores, one mill and one hotel; the country was sparsely settled, the roads in a bad condition, and the Doctor visited most of his patients on horseback, riding many weary miles through the country for small compensation. In 1843, he married Katharine Fulton, by whom he had four children. When the gold fever of California struck the Eastern States in 1850, the Doctor, like thousands of others, started for the Pacific coast; he arrived safely, he stayed in California about eighteen months, when he again returned to his home in Lexington. Previous to his trip to California in 1850, he served two terms in the Ohio State Legislature. The Doctor according to his quaint expression, has "seen much of the dark as well as the light side of life," his medical practice having extended over a period of more than thirty years; he is now living a retired life in the village of Lexington, known and respected by all.

BEVERSTOCK, A. B., retired merchant, P. O. Lexington. Allen B. Beverstock was born in the State of Vermont in the year 1804; in 1819, he removed to New York, remained there until 1821, when he turned his face westward and emigrated to Ohio, settling in Monroeville, Huron Co.; here he clerked for the Hollister Company; trading for furs and pelts from the Indians was a large source of income to this company; he remained in Monroeville until 1832, when he removed to Lexington, Richland Co.; here he engaged in the dry-goods business and also other business enterprises, by which he amassed a goodly fortune. Mr. B. was married in 1828 to Miss Reed of Monroeville, by whom he had one child; his first wife having died, he married Miss Underhill in 1837, by whom he had six children; Mr. B. continued in business until 1864, when he retired. When the late rebellion broke out, two of Mr. B.'s sons, Frank and Barney, went to the war; Frank served the interests of his country faithfully, sharing in all the marches, battles and skirmishes for nearly two years, when he was captured and languished in the rebel prison-pens for fifteen weary months; he escaped once, but was recaptured, and was finally exchanged through the influence and money of his father. Barney's experience was not so varied; he enlisted in the three-months service, and died at Fortress Monroe in 1864. Mr. Beverstock lives in his pleasant residence in the village of Lexington.

BOWSER, GEORGE, laborer, Lexngton; born in Troy Township, May 6, 1833; he is the second son of John Bowser, and was born on his father's farm, in the southeast quarter of Sec. 36; he lived on the old homestead until 1872, when he married Virginia, McWharter, of Marion, Ohio, by whom he has had one child—an interesting little girl, born in the centennial year, and named Ida May Bowser; immediately upon his marriage, Mr. removed to a small piece of land, containing 20 acres, in Sec. 35; remained about three years; from there he again removed to the southwest quarter of same section, where he bought a tract, containing 10 acres, on which he now resides. Mr. Bowser is one of the honest laboring men of Richland Co. A consistent member of the United Brethren Church, of which his wife is also a member.

BULL, EPHRAIM, farmer; P. O. Lexington. Mr. Bull is one of the oldest residents of Richland Co.; he was born near the city of Baltimore, Md., on the 7th day of April, 1806; his father removed to Pennsylvania, while Ephraim was quite young, and in a few years again returned to Maryland; in 1817, he turned his face westward, and emigrated to Ohio, settling in Washington Township, Richland Co. Ephraim lived in this township until his marriage to Elizabeth Ridenour, in September of 1829; he then removed to Troy Township; he is the father of seven children, six of whom are living. When the rebellion broke out, two of his sons went to the war as wagonmasters. On the 10th of September 1879, Mr. Bull and his estimable wife, surrounded by children and friends, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of their wedded life. Mr. Bull's home is situated on part of southeast quarter of Sec. 35.

COCKLEY, W. W., merchant, Lexington; dealer in all kinds of staple goods. A full assortment constantly kept on hand.

CUSTER, GEORGE W., hotel keeper, Lexington; born in Allen Co., Ohio, in the year 1842. During his early life, his father made several removals: first to Auglaize Co., then to Morrow Co.; then to Richland Co. While living in this county, the rebellion broke out and George enlisted in Co. D, 26th O. V. I., May 21, 1861, responding to the first call for troops to defend the honor of the nation; Mr. Custer enlisted for the term of three years, but after thirteen months of active service, most of which was spent marching from place to place, he took sick at Nashville, was honorably discharged from service and sent home. In 1864, he married Fidelia Worcester, of Morrow Co., where he again became a resident until 1872, when he returned to Richland Co., settling in the village of Lexington, and purchased the old hotel building on the southeast corner of the public square. Mr. Custer is the father of three children. In1878, he served as Councilman, and in 1879 was elected by his townsmen as Justice of the Peace. He has repaired the old hotel to a great extent where now can be obtained ample accommodations for man and beast.

DAUGHERTY, W. C., dealer in stoves, tinware, etc., Lexington.

DOUGLAS, SAMUEL, farmer; P. O. Livingston; born in Richland Co., Ohio, Sept. 29, 1821. His father emigrated to Ohio in 1818 and located in Monroe Township, Richland Co., where Samuel was born; he lived with his father until after his marriage to Harriet Finney, Nov. 20, 1845; she was born Aug. 31, 1826, in Richland Co. In 1852, Mr. Douglas and family removed to Troy Township, where he purchased a farm of 210 acres, owned by the heirs of the Hisky estate; he paid about $21 per acre for this valuable farm, situated in Secs. 22 and 27; it is now worth probably three times that amount. Mr. Douglas and family are members of the Congregational Church. He divides his farming operations between raising stock and grain. He is the father of five children, three of whom are dead.

GASS, WILLIAM (deceased), who entered the first land in Troy Township, in A. D. 1811, was born in Franklin Co., Penn., on Feb. 14, 1769; removed with his parents to Western Pennsylvania when a youth; worked there a few years, assisting his father, then returned to his native county, and in 1793 was married to Mrs. Jane McClain; soon after their marriage, they moved to Brooke Co., Va., where he bought a small farm; sold out there in June, 1800, and emigrated to the Northwest Territory, squatting on land which he bought as soon as opened for sale, near New Lancaster, now Fairfield Co., Ohio; in the spring of 1806, he sold out there and removed to Knox Co., Ohio, entering a quarter-section, one mile east of Mt. Vernon, where he resided until the spring of 1812, when he sold it and removed to his land in what is now Troy Township, Richland Co., where he remained during his life, reaching his log cabin the 23d of April. His family was then four sons, in the following order: Benjamin, James R., John, and William; their mother died in March of 1817. In July, 1818, he was married to Mrs. Rebecca Meredith, mother of Judge John Meredith, by whom he had one son, Isaac Gass; Mr. Gass was Representative of Fair-field County in the Legislature of 1803-04, sitting at Chillicothe; he was also frequently a member, both from Knox and Richland Cos., until he became quite aged; was said to be the oldest man in the Legislature during the last winter that he served, to wit: 1832-33; though of rather limited education, and making but little show, he was quite popular, and esteemed as a good reliable statesman. Religiously he was of the Baptist order, and died in that faith, in March of 1846, a little over 77 years old. A daughter, Elizabeth, was born in September, 1800, while the family resided in Fairfield Co.; she lived to be about 5 years old and lost her life from the effects of the kick of a colt.

GASS, JAMES R., farmer; second son of William and Jane Gass, was born in Brooke Co., Va., on the 8th of August, 1796; was brought by his parents to Fairfield Co., Ohio, in the summer of 1800, and to Knox Co., Ohio, in the spring of 1806, and thence to what is now Troy Township, in the spring of 1812, arriving at their cabin on the 23d of April, where he has resided continuously ever since, never having been absent from the township six weeks at one time, since the family first settled in it. Was married in the fall of 1822, to Miss Jane W. Burns; they raised four sons and three daughters; have now living, three sons and two daughters; his sons are now all settled on farms, in Grundy Co., Mo.; all served awhile in the late rebellion, and escaped uninjured; his daughters, now living, are Mrs. Samuel Wilcox, of Delaware Co., Ohio, and Mrs. S. A. Walker, of Troy Township, Richland Co., Ohio; his first companion, and mother of all his children, died on the 28th of August, 1843; he was again married to Mrs. Mary Ann Coates, on the 5th of June, 1845, who died on the 29th of August, 1857; after living a widower more than eleven years, he was married, the third time, to his present companion, Mrs. O. S. Campbell, on the 3d of November, 1863; James was more slender and weakly than any of his four brothers, but is now the only survivor of the family; he still owns and occupies a part of the land first entered by his father, in Troy Township, in 1812; he has resided longer in the township than any other person; taught school a little in his youthful days; practiced surveying some, and served as Justice of the Peace, in all, thirty years; during all these thirty years he has never had a jury trial.

GASS, WILLIAM (deceased), fourth son of William and Jane Gass); was born in Fairfield Co., Ohio, on the 25th of September, 1803; removed with his parents and their family to Knox Co., Ohio, in the spring of 1806, and thence to Troy Township, Richland Co., Ohio, where they arrived on the 23d day of April, 1812; William was a studious boy, and apt to learn, but had only means and opportunity to acquire a common-school education: labored on the farm with his father until the summer of 1829, when he was married to Miss Violet Davis, and settled on the farm in said township, which he owned and occupied nearly all the time until his decease, which occurred after about five days' sickness, on the 17th of May, 1876; his first companion died in the summer of 1852; they had four children, all of whom died in infancy except Benjamin R. Gass, who has been for some years Superintendent of Public Schools in Michigan; in the spring of 1853, William was married to Mrs. Sarah Young, who still survives him; there were no children of that marriage but R. F. Gass, who still resides on the farm owned by his father; in 1836, William became a preacher of the Disciple, or Campbellite order, and continued to proclaim that Gospel until his death; he was a pious, zealous man, much respected and esteemed by all his acquaintances.

GASS, JOHN (deceased), third son of William and Jane Gass; he was born in Brooke Co., Va., on the 12th of June, A. D. 1798; was brought by his parents to Fairfield Co., Ohio, in June, 1800; then to Knox Co., Ohio, in the spring of 1806, and to Troy Township, Ohio, on the 23d of April, 1812; he lived and labored hard with his father and family on their farm, until March of 1821, when he was married to Miss Ann McCluer; he built his log cabin, and commenced business on their own farm. Their children were five sons and three daughters, all of whom are living except one son and one daughter; those living are William R., now of Illinois; S. A., of Troy Township; P. P., of Plattsmouth, Neb.; Octavius D., of Arizona; Mrs. Chester Wilcox, of Troy, and Mrs. Dr. McKinly, of Kansas. John was an industrious, sober, honest man, and much respected by his acquaintances; he departed this life on the 30th of January, 1859, at his home in Troy, and in his 61st year.

GAILEY, RICHARD, REV. (deceased). Among the prominent educators of Richland Co., there are none who deserve a more extended notice of their worth and ability than Rev. Richard Gailey; he was born in Letterkenny, Ireland, Oct. 31, 1806; at the age of 21, he emigrated to the United States; being a man of some education, he engaged in teaching, for one year near Washington, Penn.; he then came to Mansfield Ohio, and entered the Academy of Father Rowland, taking up the classical studies; one year later, he entered the Sophomore Class of Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, Penn., and graduated in 1835; immediately on his graduation, he entered the Theological Seminary of the Associate Reformed Church at Allegheny, Penn., and was licensed to preach the Gospel by the Monongahela Presbytery, April 11, 1838; after serving as Pastor of Mt. Pleasant and Sewickly Churches in Westmoreland Co., Penn., for one year, he was ordained in 1839. On July 17, 1838, he was married to Miss Catharine Thornton, near Savannah, Ohio, and was called to take charge of three congregations in Richland Co., viz., Troy, Monroe and Pine Run; he took charge of these congregations in 1849, making his home at Monroe; he established a male and female seminary, in which he labored in connection with his duties as minister. In 1860, the seminary was removed to Lexington, Ohio, at which place he lived until the time of his death, April 2, 1875, after a very short illness. He was Pastor of Troy congregation nearly twenty-six years, and since his ordination, thirty-six years before, he had missed but three Sabbaths on account of sickenss. Mrs. Catharine Gailey, wife of Rev. Gailey, survived him about four years; her death occurred Nov. 10, 1879, at the residence of her son, Richard Gailey, in Lexington; she was a most estimable woman, and was widely and most favorably known. After the death of Rev. Gailey, the seminary was conducted by his daughter, Jane Gailey, until her marriage, March 26, 1880; she proved herself fully competent for the position she held.

GEORGE, WILLIAM, stock dealer, Lexington. Mr. George has been a resident of Troy Township for many years, being engaged for a greater part of his life in cattle and stock dealing, and other business.

GRUBB, G. W., painter, Lexington; was born in the village of Lexington, Richland Co., in 1840; learned the trade of painting in the year 1856. Immediately on the breaking-out of the rebellion, Mr. Grubb volunteered his services to sustain the honor of his country, being the first man in Troy Township to respond to the Presidential call for 75,000 troops, and the fifth man in Richland Co.; he enlisted for the term of four months; was in several skirmishes, and finally took part in the memorable battle of Bull Run; the night following the final ending of that disastrous battle, when the boys in blue were demoralized and flying in all directions before the victorious rebels, Mr. G. piloted Capt. McLaughlin thirty miles across the country to Camp Upton, sharing his rations and sustaining the old veteran in the long and weary tramp. While he lived, Captt McLaughlin ever regarded Private Grubb with highes. esteem and gratitude, believing he was the means of saving him from capture, and perhaps death. Returning to Columbus, Ohio, Mr. Grubb again enlisted in the Sixth Ohio Light Artillery, in which he served until the end of the war, passing through twenty-three heavy engagements and a great many skirmishes, sharing all the battles and marches of the Army of the Cumberland, mustered out of service at Columbus, Ohio, September, 1865, serving four years and five months, during which time he never lost a day from sickness, wounds or any other cause. It was a frequent remark of his Captain, that he need never look for Grubb any place else than at his post. Mr. G. was married in the spring of 1866, to Miss Elizabeth Keister, of Ashland, Ohio, and is now the father of a family of four interesting children.

KILGORE, JAMES, farmer; he was born in Greene Co., Penn., May 22, 1824. He came to Ohio in 1846, and first settled in Morrow Co., where he resided until 1863, when he removed to the northwest corner of Troy Township, where he at present resides. He was married in Morrow Co., in 1847, to Hannah Kilgore, by whom he raised a family of four children, all of whom are living—Nehemiah Harvey, Catherine Jane, Andrew Mitchell and John Marshall. Mrs. Hannah Kilgore died Aug. 27, 1858. Mr. Kilgore was married April 7, 1859, to Miss Joanna Larimer, a daughter of James Larimer, one of the early settlers of this county.

MANSFIELD, GILEAD. Mr. Mansfield was born on his father's farm, near Lexington, Dec. 2, 1823; he remained upon the homestead until of age; soon thereafter he went to Detroit, Mich., via Massillon and Cleveland; from Detroit he went to Hancock Co., Ohio, to visit an uncle, Mr. Ohio Dally; while there, he went upon his first deer hunt with good success; in company with his uncle he found a deer lick and arranged to meet his game there; an Indian ladder was made by cutting a sapling and trimming off the limbs within eight or ten inches of the trunk; by means of this the hunters climbed into a large tree, and in a large fork or crotch built a rest by weaving bark across, where they sat awaiting their game; about dusk a large deer came to the lick; the hunter fired from his ambush; it fell, rolled over three times, jumped up and disappeared; the hunters, with dog, pursued, and soon came upon the wounded stag; it was soon killed, dressed, and hung up on a sapling; when the chase ended, it was carried to Mr. Dally's cabin with great rejoicing, where ensued feasting and congratulations; soon after, Mr. Mansfield returned to the homestead, where he remained for a term of years; about 1848, he began reading medicine with his brother at Mt. Blanchard, Ohio; soon thereafter he returned to the farm again with his wife, Miss M. C. Lafferty, of Mt. Blanchard; they were married in 1850. In 1852, Mr. Mansfield opened a photograph gallery in Lexington, where he has resided ever since; he is quite skillful as a hunter; he made several trips to the Western countries in quest of deer and other large game, killing on one occasion seven or eight deer; in his parlor may be seen a large sketch representing one of these scenes in Van Wert Co. Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield have but one child—a son, who is a harness-maker by trade, aged 28. Mrs. Mansfield is a daughter of an early pioneer of Hancock Co., Mr. Lafferty, a man of high standing; he served as Squire thirty-two years in succession; he bought trees from Johnny Appleseed's nursery.

MEIER, H. GEORGE, farmer; P. O. Lexington; born in Meishausen, county of Shaffhausen, Switzerland, in the year 1849; he is the second child of Martin Meier; at the age of 23, Mr. Meier concluded he would try his fortunes in the New World, and accordingly he set sail from his native land on board the steamer "Montreal," on the 3d day of March, 1872, and landed at Castle Garden, New York, May 12, 1872; started to Toledo, Ohio, but when he got to Mansfield concluded to stop; got employment and worked for about two years; he then went to Crestline, Ohio, and remained there three years; in 1877, removed to Troy Township, to the farm now owned by Martin Warnes. In 1878, Mr. Meier married Lydia Kenser, of Richland Co. Mr. Meier is one of the sturdy emigrants who come from the overcrowded countries of Europe to the United States of America, whose free soil and free institutions continually extend a welcoming hand to all honest men and women of all countries and nations.

McENTRE, J. W., farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Lexington. John W. McEntre was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., in the year 1819; removed with his father's family to Troy Township, Richland Co., in 1833; settled on the northeast quarter of Sec. 36; his father built a cabin in the woods, and there John received his first experience in pioneer life; he helped clear the farm on which he now resides. Mr. McEntre married in the year 1854; has had eight children; his life has been spent in agricultural pursuits and raising stock; he is known far and near as one of the honest yeomanry of Richland Co.

POST, HENRY, farmer; P. O. Ontario; he was born in Washington Co., Penn., Sept. 8, 1805; came to Ohio in 1819. Married to Anna Andrews, who was born in Washington Co., Penn., March 26, 1807; they have the following family: William B., born Jan. 9, 1838; Nancy Ann, Sept. 19, 1839; James H., Aug. 22, 1841; Almeda, born Aug. 18, 1846. Mrs. Anna Post died Sept. 24, 1868. Nancy Ann married Wm. Palmer (deceased); they had two children. Mr. Post's father, Benjamin Post, was born in New Jersey in 1776; married to Nancy Pool, also born in New Jersey; Mr. Benjamin Post died in August 1830; Mrs. Nancy Post died in 1823; they came with their family to this county and located in 1819 in Troy Township; they both died on the home place; James H. Post now resides with his father, and is engaged in farming the homestead.

ROPP, JACOB, carpenter, Lexington. Jacob Ropp was born in Frederick Co., Md., in the year 1817; removed to Stark Co., Ohio, with his father's family, when he was 5 years of age, remained there nine years, and then removed to Richland Co. in 1831; he was the first child of Michael Ropp; in the year 1840, he began the carpenter trade; two years later—1842—he married Mary A. Summers, daughter of James Summers, of Richland Co., a gentleman well known throughout the county, having occupied a position of trust for several years; Miss Summers was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., in 1819, removed with her father to Richland Co., Ohio, in 1833; Mr. and Mrs. Ropp have had a family of four children, but have been sadly bereaved by losing them all; they have been members of the United Brethren Church for many years, and by consistent and orderly lives are preparing to join their children in the house not made with hands; their little home, consisting of 20 acres, is situated on the southwest quarter of Sec. 35. It is hardly necessary to add that this worthy old couple are known and respected by all their neighbors as kind and Christian people.

SCOTT, DANIEL, farmer; P. O. Ontario; he was born in Sandusky Township Dec. 31, 1837. Married in 1862 to Nancy Jane Lindley, who was born in Troy Township Aug. 10, 1836; they have the following family: Rosa Dell, born July 4, 1863; Maggie Bell, Dec. 24, 1864; Charlie R., Sept. 1, 1866; Ida C., Feb. 5, 1868; Florence E., Dec. 18, 1869; Alice Iona, Dec. 1, 1871; William E., July 16, 1873; Clarence A., Sept. 21, 1875; Emma A., Aug. 24, 1877.

SCOTT, JOHN, (deceased), was the second child of Thomas Scott, one of Ohio's earliest pioneers: he was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, Aug. 23, 1809. In the year 1834, he was married to Miss Jane Cantwell, of Richland Co., and two years later (1836), he with his wife removed to Troy Township and bought a tract of land containing 40 acres; to this he added by purchase from time to time, until he owned about 177 acres situated on Sec. 2; on this farm, Mr. Scott and wife spent the greater part of their lives and raised a family of nine children, all of whom are still living in different parts of this State. But a few weeks previous to his death, Mr. Scott had a social family reunion, all his children coming home to the old homestead to greet their aged parents and make glad their hearts in their declining years; this re-union followed so soon by the death of the father seemed almost providential in its character, giving all his children the opportunity of bidding their parent a final farewell. Mr. Scott died Jan. 19, 1880, aged 70 years 4 months and 26 days. He was an affectionate husband, a kind father and a devout Christian, having united with the Methodist Protestant Church in his 21st year.

SOWERS, MOSES (deceased). Among the names of the earliest emigrants who followed in the footsteps of the first pioneers of Ohio is that of Moses Sowers; he was born in York Co., Penn., July 22, 1791. His father emigrated to Ohio in 1811 and located in Fairfield Co., remaining there until 1815; Moses removed to Huron Co., and settled near where Monroeville now stands. Here he built the first grist and saw mill ever built in the county, and also hauled the first load of lumber to Norwalk. While living there, he became acquainted with Miss Susan Bloomer, whose parents had also come to Monroeville from Dorset, Vt.; he married her Oct. 18, 1829; she was born in Dorset, Vt., Nov. 25, 1802. Mr. and Mrs. Sowers were among the first to locate and may be said to be among the pioneers of the "fire lands;" in 1832, Mr. S. and family removed to Lexington, Richland Co.; he was accompanied to this place by A. B. Beverstock, with whom he formed a business partnership, and engaged in the dry-goods business for twelve years. He continued a resident of Lexington until his death, 16th of February, 1875. He had been a resident of Lexington over forty-two years and was esteemed as one of the county's best citizens; his aged wife and two sons are still residents of Lexington.

TINKEY, JOHN, farmer; he was born in Washington Co., Penn., May 31, 1834; he came to this county with his parents who first settled in Jefferson Township in 1856. He was married in 1858, to Miss Laura Ann Culver, by whom he raised a family of six children, five of whom are living—Monroe, Sarena, Susan Lodena, Mary Ellen, Anna May and Perry Burr. Mrs. Laura Ann Tinkey died Oct. 7, 1870. He was married in June, 1872, to Miss Caroline Davey; they are the parents of five children—Homer E., Rosa Alice, Abner Edwin, Gracie Edna, Lutenoa Edith; he removed to the northwest corner of Troy Township, in November, 1872, where in addition to farming he is engaged in the mill business. George Tinkey, his father, died Sept. 6, 1875, at the residence of his son in Washington Township. His mother, Elizabeth (Swickart) Tinkey, died July 17, 1872.

WASHINCTON TOWNSHIP.

ANDREWS, JACOB, farmer; P. O. Bellville; he was born in Delaware Co., N. Y., March 18, 1803; he came to this county with his parents Aug. 1, 1823; they settled in Jefferson Township; he remained with them until the age of 28 years. He was then married to Miss Christina Baker in December, 1830; she was born in Franklin Co., Penn., April 17, 1807; she came to this county in April, 1823. After his marriage he moved on the farm he bought, formerly owned by Thomas Andrews, for which he paid, at that time, $1 per acre, where he has ever since resided; they have seven children, three sons and four daughters, named John, Jacob, Andrew, Susannah, Nancy and Catherine, one died in infancy; John was married to Miss Anna Deadwiler; they had five children; his first wife died several years ago; he was lately married to his second wife, Miss Malinda Hoover, they have one child. Jacob, who is married to a daughter of William Spade, they have three children; Susannah was married to Anthony Clever, they have nine children; Catherine was married to John Riggle, they have eight children. Mr. Andrews has, by strict attention to farming and hard work, made for himself and family a good home.

He is a carpenter.

BENTLEY, ROBERT H., Gen., farmer. He was born at Mansfield, Ohio, Aug. 8, 1835. His father, Baldwin Bentley, was a prosperous merchant in Mansfield, but died at the early age of 26, leaving two children, viz: the subject of this sketch, then only a year old; a daughter, Mary Lake Bentley, subsequently the wife of Gen. R. Brinkerhoff. When 12 years old, Robert entered the dry-goods store of James Weldon then the principal merchant in Mansfield, and remained in the store until he went into partnership with his brother-in-law, Gen. R. Brinkerhoff, in the publication of the Mansfield Herald. Subsequently, he sold his share in the Herald establishment and went into partnership with James Weldon, his old employer in the dry-goods business, and remained with him several years. His grandfather, Gen. Robert Bentley, was one of the early settlers of Richland Co.; was an Officer in the war of 1812, and subsequently a Major General of militia, an Associate Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, and a member of the Ohio State Senate. Robert, his grandson and namesake, inherited his military tastes, and when the war of the rebellion broke out, he was among the first to volunteer. He went into service April 16, 1861, as a private in Capt. McLaughlin's company of the 1st Ohio Infantry. He came out of the service a Second Sergeant, and was soon after appointed Regimental Quartermaster, of the 32d Ohio Infantry. After the capture of Harper's Ferry, the regiment was re-organized, and he was made Lieutenant Colonel. With this regiment he went through the Vicksburg campaign, and in the battles which preceded the capture of the city won the special commendation of Gen. Logan, his division commander. After the capture of Vicksburg, he, resigned his position in the 32d Infantry, and was appointed Lieutenant Colonel of the Twelfth Ohio Cavalry, and remained with the regiment until the close of the war. In the raid upon Virginia Saltworks, and in the great Stoneman raid through Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas, he was in the command of the regiment, and for serv ces thus rendered, was brevetted a Brigadier General of volunteers. He was also tendered a position in the regular army, by the Secretary of War, but declined to accept it. In July, 1865, he resigned his position in the army. He remained for a time in business in Washington City, and then returned to Richland Co., where he engaged in farming and stock-raising near Mansfield. He was married, Aug. 3, 1876, to Elizabeth A. Lee; she was born in Licking Co., Ohio, Aug. 3, 1837.

BROWN, R. C., farmer; P. O. Lexington. He was born in Brooke Co., Va., Nov. 13, 1834; in October, 1835, his parents moved back to Washington Township, Richland Co., Ohio, to the farm they had left seven years before, and upon which Robert and his aged mother still live. After receiving the ordinary preparatory education, he entered Franklin College, and graduated in the year 1860. Enlisted for three months as a private soldier in the 15th O. V. I. April 22, 1861, and served in Western Virginia until mustered out; same autumn, assisted in recruiting Co. C, 64th O. V. I., and, when the regiment was organized, was mustered in as Captain, and commanded Co. C in the various battles in which the regiment was engaged, including the battle of Stone River, after which he received a commission as Lieutenant-Colonel; holding that rank he served with the regiment in the battles of Chickamauga, Mission Ridge, and Rocky Face Ridge, at which Col. McIlvaine was killed May 9, 1864; the command then fell to R. C. Brown, and June 17, 1864, he was commissioned Colonel; he commanded the regiment in the various skirmishes intervening, besides the battles of Resaca, Adairsville, Dallas, Peach Tree Creek, Atlanta, Jonesboro, Lovejoy, Spring Hill, Franklin and Nashville; except at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain (when he was in hospital), he was with the regiment in all its engagements and on all its marches; was discharged from the service of the United States, Feb. 23, 1865, at Huntsville, Ala., by reason of expiration of term of service. (For full military service see chapter on "Richland County in the War," part of which was written by the Colonel.) In company with Maj. S. L. Coulter he then rented a cotton plantation near Mooresville, Ala., where he remained during the years of 1865 and 1866; then returned to Richland Co., Ohio. Was married, Sept. 22, 1868, to Mary E. Gailey, a native of Westmoreland Co., Penn., and has two children—Helen T. and Charles G. Religion, United Presbyterian.

CAMPBELL, JAMES, farmer and stock-raiser: P. O. Lexington; he was born in Wayne Co., Ohio, in 1829, and came to this county in 1837. Was married to Malinda A. Bell in 1852; she was born in this county in 1834; they have six children, two sons and four daughters, viz., John M., Lacyette, Catherine J., Bertie A., Jessie, and one who died at birth; two are married, and three are single. Mr. Campbell was Infirmary Director of this county for six years; he was a good and faithful officer.

CHARLES, C. C., farmer; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in Cuyahoga Co., June 26, 1824; he remained there until he was 16 years old, when he came to this county with his parents; he stayed with them until he was 25 years old; from the time he was 18 to 24, he worked out by the month. He then got married to Miss Ruthan Enlow, April 27, 1874; she was born in Washington Co,, Penn., in March, 1822; she came to this county in 1830; they have eight children, four sons and four daughters, named William P., John J., George M., David H., Emeline A., Anna D., Alice M. and Lillie E. William P. and Emeline A. are dead. WELLER TOWNSHIP.

CHARLES, NEWTON, farmer; P. O. West Windsor; he was born on his present farm in March, 1845, and is a son of Elijah and Hannah Charles; he remained at home until he was married in 1870, to Miss Carrie Crabbs, daughter of Dr. Crabbs, of Olivesburg; after his marriage he settled on the old homestead. He entered the late war in March, 1864, in Co. D, 102d O. V. I., and served until the close of the war. Mr. C. is a good farmer and a breeder of fine sheep and cattle.

CLINE, JOHN, farmer; P. O. Olivesburg; he was born in this county March 13, 1839, and is a son of John (deceased) and Nancy Cline. Mrs. Cline was a daughter of Joseph and Rachel Flora, who removed from Virginia in the spring of 1801 to Belmont Co., and in 1814 removed to this county and settled about five miles north of Mansfield; they were among the first settlers that came in the county. Nancy was married in August, 1818, to John Cline; at her marriage her father gave her her choice of a horse or the price of it; she concluded to take the horse, as her husband had none; they moved to the farm on which Jacob Backinsto now lives, in the northwest part of Weller Township; they had no beds, no chairs, tables or anything of the kind to keep house with, or even a house to live in; they drove sticks in the ground, laid poles across, then brush over the top, and in that way lived until they could build their cabin; they have raised eight children, four boys and four girls.

FICKUS, SAMUEL, farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; his father came from Cumberland Co., Penn., in 1817, and located in Wayne Co., where he afterward lived. Mr. F. was married here in the fall of 1831, and moved to the site of Ganges, where he lived only six weeks; he sold out at the end of that time, and returned to Wayne Co.; purchased a farm and lived there twenty-eight years; in 1859, he sold the farm in Wayne, and again moved to this county, settling in Weller Township, and purchased the farm he now owns; he has been a Justice of the Peace three years; he has raised a family of three children, all of whom are married and settled.

FICKUS, JOHN W., farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; his parents came to this township from Wayne Co., in 1846, and settled where Mr. F. now lives; he remained at home until the opening of the late war, when he enlisted in McLaughlin's Squadron of cavalry, and passed through the war with that regiment; he was through the Atlanta campaign, serving in all thirty-four months. After coming home, he married and settled on the old homestead, where he now resides; he is now 33 years old, in the prime of manhood.

GATES, M. M., Superintendent of the county infirmary; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in this county Nov. 16, 1840, and is a son of Geo. and Elizabeth Gates, who came from Passaic Co., N. J., in 1828, and settled in Mifflin Township: they afterward moved to Williams and then Licking Co., and finally to Richland Co. again. The subject of this sketch is the eleventh of a family of twelve children; he remained at home until he was 19 years old, when he went to work on the Pan Handle R. R., and, at the breaking-out of the rebellion, enlisted in July, 1861, in Co. E, 12th O. V. I., where he served thirty-seven months; he took part in the following battles: Second battle of Bull Run, South Mountain, Antietam, Hunter's raid to Lynchburg, Scary Creek, with Gov. Wise of Virginia, Fayetteville, Pincton, Cloyd's Mountain, and many others; and at the close of the war he went back to railroading, where he worked three years; he was two years in Iowa, and in 1873 took charge of the Richland County Infirmary, which position he has filled with honor and credit both to himself and the county. He was married in 1874, to Lydia A. German, whose parents were formerly of New York.

HALE, JAMES C., farmer; P. O. West Windsor. Mr. Hale was born in Jefferson Co. in 1812; his parents came to this county when he was quite small; his father was a hard-working, industrious man, who cared more for the comforts of life, and who remained closely at home. The subject of this sketch remained with his father until he was 32 years old, when he was married, and settled on the farm on which he now resides; he has accumulated the conveniences and comforts of life, and now begins to enjoy the fruits of his work.

HAGERMAN, JAMES O., farmer; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in Belmont County in 1811, four years after his parents came to this county; he remained at home until 18 years old, when he went away to learn the carpenter trade; he followed that occupation until about two years ago, when his age prevented him from pursuing it farther. He is now 69 years old, and has raised a family of eleven children, four of whom are married; he sent two sons to the army in the late war, one of whom died there of typhoid fever; the other served his full term of three years; he was wounded in the arm while in the service; both the boys were in the 15th O. V. I.; Mr. Hagerman's father served in the war of 1812, under Gen. Harrison; in following an old Indian trail that led to Fort Mackinaw, he thought at one time, while on the march, if he had 100 acres of land as fine as he then viewed, it would be all he would want; in 1815, he entered that same land, and built his cabin there; Mr. H.'s house now occupies the site; this same year his father brought his family out; he died in 1822, leaving the family in the care of his wife and James; he aided his mother in their care, and now, in his old age, sees with pleasure the work of a long and busy life.

HAGERMAN, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. West Windsor. The parents of Mr. Hagerman emigrated to Harrison Co., Ohio, from Virginia in 1815; soon after that, they came to this county, where they continue to reside. His father, Joseph Hagerman, served in the war of 1812, under Gen. Harrison; Mr. Hagerman was born the same year his parents came West; his father died when he was but 3 years of age, and he was in consequence deprived of his care, and could get but little time to attend schools. He was always in school when he could attend, and enjoyed the sports of the juveniles then with a hearty relish. He had often participated in "barring out" the teacher, a practice then much in vogue. He was also quite a hunter in his day, and could trap and hunt with any one. His mother brought up the family as well as the circumstances of the times and her situation would permit. He had five brothers and sisters; he remembers an incident of his brothers which is worth preserving: Coming home from one of the neighbors one day, he saw in a clearing an old chestnut stump, thirty or forty feet high, one of whose topmost snags had been set on fire by some means. The boy imagined the fire to be the devil, and ran home as fast as his legs could carry him, to narrate the news and get the gun, with which to dispatch his majesty; his mother, however, quieted him and dispelled the illusion, though the boy stoutly affirmed for some time he was not mistaken. When Mr. Hagerman was 18 years old, he was apprenticed to the carpenter's trade; after learning it, he married Mary Bealby in 1844; her parents emigrated to this county from England in 1824; soon after he married, Mr. Hagerman moved to the farm he now owns, which he has highly improved, and made a comfortable and convenient home; Mr. and Mrs. Hagerman have raised six children, five boys and one girl, of whom four are married; one son, Oliver Hagerman, was in the war of the late rebellion, in the 100-days service. William Hagerman has been honored with the office of Justice of the Peace twice, and with the Treasurer of the township.

HAVERFIELD, JOSEPH, farmer; P. O. Mansfield; his parents came from Harrison Co., and settled on or entered the land Mr. H. now owns. His father served in the war of 1812, under Gen. Harrison, and was in the battle of Mackinaw. Mr. H. lived at home until he was 34 years old, when he married and settled on the homestead on which he yet lives. He enlisted in the Second Ohio Cavalry, Co. G, and was in the battles of Cumberland Gap and Knoxville, and was also in the pursuit of Morgan, when that person made his famous Ohio raid. Since his return home, Mr. H. has quietly pursued his vocation as a farmer. He has held the office of Assessor two terms, 1875 and 1876, as well as other minor offices in the township.

HAVERFIELD, ALLEN, farmer; P. O. West Windsor. Mr. H.'s parents came to this county from Harrison Co. in 1814, and settled on the tract of land now owned by Joseph Haverfield; they were among the earliest settlers of this township. Allen was born in 1826; he remained at home until 1855, when he was married and settled where he now resides. He served in the 100-days service in the late war. He was Assessor of the township in 1863 and 1864, and has held other offices of trust in the township.

MILLER, E. P., farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; his parents came from Dauphin Co., Penn., in 1832, and located on the farm on which Mr. M. now lives. He was born here in 1839, and remained at home until he was 21 years old; he then went to California and spent ten years in the gold mines in that State; at the end of that time he returned home, was married, and settled on the homestead, where he has since resided.

MOTTAYAW, JACOB, farmer; P. O. Mansfield. Mr. M.'s parents emigrated to this county from Baltimore, in 1834, when he was 4 years of age; he remained at home until he was 17 years old, when he went to Mansfield to learn the blacksmith's trade; he followed that thirteen years, when he came home and worked on the farm three years; at the end of that time he married and settled on the farm adjoining his parents' place; he has since made that his home. He is now 50 years of age, and in the full vigor of life. He has acquired a fine home for himself and his family.

OSBUN, ALFRED, farmer; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in this county, and has always remained a resident here; he lived with his parents until he was 35 years old, when he married and settled on a farm near them; when his father settled in this county, it was three miles to his nearest neighbors; the mills built on Mr. O.'s farm are among the early ones of the county; the grist-mill is now abandoned, but the saw-mill is yet used; the former was erected by his father, when Mr. O. was a boy, about 1834 or 1835. Mr. O. is now about 56 years old, and in the best of health.

OSBUN, CHARLES, farmer; P. O. West Windsor; he was born in Mansfield Dec. 25, 1821, and is a son of Isaac and Emelia Osbun, who emigrated from Washington Co., Penn., to this county in 1816; he (Isaac) had entered a tract of land in Weller Township in 1814, but owing to the unsettled condition of the times he did not move until 1816, when he settled in Mansfield, where he lived until the fall of 1821, when he moved to his farm in Weller Township; he erected the first farm-house in the then village of Mansfield; he held various offices in the township and county, and in 1821 he was appointed Associate Judge, which office he filled, with honor and credit, two terms of seven years each. The subject of this sketch remained at home until he was married, Oct. 2, 1843, to Ann E. Hand, who was born in Wooster Dec. 30, 1826; she is the daughter of Samuel H. and Fredricka Hand, the former of whom came from England, and the latter from Holland, about the year 1800. After his marriage, Mr. Osbun settled on part of the old homestead and present farm; Mr. and Mrs. Osbun have raised seven children—Walter A., Alfred R., Edwin K., Laura C., Cary L., Hanz W. and Carrie May Third, who was named after the day of the month on which she was born; Walter A. was lost in the war of the rebellion.

PITTENGER, H. O., farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. West Windsor; was born in Franklin Township, in 1839; was raised a farmer. His father, Mr. Isaac Pittenger, came into the county about 1830, there being but little improvement at that time; there were five children in the family, four boys and one daughter; two of the boys have since died; the daughter lives in Stark Co., Ohio, and both sons live in Richland Co.; Mr. H. O. Pittenger has always lived in the county. He enlisted August, 1862, in Co. D, 102d O. V. I. he served till the war was over, and was discharged May 31, 1865. Was married, April 23, 1871, to Miss Sarah Mary Morgan, of Weller Township, and daughter of Mrs. Mary Morgan; they have two children now living. Mr. Pittenger is one of the substantial men of the county; he was elected Township Trustee in the spring of 1879; he has as fine a farm and pleasant home as there is in Weller Township; his farm consists, in all, of 400 acres of land, and he has some of the finest stock to be found in the county; he has some thorough-bred short-horns, one that weighs over 2,200 pounds, and a two-year-old that weighs 1,230 pounds, both have pedigrees; he also has some of the best sheep in the county; has one ewe that clipped 16 pounds of wool and cleansed 8 pounds of nice clean wool. Mr. Pittenger has every facility needed for raising and keeping fine stock.

ROBINSON, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. West Windsor; his parents came to this county from England in 1821; they located in what is now Franklin Township, where William was born; he remained at home until the death of his father, in 1850. In 1859, he was married and settled in the old homestead, where he now lives. One of his brothers enlisted in the army, as a Lieutenant, and rose to the rank of a Major General; he was severely wounded at the battle of Gettysburg, but recovered, and is now occupying a responsible position. When William's parents came, they were a novelty to the average Yankee, who, full of curiosity and inquisitiveness, was not slow to find their good qualities, and always held them in great esteem.

RUTAN, ABRAHAM, farmer; P. O. West Windsor; his parents came from Westmoreland Co., Penn., in 1822, and settled in what is now Ashland Co., then a part of this county. Mr. R. was then about 8 years of age; he remained there until 1851, when he came to Weller Township, and bought the land on which he now lives; he kept "bachelor's hall" until 1860, when he was married; when he came to this county he had to haul his produce to the lake, his nearest market; now he has a good home and a market in a few miles for everything he can raise.

STEVENSON, MINERVA, MRS.; P. O. West Windsor; she was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, in 1813; she removed with her parents, William and Elizabeth Foulks, to this county in 1825, and settled in Franklin Township, about one mile south of Shenandoah; her father, William Foulks is of German descent; he came from Germany with his parents when small, and settled in Beaver Co., Penn. Mrs. S. was married to Samuel Stevenson, in the spring of 1835. He died in 1864; after their marriage, they settled on the present farm in Weller Township; Mrs Stevenson has raised eleven children; she had two sons, Levi and William, who served in the rebellion in the 163d O. H. G; her father, William Foulks, served in the war of 1812 as Captain under Gen. Beall.

URICH, JOHN, farmer; P. O. Shenandoah; he was born in Dauphin Co., Penn; in 1831, he removed with his parents to this county and settled in Franklin Township; he remained at home until 1848, when he married and settled on his present farm. His farm comprises about 425 acres, and is admirably arranged in every particular; there are no better fences in the county than are on his farm, and everything about him is in perfect trim. He keeps the best of stock, believing that it is far better to pay a big price for something good than to be burdoned with an inferior grade; his buildings are neat, commodious and arranged with a view to convenience. He is a close observer of the times in which he lives, and always profits by any suggestion of value, whether it be social, educational or agricultural. Above all, he exercises special diligence in the proper education of his family in its broadest sense; he is, in fact, the living ideal of a true American farmer.

WARD, CHRISTIAN, farmer; P. O. Olivesburg; he was born in Lancester Co., Penn., in 1818; he lived at home on the farm until 1849, when he was married, and in the same year he came to this county to look after some land that his father had entered some time before in Weller Township; he leased it out for a few years, and then moved on it and went to farming, himself; Mr. Ward has been honored with the office of Justice of the Peace nine years, and Infirmary Director and other minor offices in the township; he has, by his industry and strict attention to business, put himself in such a position that he can give each of his children a farm when they become of age. Mr. and Mrs. Ward have raised eight children, three of whom are dead; he lost one son, Jacob, in the late war. He enlisted in Co. G, 15th O. V. I., and was killed at the battle of Nashville, Tenn.

WARD, JOHN, farmer; P. O. West Windsor; was born in England in 1816. His father, together with his family, came to this country in 1819, and located where Mr. Ward now lives; his father, Mr. Joseph Ward, was the first school teacher, and taught the first school in this part of the township; the first schoolhouse was built of logs, in 1823, near Olivesburg; the one built near West Windsor was built about 1826. There were a few settlements around, within a mile or two, when they came here, and very little improvements made in the shape of buildings and clearing up the farms. They now have a very fine farm and a pleasant home. Mr. Ward has always lived here, with the exception of one year that he lived in South Carolina; while there he, together with a brother, were engaged in staging and carrying the mails over the route from Washington City to New Orleans; they run from Columbia, S. C., to Augusta, Ga. The manner and habits of the people there were not becoming to Mr. Ward's idea of living and thinking, and at the expiration of one year, he returned home, where he has since lived; he has occupied several offices in the gift of the people, such as Township Trustee, which he held for several years, also Township Clerk, etc., and is one of the first men in the township. He was married in 1844, to Miss Mary N. Condon, of Mifflin Township. Her father was one of the first settlers of Springfield Township; came in 1815; was Sheriff of the county at one time. Mr. and Mrs. Ward are highly respected citizens, and have a nice and intelligent family; they have a steam saw-mill in connection with the farm, owned and operated by his sons, C. C. and C. P. Ward, which has been in successful operation over one year.

WOLFORD, DAVID, farmer; P. O. Mansfield; he was born in 1825, and is a son of George and Esther Wolford, who emigrated from Dauphin Co., Penn., in the fall of 1829, to Mansfield, where they stayed about one week, when they bought and moved to the farm that David now lives on, in Weller Township; Mr. Wolford is the third of a family of eight children. He remained at home until he was married, in the fall of 1849, to Leah M. Kohler, of Franklin Township, daughter of Jacob and Elizabeth Kohler; after his marriage, he settled on the old homestead, where he still resides; he is at present an Infirmary Director, and has held other minor offices in the township; he is an industrious and thriving farmer. Mr. and Mrs. Wolford have seven children—Maria, A. F., Sarah E., Darius K., Allen H., Henry E. and William B.

ZIGLER, JAMES, farmer; P. O. West Windsor; he was born in Franklin Co., Penn.; he came to this county in 1878; the same year he was married to Miss Rebecca Roberts, of this county. Mr. Zigler is now steadily engaged on his farm, which, in time, will furnish him a pleasant home, and surround him with the comforts and conveniences of life.

WORTHINGTON TOWNSHIP

ALEXANDER, ROBERT (deceased); was born in Belmont Co., Ohio, Jan. 1, 1820; his father, Peter Alexander, was born in 1742, and was of Scotch-Irish descent. He married Jane Mitchell, who afterward became the mother of six sons and six daughters; they removed to Belmont Co. from Maryland, and to Worthington Township in 1826; he owned three quarter-sections of land north and east of Newville, where he and wife spent the rest of their lives, and finally were buried; Mr. Alexander was 86 and his wife 77 when they died, having lived together sixty-two years. Robert was the fourth son. He was married to Sophia Stimley Feb. 15, 1848. Benjamin Stimley, her father, was born in Pennsylvania, Sept. 29, 1798; married Rebecca Boling, by whom he had a son and four daughters; the Stimleys were Germans, and owned 80 acres of land; they removed to Union Co. where the father died September 1826, and the mother February, 1828. Robert Alexander and wife settled on a part of the home farm, which they afterward owned; they have had ten children, six are living—Harriett, born March 13, 1850; Charles S., April 28, 1852; Dayton, Jan. 6, 1859; Eda, March 5, 1861; Sarah L., Aug. 27, 1867; George A., Dec. 18, 1848; Jane, Aug. 28, 1854; Mary Ann, Sept. 10, 1856; Nancy, July 6, 1865. Robert Alexander, at the time of his death, owned 240 acres of fine land on which was a good saw-mill. Mr. Alexander's death suddenly occurred Feb. 17, 1879, aged 59 years 1 month and 16 days; his widow still lives on the old homestead, and with the aid of her children manages the estate.

ALLEN, JAMES, farmer; P. O. Butler; Mr. Allen was born in 1808; his father, John Allen, was born near Baltimore, Va., and was a farmer and blacksmith; was married to Rosilla Jane Wiles; they were the parents of seven children; the last account of them is they had removed to Illinois. His fourth son, James, was raised a farmer; came to Ohio in 1842 and settled near Independence, Richland Co.; was married to Eliza Morris, by whom he had two daughters and five sons; one daughter is now dead; his first wife died in 1844; was married to Julian Worley, in 1846, daughter of David Worley, a former resident of the township; he and wife both are now dead. The fruits of this marriage were three daughters and five sons; except three they are alive and married; the family live on John Ramsey's farm in Sec. 35; their eldest son was in the 3d O. V. C. during the rebellion, and returned home in safety. Mr. and Mrs. Allen have been connected with the Evangelical Church for sixteen years.

AMES, OLIVER, stonemason; Newville; was born in Genesee Co., N. Y., Dec. 14, 1824; his father's name was William B. Ames; his mother's maiden name Malenda Farwell; his father was a Scotchman by birth; his mother was born in England; his father was a stone mason by occupation; he was also an honored member of the Ancient Order of Free and Accepted Masons; he was a member of this fraternity for about sixty years; William B. Ames was twice married; by his first wife he had sixteen children, twelve sons and four daughters, all save one of whom lived to be married and to have children; his first wife died about the year 1839, in Geauga Co., Ohio, at a place called the "Head Lands," about thirty miles below Cleveland; about two years subsequent to his first wife's death, Mr. Ames was married to his second wife; by this marriage he had four children, two sons and two daughters; they removed to Ohio in 1833, and settled in Geauga Co., near Plainville; he resided here about ten years, when he removed to Huron Co., where he resided till his death, which occurred Dec. 12, 1866, aged 93 years; he was buried with the honors of the Ancient Order to which he belonged, in Townsend, Huron Co.; William B. Ames was a soldier in the war of 1812; he participated in the battle of Lundy's Lane, as also in many smaller engagements. Oliver Ames, when but 13 years old, conceived the idea that his parents made him work too hard, and failed to provide him with such food and clothing as he thought he ought to have, and as he felt certain he could get, were he freed from their control; he therefore forsook the home of his childhood to seek his fortune among strangers; he journeyed to Stark County, where he engaged with a farmer to labor four years on the following conditions, viz.: this employer was to feed and clothe him, send him to school two months each winter season he was there, and at the end of his term of service, he was to give him a horse, saddle and bridle, and $100 in money; young Ames soon found, however, that he had fallen into the hands of a hard master, who treated him with great severity; he received neither horse, saddle, bridle nor $100, but was turned adrift without a cent; he went to Columbiana Co., where he got employment with a farmer who treated him kindly, and with whom he remained until his marriage. Jan. 4, 1845, he was united in marriage to Miss Rachel, seventh daughter of Abram and Abigal Gant, of Columbiana Co.; Miss Gant was born in Gloucester Co., N. Y., Oct. 8, 1824; her parents were both of English descent; they emigrted to Ohio in 1830, and settled in Columbiana Co., where they continued to reside as long as they lived: they were parents of eight children, who lived beyond the period of infancy. one son and seven daughters; Mr. Gant departed this life in the winter of 1847, aged about 70 years; Mrs. Gant was about the same age when she died, January, 1856; two years after his marriage, Oliver Ames commenced working at the stonemason's trade; he followed this business about twenty-three years, and met with very good success. By careful management and close application to business, he has been able to support a very large family of children, and to secure a competence for his declining years; Mr. Ames removed to Richland Co. with his family, in 1866; he purchased a farm of 80 acres near Bunker Hill, in Worthington Township; in 1874, he sold this farm and bought one containing 84 acres, situated about three-fourths of a mile east of Newville, on which farm he still resides; this farm is a little rough but highly productive, and Mr. Ames has it in a very good state of cultivation; they have a family of ten children, five sons and five daughters; named in the order, Abigal, born Aug. 11, 1846; Francis Marion, Oct. 1, 1849; William W., Dec. 9, 1851; Edwin Oliver, Oct. 5, 1854; Rachel Ellen, Oct. 14, 1856; George Curtis, Jan. 2, 1859; Almira and Alvira (twins), July 26, 1861; Alfaretta, April 1, 1863; and Clark, Nov. 6, 1866; Alvira died in infancy. Mrs. Ames died April 7, 1880; she was an invalid for many months; she died in the 56th year of her age and in thirty-sixth year of her married life.

ANDREWS, THOMAS B., farmer; P. O. Lexington; was born May 17, 1807, near Canton, Stark Co., Ohio, of Scotch-English parentage; raised and schooled in the common schools of that day in Canton, the county seat of Stark Co. up to 1821; removed to Wayne Co. in that year, and in 1823 removed to Richland Co., and settled on the northwest quarter of Sec. 24, Township 21, of Range 17. Removed to Mansfield, Ohio, in 1827, and where, on the 22d day of January, 1829, he was married to Miss Marilla Pollard, a native of the State of Vermont, and in the fall of that year removed to Knox Co., Ohio, and remained there until the 15th day of November, 1833, the day after that great phenomenon, the falling of the stars, occurred, when he moved back to Richland Co., and settled on the southeast quarter of Sec. 19, Township 21, of Range 17, where he has continued to reside until the present time, this couple have had eleven children, sixty-two grandchildren, and fourteen great-grandchildren. Moses Andrews, father of Thomas B., was born in Washington Co., Penn., on the 6th day of January 1789; and the mother, whose, maiden name was Patience Capes, was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, in the 13th day of April, 1784; they were married Aug. 12, 1806; they then removed to Canton, Stark Co., Ohio, immediately thereafter, where the said Moses Andrews worked at the carpenter's trade, until he was called by the voice of the people into public life; he built the first frame house, and put on the first shingle roof in that town; he was the first Coroner, and the second Sheriff of that county. Moses Andrews died Jan. 15, 1857; Patience Andrews died April 23, 1868.

ANDREWS, JOHN, carpenter and farmer; P. O. Butler. John Andrews was born in Clarke Co., Ohio, April 14, 1821; being of English on his mother's, and Irish extraction on his father's, side; he was compelled to work on a farm in early life; at the age of 14 years he commenced to learn the carpenter's trade, under Moses Andrews, Sr.; he has worked at it and farming alternately, ever since. In 1843, he was married to Jas. Cunningham's daughter, Sally; the result of this union was two sons and five daughters; three are at present alive. He came to Washington Township in 1823, and settled near Bunker Hill, on the Hazelett farm, in Sec. 24. His first wife died in 1855; was married to Marinda Mix, daughter of Justus Mix, in 1856, by whom he had two sons and five daughters; five are living. Mr. Andrews first and second wives, had the same number of sons and daughters, and each presented him with twins, In 1869, he bought 21 acres, in Section 31, of this township, on which he has since lived; he has held several minor offices, is a member of the Masonic Fraternity, also the Patrons of Husbandry In 1862, he enlisted in Co. E, 3d O. V. C.; in May, 1863, he was discharged, on account of disabilty; was drafted in 1864, served till the close of the war in April, 1865, when he again was discharged, sick; he returned, after his recovery, to his work-bench and plow.

BEVERIDGE, JOHN, tailor, Newville. He was was born in Clare Co., Scotland, March 27, 1831; he is the eldest son of John and Catharine Beveridge; when he was about 7 years old, his parents emigrated to this country, and settled near Savannah, at that time in this county. He remained with his parents till his father died; one year after his father's death, he was apprenticed by his mother to Leaben Burgen of Ashland, to learn the tailor's trade; served an apprenticeship of five years; he then worked journey-work for about two years, when he rented a shop in Petersburg, where he worked for about three years. In September, 1853, he was married to Miss Julia, eldest daughter of John McKahan of Jeromeville, Ashland Co.; by this marriage he had two children, twins, both of whom died in infancy. Their mother died soon after their birth, and in the eleventh month of her married life; they were all buried at Petersburg. About the year 1854, Mr. Beveridge removed to Lucas, Monroe Township, and rented a shop, and continued to work at his trade. Aug. 23, 1855, he was married to Miss Fayetta Graff, of Green Township; by this marriage he had one child, a daughter, named Catharine, who died when about 19 months old; his second wife died Feb. 15, 1858; both mother and daughter are buried at Mount Zion. In September of the same year, Mr. Beveridge removed to Newville, where he engaged in the same occupation. March 15, 1859, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Bunton, daughter of Joseph and Jane Bunton, formerly of Washington Township. Miss Bunton was born in Washington Township June 11, 1835; she was raised by Alexander Freeman and wife, having been taken into their family, when about 7 years old, her mother dying when she was about 5; she continued to live with Freemans till her marriage; they have continued to reside in Newville from that time to the present. Mr. Beveridge enlisted as a private in Co. H, 120th O. V. I., Aug. 21, 1862. A month or two later, his regiment was ordered to the front. He took an active part in the fight at Chickasaw Bluffs, in the rear of Vicksburg, capture of Arkansas Post, siege of Vicksburg and the engagement at Jackson, Miss. His regiment was subsequently transferred to the Department of the Gulf; he was with his regiment when that memorable disaster occurred on Red River, on which occasion their Colonel was killed, and nearly the entire regiment captured. Mr. Beveridge was captured with the rest, and marched to Tyler, Tex., where he was held as a prisoner till the close of the war; he was in prison thirteen months, when he was exchanged, returned North, and was honorably discharged from the service. Mr. Beveridge and wife are the parents of four children; three sons and one daughter—Oliver, born Dec. 12, 1860; Ira, Nov. 12, 1867; Maud, May 31, 1870, and Lewie, Jan. 8, 1873. Lewie died Oct. 22, 1873, and was buried at St. Johns. Mr. Beveridge became a member of Monroe Lodge, No. 224, I. O. O. F., in 1856. After his return from the army, he united with Sturges Lodge, No. 357, at Newville, of which lodge he is at the present time an active and energetic member; he has attained to the highest rank in his lodge, and is assiduous in the discharge of all his duties. He has been a very active and zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church about sixteen years.

CALHOON, NOBLE, farmer; P. O. Newville; was born in Pennsylvania, whence he came to Richland Co.; he settled on the farm one mile north of Newville along with his father, where he stayed till his marriage; John Stanton his boyhood friend relates this, and says he (John) came to this county in 1835, and settled at Newville; Mr. Calhoon has been very successful financially in life, as his broad acres and well-filled granary will prove; he and wife have raised a family of children who are doing business on their own account, being well started in life.

CARLISLE, FREEMAN, farmer; P. O. Newville. Mr. Carlisle's grandfather was of German descent; his father came from Holland at a very early period of our country's history; Freeman's grandfather was a farmer, he served through the Revolutionary war on the American side; he served as a Captain, afterward is supposed to have been promoted to a colonelship before the close of the war, he was at the battle of Bunker Hill and many other engagements; he was the sire of two sons and two daughters, his wife's name being Darvis; his eldest son, James C. (Freeman'a father), was born in 1780; he lived in the State of New Jersey, and was by occupation a farmer; was married to Lydia Hart in 1807, they had six sons and five daughters; they removed to Columbiana Co., Ohio, 1809, when he teamed over the mountains between Pittsburgh and New York; when the war of 1812 broke out, he enlisted under Gen. Harrison and served till the close of that sanguinary conflict; he helped to erect the block-house at Jeromeville, also the one on the Clear Fork, near the present site of Robert Darling's house; he removed to Richland Co. in the fall of 1832, and bought 80 acres in Sec. 4, which he and his sons proceeded to clear and farm till his death, which occurred May 27, 1865; his fifth son, Freeman, was born June 5, 1829; stayed at home till his majority. Was married to Margaret Baughman in 1851 by Esq. Kile; the only fruit of this union was one son, Albert, when the mother died; in 1854, was again married to Sarah Ellen Brookings, whose father is a shoemaker and owner of a farm; by his second marriage, Freeman had four children viz.: first, Lydia C., who died Jan. 14th, 1877; second, Chas. E. C.; third, Mary Ellen C.; fourth, Sarah E. C.; Mr Carlisle has held several minor offices; he owns the old homestead on which he has lately erected an elegant house and other improvements; he and wife united with the U. B. Church in 1874, of which they have since been bright and shining lights. His brother James was in the Mexican war, and died at Point Isabel; also has a brother who went to California where he saw many ups and downs, became an honored and respected citizen.

CATE, ANTHONY, farmer; P. O. Butler; Anthony Cates was born in Germany Jan. 6, 1825; his father, John Cate, Sr., was a German; he came to Richland Co. and settled in Washington Township, in 1831, where he bought 160 acres of land; Anthony was raised to farm work. On 1846, he was married to Margaret Baker, daughter of Christian Baker, who was a citizen of Jefferson Township; he and wife are the parents of three sons and five daughters, all of them are alive, viz., Cyrus, Lecta, Mary, Sanford, Jemima, Anthony, Nora, Alwilda. Cyrus married to Elizabeth Freehefer. Lecta married to Albert Zelliner. Mary married to George Freehefer, and Jemima married to William Mickey. Mr. Cate bought 120 acres of land in Wyandot Co.; sold it and bought 80 acres near Lexington; sold this and purchased 120 acres below Darlington; sold out, removed to Wood Co., and bought 280 acres, sold and bought 240 acres where he now lives in Sec. 26, northeast quarter Range 17, Township 21; afterward sold to his son-in-law, William Mickey, 55 acres, he now owns 185 acres in the same section; Mr. Cate has always been a hard-working man, who has accumulated the most of his wealth by hard labor; he followed grain thrashing for sixteen years (his son is now engaged in the same business), he is also a member of the Clear Fork Grange. His brother, William Cate, entered the 100-day service during the late war at 19 years of age; contracted disease, of which he died shortly after he was brought home. Mr. Cate's farm is especially adapted to the production of wheat, and is beautifully located.

CATE, JACOB, farmer; P. O. Newville; was born in Germany Sept. 27, 1832; he is the second son of John and Catharine Cate; his mother's maiden name was Doup; his parents came to this country when he was but 2 years old; his father entered a quarter-section of land in the southeast part of Washington Township, Richland Co., where he still continues to reside. He is the father of ten children by one wife, five sons and five daughters; four sons and three daughters of whom are living and have children. Mrs. Cate died in 1862, and is buried on the farm. Mr. Cate is now about 84 years old; he is quite hale and hearty for one of his years, and bids fair to live several years longer; he has performed a great deal of hard labor, and witnessed many solemn changes in his time. Jacob Cate was married to Miss Catharine, second daughter of Henry Groun, of Jefferson Township, in this county, in 1854; she was a Pennsylvanian by birth, and was born in 1830. Jacob Cate farmed for his father for a share of the crops, for several years; May 8, 1865, he purchased, of his father, the northeast quarter of Sec. 15, in Worthington Township, where he has since resided; this is a choice farm, and Mr. Cate is a model farmer; he seldom fails to raise good crops; Mr. Cate and wife are the parents of eleven children, all living, save one who died in infancy; of the living there are six sons and four daughters, named in the order of their births, as follows: Elizabeth, David, Mary, Jacob, John, Charles, Margaret, Isadora, Philip and William; the eldest is about 23, and the youngest 5 years old.

CRAMER, REUBEN, farmer; P. O. Butler. George Cramer, father of Reuben Cramer, was born in Berks Co., Penn., in 1798; he was of German descent; his ancestors were among the first settlers of Pennsylvania; in the days of his boyhood and early manhood, he followed teaming for about eleven years, between Lehigh and Philadelphia. He was married to Miss Elizabeth Henry; he moved to Ohio in about 1835, he stopped in Wayne Co., near Smithville, about two years; from there he removed to Richland Co; he purchased 40 acres of land in Sec. 22, in Worthington Township, on which he removed with his family, and on which he continued to reside as long as he lived; after coming to this township, he assisted in clearing a great deal of land besides his own; he died in 1870. in the 72d year of his age. His widow is living at this date, and has attained to the advanced age of 75 years. George and Elizabeth Cramer are the parents of eight children; six of whom are now living. Reuben, their eldest son, while a young man, learned the carpenter's trade; he followed this occupation until 1874. He was married to Miss Julia A. Fike Nov. 21, 1855; they are the parents of ten children, six sons and four daughters, named in the order of their births as follows: Daniel, born March 5, 1857; Malinda, Nov. 25, 1858; Samuel, June 10, 1860; George, May 15, 1862; John, Nov. 27, 1863; Samantha A., Oct. 20, 1865; Mary E., July 27, 1867; Jefferson, July 7, 1869; Franklin, May 24, 1871, and Ellen, Dec. 10, 1875; all of whom are living save Jefferson, who died young. Mrs Cramer, who was born May 29, 1834, in Worthington Township, was a daughter of Tobias Fike, who was of German descent, and a farmer by occupation. Aug. 20, 1855, Mr. Cramer purchased 40 acres of the northeast quarter of Sec. 21, in Worthington Township, for $1,015, where he has since resided; he has very materially improved this farm since it came into his possession; he has erected buildings thereon which are both elegant and commodious; April 23, 1855, Mr. Cramer bought of Jackson Nichols, for $500, 20 acres of the west half of Sec. 28, in this township; March 7, 1872, he bought 40 acres of the same section, of Jonathan Divelbiss, for which he paid $2,000; he also bought the farm owned by his father at his decease, but has since disposed of it; he is now the owner of 100 acres of land which he and his sons cultivate; he takes a deep interest in the cause of education; more especially in the education of his own children. His son Daniel is a teacher by profession and has been engaged in the business for some time. Mr. Cramer joined the Lutheran Church at the early age of 14 years; he and his good wife are respected members of the community in which they reside.

CUNNINGHAM, JAMES CAPT., deceased; he was born in Baltimore, Md., in 1780, and in 1786 emigrated with his parents to Westmoreland Co., Penn., and afterward to Monongalia Co., Va., where his father died; in 1803, he eloped with Hannah Stateler, to Pennsylvania, where they were married; returning home, they received the forgiveness and blessing of their parents; in 1804, in company with his wife's parents, they removed to the vicinity of the Black Hand, Licking Co., Ohio; in the autumn of 1805 his wife died, leaving one child, that child is Mrs. Elizabeth Baughman; she now resides with her children in Mansfield. In 1808, Capt. Cunningham was married to Margaret Myers, and in May, 1809, came to Richland Co., and located on the Black Fork of the Mohican, near Perryville, where he put out a crop of corn; then went back, brought out his wife, and put her down in the woods, alongside a camp-fire, and commenced to build a log shanty over her head, which he completed in three days, with the assistance of three men; later in the season, he removed into the only log cabin then standing in Mansfield, which had been built a few months previously, by one Samuel Martin; the cabin stood on the lot known as the Sturges corner, now ornamented by the handsome three-story brick building of H. H. Sturges. He removed there to board Gen. Mansfield's surveying party, and to "keep tavern," to entertain persons who came here to purchase Virginia military school lands, which were then offered for sale. His wife at first objected to the project of removing to Mansfield to keep boarders; provisions were scarce, and hard to obtain, and she expected in a few months to become a mother; her consent was finally given, and the captain shelled a few bushels of corn, packed the grist on two horses to mill at Clinton, Knox Co.; the next day, he returned home with the meal, and the day following removed to the cabin above mentioned, where, on the 23d of August, 1809, his wife gave birth to a daughter (Matilda) who was afterward married to William Perry. In the spring of 1810, they removed from Mansfield to the Clear Fork Valley, near St. John's Church, where he rented a patch of cleared land and put out a crop of corn. The next year, he removed to the Black Fork, a mile south of Greentown, where he remained until after the murder of the Zimmer family. At the commencement of the war of 1812, he began raising a company of volunteers; he called the settlers together at his house, and after stating to them the condition of the country, succeeded in raising a company of men for active duty, the remainder being left to guard the settlement from the incursions of marauding savages; he marched his men to Mansfield, and camped on the public square, where they remained for a few days, and were joined by other volunteers, and then marched to Detroit. At the end of the war, he entered a farm in Worthington Township; cleared, improved, and then sold it, with the intention of removing to Missouri; but, reconsidering the matter, he purchased the farm adjoining his former home, where he resided until his death, which occurred in August, 1870. Capt. Cunningham cut the first crop of grain ever harvested in Richland Co.; he was active and energetic, taking a leading part in public affairs, and was the first acting Sheriff of the county; he was an excellent marksman, and often tried his skill upon the different wild animals which then infested the forests. During the time of his captaincy, Mr. Cunningham attended an officers' muster at Berkshire, Delaware Co., Ohio; just as the company was about to break up, three suspicious-looking soldiers made their appearance on the parade ground; they were immediately arrested as deserters, and subjected to a critical examination, separately; they each protested their innocence, and declared that they had been out on duty as a fatigue party under Col. Root, and on hearing that Hull had surrendered his army, they had determined to make good their escape, which they did; and in order to approve what they affirmed, they told the examining officers that Col. Root was now at home, a distance of about nine miles from Berkshire; Col. Kratzer then called around him his officers, told them the story of the soldiers, whose intelligence concerning Hull's surrender made them almost frenzied with anxiety, and asked the services of some one to carry a message from him to Col. Root; but one would comply; at this time, Elm Creek, near whose banks the officers were parading, had swollen from recent heavy rains; the waters had overflowed the banks, and covered the bottoms on either side; it was necessary to cross the stream to go to the residence of Col. Root; again Kratzer called upon his officers; "Who," said he, "will cross that creek, and bear a a message to Col. Root?" A moment's pause waited their reply, when several voices almost simultaneously responded, "I will." About six or eight immediately mounted their horses and plunged into the rolling flood. Timber and rubbish were floating down the stream, offering dangerous obstacles. The company had not proceeded far until they retreated, declaring that no man could cross that stream in safety. "Yes, there is," said Capt. Cunningham, and snatching the message from the hands of the officer, he mounted his charger and plunged into the flood. He gained the opposite shore, however, in safety, and proceeded nine miles through a dense wilderness to the residence of Col. Root. The Colonel verified the statement of the soldiers, and dispatched forthwith an answer to Col. Kratzer, requesting him to dismiss the prisoners. On receiving this, Capt. Cunningham retraced his steps to the banks of the stream, which he recrossed the next morning and arrived safely in camp, amid the cheers and congratulations of Kratzer and his officers.

DARLING, JONATHAN (deceased); he was born in Virginia March 7, 1793; his father's name was Joseph Darling; his father was a farmer by occupation; he came to Ohio at a very early day and settled in Coshocton Co., where he continued to reside till the day of his death. He died while on a visit to his children in this county; his widow came to this county and lived with her son Jonathan the remainder of her days. They were both interred in the St. Johns Cemetery, in Monroe Township. Jonathan Darling was married to Miss Catharine Butler June 24, 1816; they came to this county at an early day, and he purchased a quarter-section of land in the fertile valley of the Clear Fork. His farm adjoined that of his brother William, on which the old block-house stood, being situated in the eastern part of Worthington Township; he subsequently purchased another quarter-section adjoining his first purchase; he then owned a farm of 300 acres of as choice land, perhaps, as there is in the county. He continued to reside on this farm as long as he lived, and with the aid of his sons made many lasting and valuable improvements thereon. Mr. Darling was a quiet, inoffensive, sober and industrious man; kind and indulgent to his children, and social and friendly in his intercourse with the world at large. He and his good wife were members of the Lutheran Church at St. Johns for many years; they were by no means slack in their contributions for religious and benevolent purposes. Mr. Darling and wife are the parents of ten children, named in the order of their births, as follows; Robert, Joseph, Rebecca, Squire, Vincent, Abigal, Jane, Sophia, John, Editha and Jonathan Passence; Rebecca, died Dec. 22, 1847, aged 27 years and 10 months; Abigal J., March 29, 1872, aged 46 years 7 months and 24 days; all their other children are living, and all are married and have families but Sophia, who is unmarried. Mrs. Darling died April 18, 1859; Mr. Darling departed this life July 25, 1863. He died in the 71st year of his age; and she was in her 66th year when she died; they are both, also her deceased daughters, interred in the St. Johns Cemetery in Monroe Township.

DARLING, JOHN M.; farmer; P. O. Perryville. John M. Darling, fifth son of of Jonathan and Catharine Darling, was born in Worthington Township, Feb. 25, 1829; the days of his boyhood and early manhood were spent on his father's farm, in assisting him in the cultivation and improvement thereof. March 21, 1856, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary, eldest daughter of Jonathan and Eve Henry, of Knox Co., Ohio; Mary Henry was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., July 9, 1837; her mother's maiden name was Brolian; her parents were both of German descent; she had one brother, named Thomas, and one sister, named Vashti; her brother died when about 14 years old; her sister married Martin Haas, and resides in Jackson Co., Kan.; her mother died in 1853, and is buried in the Dunkard graveyard near Ankneytown in Knox Co. John M. and Mary Darling are the parents of thirteen children, six sons and seven daughters, named in the order of their births as follows: Oliver Cromwell, born Dec. 30, 1858; Hulda Ann, Feb. 1, 1860; Mary Alice, Oct. 25, 1861; Emma Idessa, Sept. 25, 1863; Elvy Catharine, Feb. 23, 1865; Jonathan Homer, Jan. 18, 1867; John Ryley, Oct. 4, 1868; Milly, Aug. 30, 1870; Otto French, Sept. 12, 1871; Matty, March 20, 1873; Myrtle, Nov. 20, 1877; and Dennis, Feb.10, 1880. Emma Idessa died Feb. 3, 1864; Oliver Cromwell, Feb. 7, 1864; and an nfant son July 20, 1874; the first two died of scarlet fever; they are buried in the St. Johns Cemetery. After his marriage, Mr. Darling farmed for his father on shares for a number of years; at his father's death he bought the interests of his brothers and sisters in that part of the old homestead first purchased by his father; he still continues to reside on this farm; his farming operations are conducted in a workmanlike manner, and his crops, as a general thing, are most abundant; he and his good wife are respected members of the community in which they reside.

DARLING, F. M., farmer; P. O. Perryville. His father, William Darling, was the second son of William and Mary Darling, who were among the earliest settlers of this county; Mr. D. was born April 5, 1820. In 1844, he married Avis Manchester, who was born in Washington Co., Penn., in 1818; soon after their marriage, William Darling, Sr., presented them with 160 acres of land in Sec. 2, where he always lived; their children were George, Marion and Thomas Jefferson Darling (the latter deceased). June 29, 1851, the mother was called away, and May 11, 1853, he married Elizabeth McBride; she became the mother of three sons and four daughters, viz.: Mary Ann, Salena, Jane, Annette, John Franklin (deceased), Elwilda Winfred McClellan and Harry Elvin; the spring after his last marriage, he bought the Jacob Norrick farm for $2,525, and sold 72 acres to G. M. Alexander for $5,000, and still had 50 acres left; then bought 40 acres of the William Garret farm for $2,000, and 160 acres in Indiana, sold, and cleared $1,000; then bought 80 acres in Missouri; then the Stake farm, which in two years he sold at an advance; at his death, he owned 250 acres of the best land in the township; his death occurred July 17, 1876; the following was the notice that appeared: "William Darling was the first of two brothers and five sisters to pass over the river of death. In triumph of living in that, he was entering upon a new life He advised all to meet him in heaven. Before his death, he called his children to his bedside, and begged them to be faithful to God. He made no complaint during his long illness. When he felt he was entering the river of death, and his feet were pressing the silent shore, he declared his hope and faith of a better life beyond. He passed to rest calmly and gently as Christians do." F. M. Darling, the second son, in early life had a fair education, physically and mentally. November 5, 1872, he married Robert Alexander's daughter, Harriet; she has had one son and one daughter—Robert Ezra Darling and Lilly Avis Darling; they lived two years on Robert Alexander's place, where he was run over by a horse and nearly killed; his father bought him the James Edgar farm of 56 acres of fine land; he has erected elegant and commodious buildings on it; Mr. Darling was caught in the shaft of a threshing machine in the fall of 1877; he sustained internal injuries, had his arm broken in three places, and dislocated at the elbow, but finally recovered.

DAUGHERTY, CHARLES, farmer; P. O. Butler. Among the hardy, hard-working yeomen of our county may be named Charles Daugherty, of Worthington Township. He was born in Washington Co., Penn., May 11, 1806; his father, Roderick Daugherty, was of Irish descent and a shoemaker by occupation; he joined a light horse company of volunteers during the war of 1812, and started at once for the seat of action; by the time they arrived at Pittsburgh, however, peace was declared, and they were obliged to return to their homes without getting even one shot at the "red coats." Mr. Daugherty then returned to his trade, which he continued to follow as long as he lived; he was the father of three sons and four daughters; Charles Daugherty, early in life, was initiated by his father into the mysteries of shoemaking; he continued to work at this trade, with pretty good success, till 1855, when he purchased a farm in the southwest corner of Sec. 6, in Worthington Township, to which he removed with his family; he has continued to follow the peaceful pursuits of a farmer from that day to the present, and has met with very good success. Nov. 27, 1827, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary McCollough; his first child was born in 1828; his wife died in the spring of 1877, and was buried at Four Corners.

DAUGHERTY, J. M., wagon-maker; P. O. Butler; J. M. Daugherty was born near the village of Claysville, Washington Co., Penn., June 29, 1827; at the age of 18, he thought best to apprentice himself to a wagon-maker to learn the trade; with this in view he (in the year 1845), removed to Burgettstown in the same county where his uncle lived, and commenced learning his trade; he stayed there three years and six months, serving the full time of his apprenticeship; during his sojourn there, he married Rebecca McCready, at her home in Allegheny City on the 24th of August, 1849; he continued working at his trade in Claysville until July 15, 1855, when he removed to Ohio, and settled in Newville, Richland Co.; he stayed there nearly three years working at his trade, and then removed to Independence, where he now resides; during his residence there, Mr. D. has served nine years as Deputy Sheriff. Mrs. J. M. Daugherty was born in Washington Co., Penn., May 14, 1826; they have raised a family of children, one, N. C. Daugherty, living in Lexington, Richland Co., where he is engaged in the tin and stove business.

EMMOUS, JESSIE, farmer; P. O. Newville. J. Emmous was born on the State road, five miles southeast of Mansfield, Oct. 16, 1838; his father, Allen Emmous, was born in the State of New Jersey, about 1801; he was a shoemaker, came to Ohio in 1816, and settled near Zanesville. He married Catharine Lime; they raised a daughter and five sons. Catharine Lime was a daughter of Michael Lime, a Pennsylvanian by birth; they owned a tract of land near Bellville, Ohio. Allen Emmous died near Bellville in 1838; his widow married John Lineweaver, of Morrow Co., five and one half years after his death; she lived thirty years with him; he died in July, 1875, since then she has lived with her son Jessie, who, at 21, commenced to farm on shares. In 1870, he was married to Mary C. Klusman, a daughter of George Reed, who was born in Adams Co., Penn., about 1791. By trade a fuller, he was married to Nancy London; they had four daughters and two sons; he died at 82 years of age; his wife was twelve years his junior and died six months later; they were members of the German Reform Church. He was a soldier in 1812; his daughter Mary was born in 1833; she married William Klusman, at 18 years of age; he was a shoemaker by trade, and a Lutheran in religion. They owned 2 acres, now S. Snyder's, then 40, now George Byerly's, then, 50 in Knox Co., where he died sixteen years after his marriage. Two years after, Jessie Emmous married his widow; they owned a house and lot in Newville, then 55½ acres of the Buzzard farm, which cost $1,900; traded the town property and $500 for the William Herring farm of 66 acres; the view from the house is very romantic. Mr. Emmous was in the Quartermaster's department during the late war, under Lieut. Drake, of the 1st Michigan Regiment. His brother Albert served three and Michael about two years; he died shortly after he came home from disease contracted while there.

FILLOON, DAVID, farmer; P. O. Newville; he was born in Indiana Co., Penn., Oct. 14, 1795; his father, Daniel Filloon, was born in the county of Down, Ireland; he was a farmer and weaver; he married Elizabeth Luther, and raised a family of twelve children; they came to America before the war between our country and Great Britian; he fought on the American side during the entire war; he was the owner of a plantation in Indiana Co., Penn.; he died about 1809, but his widow lived a number of years after this. David Filloon was bred a farmer; he was married to Rachel Luther, who subsequently became the mother of seven daughters; of these but two are living; he came to Richland Co. in 1822, and settled on Joseph Lewis' farm, now known as the Frease farm; afterward settled in Sec. 23; here he entered 80 acres of land, afterward 40 acres more. Mr. Filloon had a grandson who served in the late war; Jonathan Luther, his brother-in-law, had seven sons who served in this war; one died, another laid in Libby Prison and died after he got out, of disease contracted while there. Harriet Filloon, the fourth daughter, was born in 1824; at 31 years of age, she was married to William Stewart; Mr. Stewart's father was a farmer, born in Pennsylvania, and removed to West Virginia in 1810, came to Belmont Co., Ohio; he married Rebecca Craig, and was the parent of ten children; after living awhile in Belmont Co., they removed to Guernsey Co.; and thence to Muskingum Co., and finally came to Richland Co.; he died in Indiana, his wife's death occurring before his own. William Stewart was born in Belmont Co. in 1810, and was raised a farmer; he married Jane Watt, by whom he had six children; she died in Morgan Co.; he afterward married Rhoda Steward, who bore him three children; after her death he married Harriet Filloon, who bore him four children. Rachel Filloon has never married, but lived with her now aged father all her life. Mr. David Filloon is tall and commanding in appearance; although in his 85th year he does not appear to be more than 60; his hair and beard are yet dark, and his step remarkably firm considering his age.

GREER, ALEXANDER, farmer; P. O. Butler; was born in Allegheny Co., Penn., July 16, 1805; his father's name was James Greer, and his mother's maiden name Mary Kearns; his father was of Irish and his mother of Irish and Swede descent; he was raised on a farm; he came to Ohio with his parents in 1820; his father settled in Mohican Township, Wayne Co.; he remained there till the fall of 1853, when he removed to Worthington Township, Richland Co.; he purchased a farm near the present site of Independence, where he stayed till 1862, when he sold his farm and spent the remainder of his days at the home of his daughter Lydda, and his son Alexander; he died, at the house of the latter, in1868, aged about 86 years; his wife died two years previous, also aged 86 years; they were buried in Independence Cemetery. Oct. 28., 1864, Alexander Greer was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth, third daughter of Henry and Margaret Amarine; her mother's maiden name was Lybarger; her parents were both of German descent; she was born Oct. 2, 1802, in Bedford Co., Penn.; her parents came to this country in 1816; they settled in Vermillion Township near the east county line, on a quarter-section of land; the father died in the fall of the same year, and was buried on the farm; his wife survived him some years; she died in Hancock Co. and was buried there. James Greer married Elizabeth Van Scoik; Mary, Edward Sheehy; Henry, Rachel Waters; John, Elizabeth Waters; Lydda, unmarried; Samuel married Maria Schrader and William, Lydda Wagoner. All of Mr. Greer's children reside in this township; Alexander Greer came to this township in the fall of 1836, and purchased 80 acres of land about a mile west of Independence; he has continued to reside on this farm from that time to the present; he may be ranked among the honest, upright men of his township; he served as Justice of the Peace three terms, to the satisfaction of all concerned; he is now near 75 years old, and his good wife near 78; they are quite hale and hearty for people of their age, and willing, at least, to do more work in a day than many young people of the present generation.

HAZLETT, R. W., farmer; P. O. Butler. Robert Wilson Hazlett, second son of Samuel and Mary Hazlett, was born in Worthington Township June 13, 1828. His father was of Irish and his mother of Scotch-Irish descent; they were born and raised in Westmoreland Co., Penn; they were married in the spring of 1823, and during the same spring emigrated to Richland Co. Mr. Hazlett entered the east half of the southeast quarter of Sec. 14, in Worthington Township; he immediately constructed a rude hut or cabin on his farm, into which he moved with his family; his farm was a dense and unbroken forest. Samuel and Mary Hazlett are the parents of eight children; five sons and three daughters—Nancy Jane, Robert Wilson, Claranah, Calvin, Mary Ann, Andrew H., and Labanah W.; Nancy Jane and Labanah W. are dead; they are buried in the Bunker Hill graveyard. Mr. Hazlett and wife united with the Presbyterian Church at Perryville, at a very early day. He remained an active and zealous member of this branch of the Christian Church, up to the time of his decease; his widow still retains her membership therein; they both sustained a high character among their neighbors and acquaintances. Mr. Hazlett died Aug. 17, 1870, aged 73 years; his widow still survives him; she resides with her son Robert W., on the old homestead; she has attained to the advanced age of 81 years; she is quite hale and hearty for a lady of such advanced age, and is in full possession of her reasoning faculties. R. W. Hazlett was married to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Makiah and Barbary Hill, of Bellville, Nov. 29, 1855. Miss Hill was born July 1, 1834, in Bellville; after his marriage, Mr. Hazlett settled on the farm now owned by William McConkie, where he remained two years; he removed from there to Bellville, where he purchased a tannery, which business he followed about six years; he then sold his tannery, and engaged in the mercantile business, which he followed for a short time; in 1867, he purchased 100 acres of land in Worthington Township; being a part of the northwest quarter of Sec. 24, in said township, and removed thereon with his family; he continued to reside on this farm till 1871, when he purchased the "old homestead," where he has since continued to reside; he is now the owner of 180 acres of choice land in one body; his buildings are good; his farm well tilled, and his fences in good repair; he is also the owner of a farm of 75 acres in the southwestern part of this township. Mr. Hazlett and wife are the parents of six children, of whom four are living, two of their children having died in infancy; the names of the living are Edmund, Ida May, Cora and Myrtie. Mr. Hazlett has been a member of Bellville Lodge, No.306, I. O. O. F., about twenty years, and has attained to the highest position in his lodge; he is also a member of Independence Lodge, No. 256, Knights of Honor. He and his good wife are both active and zealous members of the Presbyterian Church at Bunker Hill, and have been about ten years; they are ever ready to contribute their portion toward the building of churches, the support of the Gospel, and the relief of the indigent and distressed.

HEIN, JOHN, hotel-keeper and grocer, Newville. John Hein was born in Wormeldingen, Luxemburg, Germany, April 28, 1844. His father's name was Peter Hein, his mother's maiden name Margaret Becker; his parents were both born in the same town as he; they were married in 1831; his father was a tailor by occupation; his parents were zealous Catholics; they were the parents of five children, four sons and one daughter, named as follows: Peter, born Oct. 11, 1833; Nicholas, Oct. 4, 1835; Mathias, September, 1837, and Anna, in 1838; Anna died when about 4 months old. Peter Hein departed this life in October, 1851; on the death of the father, the family, who were entirely dependent on his exertions for their support, were reduced to the most abject poverty, and it was only by the most strenuous exertions on the part of the mother and children that they were saved from utter want. Nicholas Hein was the first of the family to emigrate to the United States; he landed in Castle Garden, New York, in the spring of 1854; he remained in this city, working at the tailor trade, about eleven years; in 1872, he returned to his native land, and during the same year in company with his mother, came again to this country. John Hein left the home of his childhood Feb. 20, 1867; he landed in New York March 22, 1867; from New York he proceeded to Chicago, where he remained a few days; from there he traveled to Wisconsin; he stopped awhile with an uncle residing there; he then came back to Chicago, where he got employment, and remained about four months, when he again returned to his uncle's; about this time, he received a letter from his brother Nicholas, who was carrying on a tailor-shop in Loudonville, Ashland Co., Ohio; on receiving this welcome intelligence, he lost no time in proceeding to the home of his brother; he tarried with his brother during the winter of 1868; during the spring and summer of 1869, he labored on a farm, and received for his services the sum of $16 per month. Nov. 25, 1869, he was united in marriage to Miss Catharine, eldest daughter of Michael and Mary Schwire, of Ashland Co., Ohio. Catharine Schwire was born in Shildersdorf, Alzes-Lothingen, France, Oct. 13, 1832; her parents came to this country when she was about 8 years old, and settled in the northeast part of Ashland Co., where they have resided until the present time; her mother's maiden name was Mary Merklinger; her parents are Protestants and have been connected with the church for many years; her father belongs to the Evangelcal Association, and her mother to the German Reformed Church; her father was a shoemaker by occupation, but has not worked at his trade for several years. Mr. Schwire and wife are the parents of five children, three sons and two daughters, named as follows: Catharine, Michael, Barbary, John and David; David died in 1854, aged 7 years, and is buried in the graveyard at the German Reformed Church. Father Schwire is aged 74 years, and his wife 73 years. Catharine Hein was inured to hardship and toil from her childhood; at the early age of 8 years, she was put out to service by her parents, since which time she has led a life of incessant toil; by persevering industry and the most rigid economy, she succeeded in acquiring a pretty snug portion of this world's goods; at the time of her marriage, she was engaged in keeping a hotel in Loudonville; soon after their marriage, her husband engaged in the saloon business in Loudonville, which business he followed in that place for about one year; on the 2d day of January, 1871, they purchased property in Newville, Richland Co., to which they removed; they here engaged in the grocery and saloon business, and met with very good success, during their sojourn here; his mother lived with them about four years; and though she was treated with great deference and respect, she was not content, but longed for the home of her childhood; in August, 1876, she returned to Germany; she died in November, 1877, and is buried with her husband; John and Catharine Hein have very materially improved the appearance as well as the capacity of their Newville property, since they became the owners of it; in 1875, they opened up a hotel in connection with their other business; in this branch of their business they have succeeded admirably well; as neighbors, Mr. Hein and his good wife are social and kind. Ezra Schwire, only child of Catharine Schwire (now Catharine Hein), was born in Ashland Co. May 11, 1855. In the spring of 1876, he was united in marriage to Miss Louisa, daughter of Simon and Louisa Bolly, of Loudonville, Ashland Co., Ohio, by whom he has had two children, named Gertrude and Mary Catharine.

HENDERSON, JAMES P., M. D., Newville. His great-grandfather was a tenant farmer in Fifeshire, Scotland. His grandfather, Matthew Henderson, Sr., emigrated from that country in 1858. He was the third prominent missionary sent by the Associate Church to these, then British, colonies; and for years the only settled minister of that denomination west of the Alleghany Mountains. He was an earnest friend of education; and had an important agency in those incipient measures which resulted in the establishment of Washington and Jefferson Colleges, now happily united. He was killed by the falling of a beetree, in 1796. The Doctor's father, Matthew Henderson, Jr., was a minister of the Associate Reformed Church; and occupied the charge of a congregation in the "Forks of Yough," and its connections, in Western Pennsylvania, with eminent success, and for a period of forty-four years. On the maternal side, the Doctor's great-grandfather, Arthur Patterson, emigrated from the North of Ireland in 1724, and settled on the banks of Big Chiquesabungo in Lancaster County, Penn., then a wilderness; he purchased and located a large tract of land, and commenced farming; having acquired in the old country the trade of blacksmithing, he also carried on this business very extensively in connection with his farming. The Doctor's grandfather, Samuel Patterson, was a farmer, and lived on the Little Chiquesabungo, to the advanced age of 93. He, and his brothers, James and William, served their country in the war of the Revolution; and the latter was taken prisoner by the British, and died while held a prisoner in the prison-ship, on Delaware Bay. The Doctor was born near the borough of Elizabeth, Allegheny Co., Penn., Jan. 17, 1803. His classical and scientific education was received at Jefferson and Washington Colleges; he was graduated at the latter in 1825, and afterward received the degree of A. M. from the same institution; he read medicine with Dr. David Porter, of Uniontown, Penn.; attended lectures at the Washington Medical College, Baltimore in 1823, and the Ohio Medical College, in Cincinnati, in 1833; and received the honorary degree of M. D. from the Willoughby University of Lake Erie, in 1842. He located himself first in Shanesville, Tuscarawas Co., in the spring of 1830; and removed to Newville, in this county, in November, of the same year. Shortly after, and under the former militia system, he received the appointment of Regimental Surgeon successively from Cols. Carpenter, Rowland and Martin; and has in his possession commissions signed by Govs. McArthur, Lucas and Corwin; he was, under a law now repealed, elected one of the two school examiners of teachers for Worthington Township; he was a member of the old Richland County Medical Society, and he became a member of the Medical Convention of Ohio, in 1838, and one of its Vice Presidents in 1847; and is the author of a paper on "Professional Taxation" published in its transactions for 1850. He was elected a member of the State Medical Society in 1850; one of its Vice Presidents in 1868; and in 1856 became a permanent member of the American Medical Association. He was appointed one of the Medical Censors of the Western Reserve College, Cleveland, in 1851. In 1841, and in 1842, he was elected a member of the House of Representatives from this county; and in 1850, in conjunction with Crawford County and part of Morrow, of the Constitutional Convention, which framed the existing State Constitution. He is also a member of the State Archæological Association; has been one of its Vice Presidents, and possesses one of the best collections of Indian relics in Northern Ohio. At the early settlement of this county, the roads were not as good, nor the streams bridged as they are now; of this the Doctor had some experience; once, when riding at night and in darkness, his breast struck against the overhanging branch of a tree, and again, against the body of a tree broken off above, and its top resting on the ground, and the first thing he knew, on both occasions, he was behind his horse, and perhaps on his feet; again, when riding at full speed to escape a falling tree, a limb detached in the crash from a neighboring tree, as large as a man's thigh, fell from a height, grazing his horse's tail; twice, on swimming the Clear Fork on horseback, his saddle bags were swept from under him, such and so great was the force of the current, and so imminent his peril; again, on visiting a patient at night, and on the public highway, he was shot at, the ball cutting through the leaves of a tree above his head; it afterward transpired that the shot was fired by mistake, for parties suspected of stealing corn, and for whom an old Hessian was lying in wait in the fence-corner, in front of his house, and with gun loaded and in hand. Last June, when engaged in business from home, he was bitten by a large and ferocious dog, on the left arm, inflammation and extensive sloughing supervened, and for some time his life was despaired of; and now, though his health is improved and partially restored, his arm is still numb, stiff and enfeebled. It may be here added, that there is not a man, woman or child living in Newville, that was living there when he came to the village, they having one and all removed, or descended to the grave. In medicine, the Doctor is a general and regular practitioner; in politics, a Democrat, but since the repeal of the Missouri Compromise in 1854, he has co-operated with the Republican party; and in religion, he is conservative, adhering to the principles and the faith of his fathers. In 1835, he married Anna G. Moreland, stepdaughter of the late Hon. John Hoge, of Washington, Penn. She died in 1866. In 1869, he married Rebecca Tarres, daughter of Wm. Tarres, of this county, and he is the father of four children, of whom but one survives, John M. Henderson, Esq., of Cleveland, Ohio.

HUGHES, RACHEL, widow; P. O. Newville. John Hughes was born in Bucks Co., Penn., Sept. 5, 1805; he was of Irish descent; his father's name was James Hughes, and his mother's maiden name Jane McFadden; he had two brothers, named Alexander and James; Alexander died in Arkansas while engaged in the service of the United States as Army Surgeon; James removed to Missouri, where he now resides; he had two sisters, Maria and Eliza; Maria married Hulon Galbraith; her husband dying in the prime of life, the support of a family of six children devolved upon her; she taught several terms of school, at an early day, in District No. 5, Monroe Township. Eliza married Andrew Hazelet, who also died in manhood's prime. John Hughes, with his mother and sisters, came to Richland Co. about the year 1831; he was by occupation a tailor; he settled in Newville, where he carried on a shop for many years. He was married to Miss Rachel Hill, eldest daughter of Makiah and Barbary Hill, of Bellville, Nov. 17, 1837; Miss Hill was born in Knox Co. March 15, 1818; her parents removed to Bellville, when she was about 10 years old; her father died about the year 1862, and was buried at Bellville; her mother still resides at Bellville, and is past 80 years old; she has three brothers—Jesse, William and Francis; the two oldest live in Indiana, Francis lives in Bellville; she has six sisters, five of whom are living, and one dead. Naomi married Matthias Dish, to whom she bore six children; she died at Jeromesville, and was buried there; Miranda married Conn Seaman; Lydda Ann is unmarried, and lives in Bellville. Elizabeth married R. W. Hazlet, of Worthington Township. Catharine married John Shoemaker; her husband died in the army during the late war. Mary married Abraham Titus; they removed to Michigan where they now reside. John and Rachel Hughes are the parents of six children, four sons and two daughters—Amanda, the eldest, was born Oct. 16, 1840; James Eagleson, June 30, 1843; William Hill, July 12, 1846; Alexander, April 8, 1850; Mary Elizabeth, March 6, 1854, and Erwin Feb. 8, 1853. Mr. Hughes was Postmaster in Newville many years; he also held offices of trust in his township, the duties of which he discharged to the satisfaction of all concerned; he enlisted as a private in Company B, 120th O. V. I., Aug. 5, 1862; served about seven months, when he was honorably discharged on account of physical disability, and returned home to die; he died Feb. 24, 1863, and was buried at Newville; he was regarded as one of the best citizens of his town and township; at his death, he possessed but few of this world's goods; she was equal to the emergency; having acquired a pretty thorough knowledge of her husband's trade, she continued to ply the needle with fair success; her eldest son, who had enlisted as a private in Company A, 64th O. V. I., Oct. 16, 1861, and served with credit till February, 1863, when he was honorably discharged on account of ill health, and returned home, never recovered from the shock his constitution had received; consumption had become firmly seated, and baffled the skill of the best physicians; he lingered a few months; departed this life Dec. 2, 1863, and was buried with the honors of war in the Newville Cemetery; her second son, William H., died of consumption Feb. 24, 1870; by industry and economy, Mrs. Hughes has been able to maintain herself and family; her eldest daughter married James Ross, of Lucas, who is now mail agent on the Mansfield, Coldwater & Lake Michigan Railroad; her youngest daughter married George Sweasinger, a blacksmith, formerly of Perryville, now of Newville, Ohio; Alexander has been in the West for many years; Irwin resides with his mother. Mrs. Hughes has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church more than fifty years, and has always contributed her share toward the support of the Gospel and other religious purposes.

KOOKEN, H. C., shoemaker, Newville. H. C. Kooken was born southeast of Ashland September 3, 1837; he is of German and French extraction. His father, William H. Kooken was born in Bedford Co., Penn., about 1801; Mr. Kooken, at 14 years of age, began to learn the shoemaking trade, at which he still works; married Susan Devenbaugh May 12, 1836; she was born April 8, 1804, in Westmoreland Co., Penn, and came to Ohio at 10 years of age. William Kooken settled near Ashland in 1831; he lived here thirty years, then removed to Mifflin Township, this county; after nine years he removed to Monroe Township; they were the parents of twelve children, of whom three only are alive, viz., Henry Kooken, William Kooken, Jr., and Louisa Fulton; Henry Kooken learned the shoemaker's trade. September 25, 1862, he married Mary Elizabeth Pearce, a daughter of Louis Pearce. Her father was born in Allegheny Co., Penn., June 19, 1797; December 30, 1850, he died on his way home from California; his first wife was his cousin Susan Pearce, whom he married in 1821; she died December 20, 1822. Susan Kooken's father, Daniel Devenbaugh, is said to be the first white man that was in Richland County. He drove a baggage wagon in Gen. Wayne's army, was also an Indian Trader, he and the old Indian chief, Jerome, used to camp together on Jerome Fork. John Kooken, William Kooken, Sr.'s father, served as a private in the war of 1812. Henry Kooken has two sons and four daughters, viz., Landon McG., Esther C., Luella V. (now dead) Lizzie E., Mary (now dead) and Louis. James Pearce, Sr., and his wife, Sarah (Horn) Pearce, were great-grandchildren of William, Prince of Orange They settled in New Amsterdam. Stephen Pearce's wife, Mary Kinney, daughter of Louis Kinney, married in Sussex Co., N. J., in 1762; they came to Allegheny Co., Penn., from there to Columbiana Co., and laid out New Lisbon, and then to Richland Co, close to Perryville, where the wife died and was buried; they are said to have been great-grandchildren of Louis XIV, of France; their parents fled to Holland during the persecution, and from there to America. Some of their descendants are supposed to be the Vanderbecks, Waldrons, Browers, Webbers, Dubois, Bogart, Delamater and Bogardus.

LEEDY, HARVEY A., farmer; P. O. Butler. Mr. Leedy was born Nov. 2, 1856, in Jefferson Township; Jacob B. Leedy, his father, was born in April, 1831, he was a carpenter by trade, at which he worked for ten or twelve years; he was married to Barbary Garber in 1853 or 1854; this lady became the mother of four sons and two daughters, viz., Mary Alice, Harvy A., Casper N., John Sherman, Rowan M. and Florence N. Leedy; Mrs. Leedy was a daughter of Michael Garber, a citizen of Jefferson Township. Jacob Leedy enlisted in the hundred-day service in the spring of 1864; he was there but three months when he died at Fortress Monroe, in Virginia; his widow had 40 acres of land; on this, assisted by a pension, she raised her children; she died Dec. 4, 1872. Harvey Leedy, the subject of this sketch, was raised a farmer; Oct. 12, 1875, he was married to Nancy A. Divelbiss, a daughter of David Divelbiss; Mr. Leedy worked on a farm for a year or more after his marriage; in 1877, he bought 80 acres of the Divelbiss estate, one half of same being bequeathed to his wife.

LIME, MARTIN, agent; P. O. Newville. M. L. Lime was born five miles from Mansfield, on Lime's hill, July 15, 1835. His father, Michael Lime, was born in Cumberland Co. Penn., in 1805 or 1806; he was of German origin; during his earlier years, he farmed, afterward became the servant of the State, filling such places of public trust as Deputy Sheriff, Constable, Justice of the Peace (which office he still holds). He married Christena Ridenour; she became the mother of one son and two daughters; one of the girls is dead. They (Mr. and Mrs. Lime,) lived together eight or nine years, when the mother died; after remaining a widower four years, Mr. Lime married Lydia Culver; she bore him one son; as they could not live amicably, they were divorced. He then married Elizabeth Henry: they raised a daughter, who is married and living at Crestline, Ohio. Michael Lime's eldest son, Martin, was a bricklayer by trade, also an engineer; followed these trades alternately for fifteen years; next went into the dry-goods and notion business, which he followed for five years; for the past nine years, he has been sewing-machine agent for various companies; he now represents the Howe Company; in 1860, he was married to Susan Wetzler, daughter of H. Wetzler; she was born about the year 1837; they are the parents of four sons and one daughter (the daughter Alice is now dead); the boys are, Augustus Y., Victor, William A. and Clifton E. Mr. Lime lives in the village of Newville, where he has lately erected a new house; he and his wife are in the prime of life, with the prospect of many useful years before them.

LONG, ABRAM, farmer; P. O. Butler; was born in Bedford Co., Penn., A. D. 1805; his father, John Long, was born in Maryland, A. D. 1780; John Long was of German descent; he was a farmer by occupation; he was married to Miss Susannah, daughter of Abram Leedy, of Bedford Co., Penn., by whom he had twenty-one children, nine sons and twelve daughters. He emigrated to Knox Co., Ohio, in 1816, and entered 135 acres of land. His wife died on this farm July 14, 1849; he died in June, 1855; Abram, their son, was raised on a farm; he was united in marriage to Miss Elizabeth Jamison June 14, 1827; Miss Jamison was born Oct. 23, 1807; by this marriage, Mr. Long had one child, a son, named William, born Sept. 8, 1828, died May 23, 1830; soon after the birth of this child the mother died. Mr. Long remained a widower until Nov. 3, 1831, when he was married to Miss Catherine, daughter of Jacob Teeter; Miss Teteer was born Aug. 9, 1813; by this marriage, Mr. Long has become the father of ten children—Elizabeth, born Sept. 19, 1832; Jacob, May 9, 1834; Margaret, June 23, 1836; Malinda, March 7, 1838; George W., Nov. 28, 1839; Jackson, June 9, 1842; Nancy, Dec. 2, 1844; John, May 1, 1849, and Leah C., May 14, 1852. Elizabeth died Jan. 8, 1834, and Nancy, June 18, 1849. In 1831, Mr. Long bought 50 acres of land in Knox Co., for which he paid $150; he erected log buildings on this farm, and lived there four years during which time he was busily engaged in clearing and cultivating his land; he then sold it for $900; and purchased 120 acres in Jefferson Township, of this county, for which he paid $1,600; he has since purchased 40 acres in the same township, adjoining his farm, for which he paid $800; his next purchase was 16 acres in Worthington Township, for which he paid $650, and subsequently sold it to E. Swank for $1,000; he afterward purchased 18 acres, east of Ankneytown, in Knox Co., for $1,000, and sold it for the same. In 1860, he sustained a loss of $1,500 or more, by his barn and its contents being destroyed by fire; he and his good wife have been active and consistent members of the Dunkard Church at Ankneytown, for forty-four years, and have been quite liberal in their contributions for religious and charitable purposes.

McCOLLOUGH, ISAAC, carpenter; P. O. Butler; he came to Richland Co. about the year 1868, and purchased 40 acres of land in the central part of Worthington Township, where he has since continued to reside; he is a carpenter by occupation, and is regarded as a first-class mechanic. Joseph, his eldest son, is a carpenter also; he is a young man of steady habits and has the reputation of being a very good workman.

McCONKIE, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. Perryville; eldest son of James and Sarah McConkie; was born in Worthington Township July 25, 1830; his mother's maiden name was Sarah Johnston; his parents were of Scotch-Irish descent, but were born and reared in Westmoreland Co., Penn.; his father came to Richland Co. in 1816, and entered the northwest quarter of Sec. 13, Worthington Township. In the spring of 1818, he removed to this township; there being no cabin on his farm, he occupied one on the farm of Abner Davis while he was building one on his own. James and Sarah McConkie are the parents of twelve children, seven sons and five daughters, named in the order of their births as follows: Margaret, William, Robert, Mary Ann, James Johnston, John, Alexander S., Samuel, Allen, Jane, Mariah and Nancy Ellen. Mary Ann, Jane and Allen are dead; Mary Ann is buried in Worthington, and the other two in the Bunker Hill graveyard. Mr. McConkie continued to reside on the farm above described as long as he lived; he and his wife were both respected members of the community in which they lived. He departed this life May 1, 1868, at the age of 75, and was buried in the Bunker Hill graveyard. His widow, with three of her daughters, still continues to reside on the old homestead; she is about 75 years old, and has been quite feeble for a number of years. William McConkie was married to Miss Rebecca A., fourth daughter of John and Catharine Vance, of Hanover Township, Ashland Co., March 24, 1859; Miss Vance was born May 14, 1833, in Stark Co., Ohio; her mother's maiden name was Thoma; her parents were both of German descent; they are both living; her father has attained to the advanced age of fourscore and two years, and her mother to the age of threescore and five; they are quite hale and hearty for people of their age, and their mental faculties seem to be unimpaired. William and Rebecca McConkie are the parents of seven children, five sons and two daughters, named in the order of their births as follows: Albert, John W., Ellwood O., Lawrence, Alford and Mary A.; one died before it was christened; Albert died when about 2 years old; they were buried in the Bunker Hill graveyard. About the year 1858, Mr. McConkie bought the east half of the northeast quarter of Sec. 14, Worthington Township; he subsequently purchased 30 acres off the west half of the same quarter-section. Since he became the owner of this farm, he has very materially improved it in many respects; it is well watered, well timbered and well adapted to all kinds of farming purposes.

McCOY, ISRAEL, farmer; P. O. Butler. Benjamin W. McCoy, father of the subject of this sketch, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn.; he was of Irish descent and a farmer by occupation; he was married to Sarah Hendricks, of his native county, by whom he had seven children, five sons and two daughters; his wife died in February, 1847, and was buried in her native county; in 1849, he was married to Catharine Simpson, and settled on a farm owned by Martin Hiskey, near Lexington, in this county; he resided on this farm two years and then removed to Morrow Co., Ohio., and the second year he was there, he purchased 80 acres of land; he continued to reside in Morrow Co. till his decease, which took place in March, 1852; he had one child, a son, by his second marriage, who, with his mother, reside in Kansas. Israel McCoy was raised on a farm; he has worked some at the carpenter trade; he came to this State with his father. He was married to Sarah Jane Mishey, daughter of John Mishey, of Knox Co., in May, 1857; by this marriage, he had five children, two sons and three daughters; their mother died in Bellville in 1867. In 1868, he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah M., daughter of Warren and Mary Dutton, of Worthington Township. Mr. McCoy and his first wife united, early in life, with the United Brethren Church. His brother, Benjamin F. McCoy, was a soldier in the late war; he served with great credit more than three years and returned home in safety; after his return from the army, he engaged in the mercantile business, and was subsequently elected Sheriff of his county, in which capacity he served for several years; he was a member of the Masonic Fraternity; he died in 1874. His brother William was a tanner by occupation, and carried on that business in Bellville for a number of years; he is now the owner of a farm on which he resides. His brother John is a farmer and resides in Kansas. His sisters and other brothers died while young, in Pennsylvania. William B., eldest son of Israel and Sarah J. McCoy, was born Dec. 29, 1858; he is married and resides on a farm in Knox Co. Jason B., their second son, born in April, 1860, is attending college at Ashland, Ohio. Floras B., their eldest daughter, born in May, 1862, died in her 2d year. May and Willie, their two youngest, are twins; one of them lives with her father, and the other was taken soon after her mother's death, into the family of William Dickison of Crawford Co., where she still resides.

McCLELLAN, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. Butler; he was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., April 23, 1818; he came to this State in 1824, and to the county in 1826. He married Nancy Simmons June 11, 1840; Mr. McClellan has had fourteen children; he rented for several years after his marriage; in 1853, he purchased 80 acres in Sec. 29, of John Wilson, for $1,000; owned it for eight years and sold it to Daniel Fox for $1,800; bought 5 acres in Sec. 21, sold, and bought 60 acres in Sec. 28 for $1,200, sold for $2,400; bought 40 acres of the old homestead for $900, and traded for 10 acres north of Independence; bought 70 acres in Pike Township, Knox Co., sold, and bought 110 acres of William Ross for $5,525, and sold at a loss, then bought in Independence; he has been a member of the Presbyterian Church twenty-four years, also belongs to the Clear Fork Grange, No. 255, and to the Sons of Temperance; he was Constable and Township Assessor two years; his wife died April 22, 1872: he has since married. His father, David McClellan, was born in 1790, the year William McClellan, Sr., David's father, came to America; William, Sr., entered 60 acres of land in Pennsylvania, Fairfield Township, Westmoreland Co. He was born in Cork, Ireland; he was the father of nine boys and three girls; he and wife died about 1826 or 1827; Mrs. McClellan's father, Andrew Hazelette, was born near Old Philadelphia; married Ruth Adams; she raised five sons and four daughters; she died in 1820. He was again married, and had three daughters; he was the owner of 70 or 80 acres of land, served in the United States Cavalry during the Revolutionary war, and died about 1830; David McClellan's father was a farmer, he married Rebecca Hazelette in 1815; came to Ohio in 1824, and in 1826 to Richland Co.; was a soldier in 1812; and was the father of three sons and three daughters; he died Oct. 8, 1862. His wife died Feb. 5, 1867. During life, he entered 80 acres in Sec. 15. He and his wife were members of the Presbyterian Church.

McCURDEY, ANN; P. O. Perryville. This benevolent lady was born in Carroll Co., Md., Jan. 17, 1808; her grandfather on her mother's side was a Roman Catholic; he was married to a Protestant girl, and entered the army during the struggle for American independence; was in several bloody engagements, but never returned to his home; is supposed to have been killed in battle; his wife lived to be 96 years of age. Her father was a farmer; his name was Busbey; he died at 30 years of age, when Ann was but 1 year old. She came to Ohio in her 16th year; was married to Thomas McBride in her 20th year, A. D. 1828, by whom she had four children—Rebecca (now Rebecca Deen), Hugh McB., Elizabeth (widow of the late Wm. Darling), John McBride. After eleven years of wedded life, death called the husband and father hence, leaving the widow with the care of a young family. After remaining his widow eleven years, she was again married, April 11, 1850, to James McCurdey, with whom she lived ten years, when she again became a widow. James McC. was born in the State of Pennsylvania, 1791; he came to Worthington Township at an early day, and entered 160 acres of land in Sec. 12. Was married to Sarah McKonkie, who was born in 1796, by whom he had one son and two daughters; she died Dec. 24, 1844, having lived twenty-nine years after her marriage. Mr. McCurdey was one of the early settlers of the county; it cannot be ascertained when he came here, but there were but few settlers in the township; the land was covered with timber, which required an immense amount of hard labor to clear away; they then had but few tools, and they were often of an inferior quality; fire was often used, but it was more often a source of mischief than benefit. The Widow McCurdey is spending the remaining years of her life on a part of the old homestead, which is farmed by John Coe; she lives all alone, preferring solitude, where she can think of the past, and of the future life that is soon to be to her a haven of rest.

McCURDEY, ROBERT, farmer and stock-raiser; P. O. Perryville. Robert McCurdy's great grandparents emigrated from Ireland about the year 1760, the present generation being of Scotch-Irish descent; his grandfather was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., June 4, 1768; was married to Elizabeth McKelvey March 30, 1790, by whom he had three sons and six daughters; he owned 150 acres of fine land which he sold, and came to Richland Co. in 1824; he and the entire family belonged to the Presbyterian Church; he held numerous prominent offices in his native State, and died in Richland Co. July 24, 1839. Wm. McCurdey, the father of Robert and John, was born Dec. 12, 1794; he was married to Elizabeth McKelvey Nov. 5, 1817, who was born in 1791; the result of this marriage was two sons and three daughters; his wife had three brothers, all of whom were in the battle of Brandywine and numerous other engagements; one of them, William McKelvey by name, held a Captain's and, perhaps, afterward a Colonel's commission; once when out with his comrades on a foraging expedition, they were surprised by a superior force of the enemy; thinking discretion the better part of valor, they fled; the British pursued with bayonet fixed, and this Captain, to avoid his enemies, ran under some low trees, where his cap caught in the limb; he ran a few steps but could not bear the idea of losing it; turning quickly, he snatched it from the bush just as a powerful soldier was about to claim it; his treasure secure, he lost no time in regaining his camp; but when he came to look at the cap he found it was not of much service, being pierced by nine musket balls. William McCurdey was a farmer, and the owner of 200 acres of land, previous to his to his death; his family belonged to the Lutheran and Presbyterian Churches; his wife died April 21, 1832; he survived her until Sept. 16, 1867. His son Robert was born May 4, 1819; was brought up to hard work, like all farmer lads at that early day, who had the grubbing-hoe in hand oftener than the spelling-book. He was married by Squire Hibberts to Miss Catherine Goon, May 26, 1842; she was born Sept. 5, 1819; their first child, Simon G., was born March 31, 1843; Jacob, May 28, 1846; Allen, March 14, 1849; McKinley, Nov. 16, 1852. Robert and wife and his son Jacob and wife united with the Presbyterian Church in 1868. Mr. McC. has held numerous minor offices, also paid freely toward the support of the war of 1861. His sons are engaged in raising some of the finest breeds of horses and cattle that are to be found in the county; his land is what is called second-bottom land, and cannot be excelled in the State. His father bought 160 acres in the northeast quarter of Sec. 13, afterward 40 acres in the southeast corner of Sec. 12. Robert now owns 60 acres in Sec. 12, and 60 in Sec. 13; also 60 in Hanover Township; his son Jacob lives on his farm in Hanover. The McCurdeys are among the best citizens; they stand side by side with the best in the land; well may our c tizens be proud of their township, when it is composed of such men.

McLAUGHLIN, ROBERT, M. D., Butler. His grandfather, James McLaughlin, was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., A. D., 1731; he was of Irish descent, and a farmer by occupation; he was a soldier of the King, in the French and Indian war, and participated in the engagement where Gen. Braddock was defeated and killed; at this time he was but 18 years old. When the rupture took place between the mother country and her colonies in America, he was among the first to take up arms against the tyrannical invaders; he participated in the battles of Cowpens, Brandywine, Yorktown and many other hot engagements; he served with great credit during the entire war, and was honorably discharged at its close; after leaving the service, he returned to the peace and quiet of farm life. While a young man, he was the owner of two keel-boats, that plied on the Susquehanna River. He married an English lady named Mackey, by whom he had ten children, eight sons and two daughters; he came to Ohio in 1801. He entered three or four farms in that part of the territory now included in Columbiana Co.; previous to his death, he divided his real estate among his children; he died in 1828, aged 97 years; his widow lived to attain the advanced age of 103 years. His second son, named Jeremiah, was born in Northumberland Co., Penn., about 1776: he was raised on a farm, which pursuit he followed during life; he was married to a Miss McLain, by whom he had nine children; five of whom are yet living; he was a member of the Presbyterian Church and served in the capacity of Deacon for many years; his wife died in 1847; his own death occurred in 1860. His son Robert was born in Columbiana Co., Ohio, in 1816. The early life of Robert was spent on his father's farm. He commenced to study medicine in 1842, under the instructions of Dr. Jacob S. Kehler, with whom he studied three years; he then attended a course of medical lectures at Willoughby Medical College; soon after this, he commenced the practice of medicine at North Liberty, Knox Co.; while there, an honorary diploma was conferred upon him by a medical college of Cleveland; he subsequently attended part of a course of lectures at the Western Reserve College, from which he also received a diploma. He commenced the practice of medicine in 1846; he practiced in North Liberty twenty-one years, and succeeded in acquiring a very good reputation and in securing a very lucrative practice. He has been twice married; in 1840, he was united in marriage to Miss Mary Ann Martin, by whom he had four sons, all of whom died in infancy, save their third son, Martin, who is now a rising physician of Independence, this township. His first wife died in 1850. He married for his second wife Miss Margaret Martin; they were married in 1852; by this marriage he had four children, three sons and one daughter; one son died in infancy; their daughter died in her 17th year. C. C. McLaughlin, their eldest son, is preparing to enter upon the practice of his father's profession; he has attended two courses of medical lectures, and intends to attend a third before entering upon the practice. After leaving North Liberty, Dr. McLaughlin settled on a farm he had purchased, situated in Worthington Township, one and a fourth miles south of Independence; he continued to reside on this farm till recently, when he removed to Independence.

MOWRY, DANIEL, farmer; P. O. Newville; he was born in Franklin Co., Penn., Jan. 12, 1823; his father's name was Jacob Mowry, and his mother's maiden name Catharine Teeter; his parents were both of German descent; he came to this county with his parents in 1828; his parents purchased a farm in the southeastern part of Monroe Township, where they continued to reside as long as they lived. He remained with his parents, assisting his father in the improvement and cultivation of his farm till about 1846, when he was united, in marriage to Miss Catharine, third daughter of John and Lyda Stimely, of Monroe Township, by whom he has had eight children, four sons and four daughters, named in the order of their births as follows: Mary E., Catharine E., Miranda, Charles C., Annetta E., Willard S., William F., and Marion F. Miranda died when about 10 years old and Willard at the age of about 6 months; Catharine was about 22 or 23 years old, when she died; her disease was consumption. The deceased children of Mr. Mowry and wife were all buried in the St. John's Cemetery. The first farm owned by Mr. Mowry was 101 acres, in the southeastern part of Monroe Township, now owned by John Ferguson. He lived on this farm about fourteen years; he then sold it and bought a farm of 245 acres, situated about one-half mile west of Newville; he subsequently sold a part of this farm. He now owns 125 acres of choice land; Mr. Mowry is an enterprising farmer and a good citizen; he is a friend of the cause of education, of the church, and of the Sabbath school, in each of which he takes deep interest; he has two children, a son and a daughter, who are successful school-teachers.

NORRIS, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. Butler. William Norris was born in Huntingdon Co., Hopewell Township, Sept. 19, 1818; he never had a coat made by a tailor until he was 21; he used to work in the fields with nothing but a long tow shirt on; but few boys at the present day know much of hard work compared with Mr. Norris' experience; he never had but two or three months' schooling in his life, and had to walk about three miles to school in order to obtain that; when but 15 years of age, he made his hand as cradler in company; he had a doctor visit him but once in his life; he came to the State of Ohio in 1835, and located in Holmes Co., where he remained eighteen months. His father, Jonathan Norris, was born March 30, 1793; he was a farmer by occupation. He was married to Jane Feley; she was of Irish descent, and was born in September, 1788; she had five daughters and two sons by Jonathan Norris; she also had a son and daughter by Jacob Long, her first husband; William Norris and his sister Jennie (Lee) Norris are all that are alive of the second set of children Jonathan Norris came to Ohio in 1835, and settled in Holmes Co., where he remained over one year; he owned 80 acres of land, which he sold and came to Worthington Township, where he bought 160 acres, which he improved. His wife died Feb. 19, 1861, and he died Nov. 26, 1861. William Feley, Mrs. Jane Norris' father, served in the Revolutionary war; he had a finger shot off which came near mortifying; he was subsequently discharged from service on account of it; on his way home he slept in the woods, rolled up in his blanket; one morning he awoke to find two feet of snow over him. William Norris was married to Margaret Measle Dec. 11, 1842, who was born Aug. 11, 1818, in the State of Maryland; she bore him three sons and three daughters—Amos D., Susan H., Nancy, John and Mary (twins), John died in his 17th year. Margaret Norris died Oct. 18, 1866, after a wedded life of twenty-four years. Mr. Norris was married to Rebecca Daugherty March 3, 1868; she was a daughter of Charles Daugherty, whose history is elsewhere stated in this book; she was born May 30, 1840; she is the mother of three sons and two daughters—Charley D., Nicholas, Jennie, Minnie and Franklin, who died March 13, 1879; he was born March 20, 1878. Mr. Norris' first land was 80 acres of the old homestead, now occupied by John Bittinger; he afterward bought 80 acres in Jefferson Township, which he sold and made $300; afterward bought the Samuel Hoover farm of 56 acres, which he sold and made $2,400; then bought 80 acres of Mr. Hammet for $1,200; then the Teeter estate of 80 acres for $1,800; then his father's estate of 80 acres; afterward the Mike Croner farm of 80 acres for $3,300, and sold to a daughter and son-in-law for $3,300; then 80 acres in Paulding Co., Ohio, for $800; he also has a single lot and a lot of two acres in Mansfield, Ohio; bought 50 acres of the William Darling estate for $2,500; he owns a lot in Independence. Mr. Norris owns 452 acres; he has paid to his first five children $6,000; his last children are to receive the same in addition to their regular share. Mr. Norris was not worth $5 when 21 years of age; he has always been temperate in his habits, worked hard and economized. He never chewed tobacco, nor swore, never smoked a cigar in his life. He is worth from $35,000 to $40,000. He never received any estate from his or wife's parents. He owns the finest house in Worthington Township, and is called one of the finest business men.

PEARCE, JAMES W., merchant, Independence. His father, Lewis Pearce, was born in Allegheny Co., Penn.; he was a farmer by occupation his wife's maiden name was Lydia Bowser; she was born in the city of Philadelphia; her father was superintendent of a glass factory; they were married in Williamsport, Penn., and emigrated to Richland Co. in 1811; they had eight children—Sarah, Andrew, William Bowser, Elizabeth, James W., Lucinda, Hannah Jane, Ayers—all lived to marry and raise families. They had many hardships to endure; they went to Lancaster for flour, to Zanesville for salt, and to Wooster for clothing and groceries; the balance of the time was spent in farming and clearing the land. They lived in Knox Co., near Frederickstown, about twelve years—where they died in 1852, the mother three months before the father, she being 70 years of age, and Mr. Pearce 75. James W. Pearce was born in a little log cabin in Green Township (now Ashland Co.) June 19, 1814; he soon learned to endure the privations of a pioneer boy; when 20 years of age, he went to Lancaster, Fairfield Co., where he worked in a flouring-mill one year, and for the next five years he was Superintendent for the construction of the Hocking Valley Canal, under the employ of the State; he went to Brownsville, Knox Co., where he became a merchant in 1841. He married Emily C. Dunkan, July 14, 1842: he removed to North Liberty in 1849, where he opened a store; he removed it to Independence in 1856, where he carries on a store and general banking business; he has been freight and express agent for fifteen years; he has had a family of three sons and four daughters—Alwilda, who married Charles Weant; William A., who married Louisa, daughter of the Rev. James Williams; Iona, who married Dr. J. M. McLaughlin; Quintilla, married to James J. Aungst; James B. Pearce, Heenan A. Pearce and Emma A. Pearce.

PEALER, JOHN F., farmer; P. O. Newville; was born in the town of Bighenbauch, Darmstadt, Germany, Dec. 14, 1804. His father's name was Peter Pealer, and his mother's maiden name, Fredrica Hartman. His father, was a farmer, by occupation; the subject of this sketch was trained by his parents; he remained with his father, assisting him in his farming operations, till about the time he maintained his majority; in the meantime, however, he was sent to school, and, by due diligence, succeeded in acquiring a pretty fair knowledge of the common German branches. While yet a young man, he was united in marriage to his cousin, Miss Margaret, second daughter of Fredrick and Eve E. Pealer, of Seheim, a town in his native State, Oct. 27, 1827. Margaret Pealer was born Sept. 22, 1807. Mr. Pealer and wife came to this country in the fall of 1838; after landing in New York, they wended their way to Richland Co., Ohio, and settled near Newville, in Worthington Township; when they arrived at their destination, all they could reasonably call their own, was a family of three small children, a few articles of bed-clothing, a scanty wardrobe, and $1.20 in money; they secured the use of a stable, into which they moved, and where they continued to reside till better quarters could be obtained; ere long they found a vacant cabin, which they occupied during the winter in the spring next ensuing, they removed to a cabin at Hemlock Falls, in the same township, and in the same vicinity; here they continued to reside about eight years, during which time the husband was employed as a day laborer; At the end of this period, Mr. Pealer leased a quarter-section of land, situated near Newville, of Peter Alexander. By the terms of the leaser, the lesse was to have three crops for clearing and fencing the land; the whole farm being covered with a heavy growth of timber. In the spring of 1848, having cleared a small tract, he erected a cabin thereon, into which he removed with his family. He and his eldest sons, who were at that time mere lads, went at once to work to free a portion of the soil of its incumbrance; while on this farm they commenced a job of clearing on New Year's Day, and by dint of hard labor had nine and one-half acres ready for cultivation the following spring; they cultivated this field in corn and raised a very good crop, and by fall they had five and one-half acres more cleared which they sowed with wheat. Mr. Pealer continued to reside on this farm eight years; after his lease expired he farmed for Mr. Alexander on shares; the ground being new and fresh, and Mr. Pealer an excellent farmer, his crops during this time were most abundant; purchased 96½ acres of land of Abner Davis, situated in Section 11 of this township, for which he paid $1,600; he immediately removed to this farm and with his usual energy set about improving and cultivating it; the annual products of this farm have, as a general thing, been quite abundant, and the labors of the Pealer family have been amply rewarded; each of his sons is now the owner of more or less land. In 1860, Mr. Pealer bought of Robert MConkie 50 acres of land adjoining his first purchase, for which he paid $1,132; he subsequently bought 30 acres of the Stein heirs, for which he paid $1,718; his last purchase was 15 acres, which he sold for about the same he paid for it. John F. and Margaret Pealer are parents of ten children—eight sons and two daughters; the following are their names in the order of their birth: Jane, Eve, John Adam, John Christopher, Fredrick A., John Philip, John Martin, George Alexander, Peter Alexander and Clark Alexander; the last three were named for Peter Alexander, who was a bosom friend of Mr. Pealer; their two daughters were born in Germany and died there: one at the age of 10 months and the other at the age of 8 years; their three eldest sons were also born in Germany; all the others were born in this township; Adam and Clark live with their parents and are single; Peter is married and lives on the old home farm; Frederick A. lives on the Stein farm, of which he is the owner; John C. resides in Boone Co., Mo., and owns a farm of 200 acres: John Philip lives in Fayette Co., Ill.; he owns 80 acres of land; he served as Tax Collector 3 years, and is now Sheriff of the county. John Martin was a soldier in the late war; a Corporal in Co. I., 64th Reg., O. V. I.; he participated in many hard-fought battles; he was in the service two years, and was a brave and trusty soldier; at the battle of Chickamauga, he was shot through the right lung; he was taken to the hospital at Nashville, Tenn., where he died from the effects of his wound, Oct. 27, 1863; he was buried at Nashville; George A. was a private of Co. B, 120th O. V. I., in the late war; he was in the service one year, during which time he was engaged in five battles; he was honorably discharged from the service on account of physical disability, incurred by the exposures incident to camp life; upon receiving his discharge, he returned to his home and friends, where every possible effort was made to restore him to health, but all in vain; he is buried at St. Johns, Monroe Township.

RAMSEY, JOHN, farmer; P. O. Butler; was born in Stark Co. March 27, 1812; he has been a farmer all his life, but at the same time has found time to turn his attention to other matters, which has shown his abilities as a financier; during the war, he made money as a producer of wool; he has held a number of offices. He commenced dealing in live stock in 1855, making more extensive purchases and sales than any man in the county; latterly he has been speculating extensively in grain. April 26, 1838, he was married to Eliza Brown, by whom he had three sons and one daughter, who are now living; his first office was Constable; has served a number of years as Justice of the Peace; in 1854, he was elected Commissioner; served six years; afterward again elected to the same office; has been Township Treasurer four years; has also served fifteen years on the Board of Education. He is the owner of 300 acres of land located in Sec. 16, 21 and 35. His father, Andrew Ramsey, was a native of the State of Pennsylvania; he was married in Westmoreland Co., that State, to Isabel Halferty, in 1810; they started for Ohio the same year on horseback, and settled about five miles from Canton, in Stark Co.; he entered 160 acres of land, remained on it five years and sold it for $750; in 1815, he came to Worthington Township, where he bought 160 acres of land for $3.50 per acre; he was the first Constable elected in the township; he also was Trustee several terms. He belonged to the Union Church; he and wife were the parents of two sons and two daughters; the mother died in September, 1862; his death occurred December 6, 1863. The subject of this sketch has been administrator of various estates; often collecting as high as $20,000, thereby showing the confidence and trust, not only in his honesty, but his business abilities, in which he is held by his fellow-citizens. In early life he united with the Union Church; in 1869, united with the Evangelical Church.

RIDER, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. Newville; was born in Monroe Township, Richland Co., Ohio, Jan. 1, 1830; his father, Henry Rider, was of German descent and a Pennsylvanian by birth; his mother's maiden name was Mary Zimmerman; Henry and Mary Rider are the parents of thirteen children, ten of whom attained to the estate of manhood and womanhood; Henry Rider and wife came to this county about A. D. 1823; Mr. Rider entered a quarter-section of land in the southeastern part of Monroe Township, which he improved and cultivated and on which he continued to reside as long as he lived; he died Jan. 15, 1867; his wife died June 26, 1870; they are buried in the Schrack graveyard in Monroe Township. William Rider, third son of Henry and Mary Rider, was united in marriage to Miss Rebecca Jane, second daughter of William and Isabelle McClellan, April 8, 1858; Miss McClellan was born in Worthington Township Aug. 1, 1828; her father was born in Westmoreland Co., Pa., 1793; her mother, whose maiden name was Hazlet, was born near Hagerstown, Md., in September 1793; her parents were married in Westmoreland Co., Penn., A. D. 1819; her father was of Scotch descent; his father and mother and some of his brothers and sisters were born in Scotland; they emigrated to Ireland, where they remained a few years, and from there they came to America. William McClellan was a soldier in the army of 1812; he served a Lieutenant in a company of Pennsylvania militia, commanded by Capt. Charles Hurl; his regiment was commanded by Col. Irvin Hurl. Andrew Hazlet, grandfather of Mrs. Rider on her mother's side, was born Dec. 22, 1756; he was married to Miss Ruth Adams, who was descended from the same line of ancestry as John and John Q. Adams; Miss Adams, who subsequently became Mrs. Andrew Hazlet, was either first or second cousin to John Q. Adams; Andrew Hazlet was a soldier in the war of the Revolution; his father and mother and infant brothers were murdered by the Indians; he served through the Revolutionary war and participated in many of the hard-fought battles; was with Washington during that memorable winter at Valley Forge; he died about 1832, and was buried in Westmoreland Co., Penn. William and Isabelle McClellan came to Ohio about 1823; they first settled in Summit Co., where they remained till 1828, when they removed to Richland, and located near Newville, in Worthington Township. Mr. McClellan was a shoemaker by occupation, and continued at that trade until 1838, when he purchased the farm now owned by Worth Lemmons in this township. He continued to reside on this farm as long as he lived; he died July 6, 1866, aged about 72 years; his widow died April 7, 1877, aged about 84; they are buried at the Bunker Hill graveyard. They were the parents of eight children, four sons and four daughters; the names of those who survived the period of infancy are as follows: Nathaniel D., John A., Ruth A., Andrew H., Rebecca J., Rachel M., William D. and Elizabeth M. William D. died when about 4 years old; Andrew H. was a soldier in the Mexican war; he served with credit during the full term of his enlistment; was engaged in many battles wherein he displayed great courage; he died of disease contracted in the army, at Mansfield, on his way home; he was aged about 23 years. Nathaniel died in Mansfield in January, 1879, and was buried there. Rachel married John Simmons, by whom she had two children, a son and daughter, both of whom are living; she died in 1853, and was buried at Bunker Hill; at her death Mr. Rider and wife took the two children, raised and educated them and trained them to habits of usefulness; Mr. and Mrs. Rider are the parents of one child, a son, born Aug. 18, 1859; died May 10, 1863, and is buried at Bunker Hill. Mrs. Rider wrote a very touching poem on the death of her only child. The following accident in the early life of Mrs. Rider may be worthy of note: When she was about 2 years old, she was playing in the yard with her brothers and sisters, when a huge hog, belonging to her father, seized her in his massive jaws and started for the woods, closely pursued by the terrified father and mother, brothers and sisters. Their loud cries soon brought some of their neighbors on the scene, who joined in the race, but not until the ferocious brute had dragged the child over logs and through the brush for near half an hour, could he be made to relinguish his hold. The parents expected to find her dead, but strange to say, she was uninjured save a few slight scratches. A son of John McClellan has been living with Mr. Rider and wife since he was about 4 years old. They propose giving him a liberal education.

RUMMEL, LEWIS, farmer; P. O. Newville; was born in Frederick Co., Md., Sept. 18, 1804; his father was a Prussian and his mother an American; his father served three years and six months as a soldier in France, then came to America, where he followed the trade of miller. Lewis Rummel was a miller fifty years, is now spending his old age on a farm two miles west of Newville. Before he left the State of Maryland, he married Elizabeth Nichols, in 1827; in the course of time, there were added to the family five sons and two daughters; his wife died Aug. 28, 1829; in 1840, he married Anna Craig; he had four sons and two daughters by his second wife, Oct. 1, 1828, he came to Tiffin, Seneca Co., Ohio, where he remained five or six years, then removed to Wyandot County; from there to Crawford, and then to Richland in 1849; from here, he went to Knox County, where he stayed eleven years, and then returned to Richland, where he purchased a farm and has since lived. He united with the Disciples' Church in 1846, of which he has since been an honorable and consistent member. He sent two sons to the war during our late rebellion —James was in the 100-day service; John, served nine months, when he was discharged, but afterward re-enlisted in the 100-day service. John was Sergeant in the 65th O. V. I.; two brothers and a son-in-law of Mrs. Anna Rummel were also in this war.

SECRIST, DAVID, farmer; P. O. Butler. Mr. Secrist was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., in 1815; his father, Henry Secrist, followed weaving partly, also farmed; he was born in Pennsylvania, and married Rachel Crim; she became the mother of eight sons and three daughters; in 1827, they came across the mountains to Ohio and settled in Wayne Co.; remained here till 1830, when they came to Richland Co., Washington Township, where they bought, fenced and improved 160 acres of land; his wife dying, he married a Mrs. Sentz, whom he outlived; he died in 1860. David, the third son, worked on the farm when a boy; afterward learned the shoemaker's trade, which he followed for thirty years. He married James McClay's daughter, Jane, who was a resident of the State of Pennsylvania; by this union he had seven children, four of whom are living; his wife died June 28, 1853, leaving him with a family of small children, who awakened the compassion of Hannah Hunter, so that in November of the same year, she agreed to see them well cared for by becoming his wife; she subsequently became the mother of a son and daughter; her father, William Hunter, was a citizen of Saratoga Co., N. Y.; he came to Ohio in 1843; settled in Washington Township, where he entered 80 acres of land, on which he died in 1849; he was married to Nancy Stiles; she raised a family of fourteen children, and died in 1858. David Secrist has owned a number of farms; he first bought 20 acres of Steven Bishop; afterward 15 acres; then 15 acres of the Hazelet farm; then 160 acres in Indiana, which he sold, and bought 80 acres of the Rummel Mill property, sold it and bought the Joseph Clever farm, known formerly as the Suninous farm, he sold same and bought 144 acres of the Kanaga farm; sold and bought 160 acres now owned by Isaac Gatton; sold it and bought in Independence; sold there and bought 80 acres known as the Samuel Easterly farm, and the 80 acres of the Peter Layman farm, where he now lives; also 80 acres in Brown Co., Kan.; he and his son also bought 182 acres in Clarke Co., Ill., where the latter lives. Mr. Secrist is a member of the Evangelical Association Church; he has been connected with the same twenty-three years; has held several offices. His son George was in the late war. He has two brothers who are preachers in the Evangelical Association Church.

SECRIST, WILLIAM A., M. D.; Independence. He was born in Worthington Township in 1853; he attended school at the Northwestern College, located at Naperville, Ill.; he studied medicine with Dr. George Mitchell, of Mansfield, and after completing his studies, attended lectures at the Medical Department of the University of Wooster; he is now located at Independence, Ohio. Dr. Secrist is a young man of good habits, a Christian and a gentleman in the strictest sense; he offers his services to the public, and will attend to all calls in his profession with promptness and dispatch.

SHARP, H. H., carpenter: Newville. H. H. Sharp was born in Washington Co., Penn., April 25, 1823; his father's name was Adam Sharp, and his mother's name Mary Sharp; he was raised in Wayne Co., Ohio; he came to Newville in 1842; he learned the carpenter's trade with Isaac Pulver. Was married to Mary Ann Switzer, second daughter of Martin and Nancy Switzer, April 24, 1844, by whom he had six children, three sons and three daughters—Charlotte Mahala, born March 8, 1845; Martin Luther, Nov. 3, 1846; Sarah Jane, Oct. 27, 1848; Cornelius, Dec. 30, 1852; Thomas Wilson, Jan. 2, 1854, and Alice Christian, March 28, 1860. They lived in rented houses for a good many years. Mr. Sharp was considered a very good workman; as a framer, few in his region of the county could excel him; he found no trouble in finding employment. In later life, he became a bridge contractor, and succeeded admirably well in this line of business; he has probably constructed more bridges in this county than any other man who resides in it. He purchased 80 of acres land in Washington Township, about one and a half miles west of Newville; he removed his family on this farm and continued to reside here for many years; he erected a very good frame dwelling thereon, and a good barn, and made many other valuable improvements. A large portion of the success that Mr. Sharp met with at this time may be attributed to his wife; she was indeed a notable housewife; her husband being necessarily from home a great portion of the time, the whole management of the farm and household devolved upon her; she succeeded in this fully as well, perhaps, as her husband would have done had he been personally present to oversee the same; he had so much confidence in her, that all his hard earnings were intrusted to her care; nor was this confidence misplaced. Mrs. Sharp was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church from her girlhood; she was liberal almost to a fault in her contributions for the relief of the distressed and the support of the Gospel; she was an invalid for some time before her death, Dec. 5, 1870. Mr. Sharp was married to Miss Margaret Beveridge, daughter of John and Catharine Beveridge; her mother's maiden name was McHardy; Miss Beveridge was born near Aberdeen, Scotland, May 29, 1833; her parents emigrated to the United States when she was but 9 months old, and settled near Savannah, Ashland Co., Ohio; her father died when she was about 7 years old, and was buried at Savannah; she had three brothers—John, William and James, and one sister who died in childhood; William died of consumption in 1863, and was buried at Troy, Ashland Co., Ohio; her father and mother were members of the U. P. Church for many years; soon after her father's death, her mother removed to Norwalk, Ohio; Margaret came to Newville in 1860, and lived with her brother John until she was married; her mother died Dec. 30, 1862, and was buried at Norwalk. Soon after his second marriage, Mr. S. sold his farm and bought another adjoining the town of Newville, on the southwest, where he and his wife still continue to reside. By his second wife, Mr. Sharp had one child, a son, named Leroy, who died in infancy and was buried at Four Corners; his wife was for many years a member of the Lutheran Church, but now belongs to the United Brethren.

SWENDAL, JOHN, deceased; was born in Ireland, A. D. 1779; he was a weaver by occupation; he started for America in 1812, on the way he was captured by the British and retained as a prisoner thirteen weeks; when released he came to New Jersey, where he worked at his trade a few years; from there he came to Pennsylvania, where he was, on the 1st day of July, 1817, united in marriage to Miss Jane Ray, who came to Ohio about 1823, and settled in Worthington Township, the ensuing year; they were both laid to rest many years ago, in a country graveyard in their immediate neighborhood; they were the parents of four children, two of whom died in infancy; a son and a daughter are still living; their son, whom they named Arthur, was born in Bedford Co., Penn., Aug. 24, and was brought to Ohio by his parents. His parents being United Presbyterians, he was trained in his youth strictly in accordance with the discipline of that church. He was raised on a farm and trained to habits of industry and economy. May, 14, 1848, he was married to Miss Eliza Price, by whom he had seven children; three sons and four daughters; three died in infancy, two sons and two daughters are still living. His wife died Feb. 17, 1864; in May, 1865, he was united in marriage to Elizabeth, eldest daughter of John and Mary Kinton; ere the first anniversary of their marriage day came around, his beloved companion was laid in the silent tomb. He married the third time, Mrs. Emily McKee, of Washington Township; Mr. Swendal is a man of but few words, but a thoughtful reader and deep thinker; he is pretty well informed on many of the important subjects that engross the public mind; his favorite book, however, is the Bible, which he has made his principal study for many years; he united with the United Presbyterian Church early in life, and continued an active and constant member thereof, until the church in his neighborhood ceased to exist, when he united with the Evangelical Association at Salem, Worthington Township, of which he is now an honored and efficient member. Mr. Swendal has taken an active part in the affairs of his township, especially in the cause of education, and also the improvement of the public highways; he served as a member of the Board of Education for many years; he was also one of the Trustees of his township several terms; he has administered on several estates, and collected a great deal of money for other parties; in all his business transactions he has displayed the characteristics of an honest man.

SHEEHY, EDWARD, farmer; P. O. Butler; Edward Sheehy was born in County Cork, Ireland, in 1809; his father, John Sheehy, was also born there; by occupation, he was a farmer; he married Mary McCarthy; they raised five daughters and two sons; the mother died in Ireland in 1821. John Sheehy and family emigrated to this country, and entered 240 acres in Monroe Township; he cleared and cultivated it till 1829, when he died. Edward bought 80 acres of this land. He was married to Mary Ann Stout, daughter of James Stout; she became the mother of five sons and four daughters, all of whom are living except William, who was killed during the rebellion; Mrs. Sheehy died in 1856. Jan. 30, 1860, he was married to Mary Greer, daughter of Alexander Greer; by this marriage, he has had one son and two daughters. In the fall of 1860, he sold his farm in Monroe to C. Welty, for $3,000; then bought 110 acres in Sec. 19, Worthington Township, for $3,000, where he has since lived. His son William died of small-pox, at Knoxville; during the war, he was under A. McLaughlin, in the Ohio Cavalry: John served throughout the war and came home at the close; he was in Company D, 15th O. V. I., 1st Brigade, 3d Division.

SIMMONS, WILLIAM B., farmer; P. O. Butler. Mr. Simmons was born Aug. 19, 1820, on the northwest quarter of Sec. 15, Worthington Township; he was the eldest son by a second marriage; his father, Thomas Simmons, was born in Westmoreland Co. Md., and at an early period of his life removed to Virginia; by occupation he was a farmer; his first wife was Ruth Flahart, by whom he had seven children, two dying in infancy; his wife died in 1816; he afterward married Mary Piper, who bore him twelve children. Thomas Simmons came to Richland Co. Jan. 1, 1813, and entered 160 acres of land in Sec. 15; he was in the war of 1812, from which he returned in safety; he had two sons, John and Jacob, who were in the Mexican war; John, Abraham and Otho served in the late war, on the Union side, where Otho died; Jacob was first a Captain, afterward a Colonel in the same war on the rebel side. Thomas Simmons died in 1844; his second wife lived five years after this. William Simmons was married to Mary McClellan Nov. 11, 1841; his wife's birth occurred but nine days before his own; they had seven sons and five daughters, only three of whom are living. In 1850, he bought 80 acres in Sec. 28, for $900; afterward, 26 acres in the same section. He was so unfortunate as to lose his wife in 1870, March 14; July 14, 1873, he was married to Margaret Simmons. The 26th day of May, 1876, he and his son Stewart were washing sheep in the Clear Fork, near Independence; Stewart went into water twenty-two feet deep to bathe, after they had finished their work, when he was seized with cramps, and drowned; the following lines were composed by his father and are engraved on his tombstone in the Bunker Hill graveyard: "Stewart Simmons died May 26, 1876, aged 29 years 4 months and 28 days.

"Low down in the deep waters my life I give o'er,
But then I was arisen and carried to the shore,
Where means were abplied my life to restore;
But it was extinct and would never return to me any more."

SMITH, JOHN D., farmer; P. O. Newville Mr. Smith is of English and German descent; he was born near Ashland, Ohio, Jan. 11, 1852. He married William Darling's second daughter, Selena, Nov. 25, 1873; Mrs. Smith, at 4 years of age, left her father's house to live with her Grandmother McCurdy, where she stayed till her marriage; they then went to Indiana and bought 51¼ acres of land for $2,000, lived on it three years, when they were called home to see her father die; they promised on his death-bed to stay on the homestead until his son Winfred became 21 years of age. They have one daughter, Elizabeth Ann by name. For the rest of this family history, see Ann McCurdy's and S. M. Darling's biographies.

SMITH, HENRY, farmer; P. O. Newville; was born in Germany in 1802; he and his father were both farmers; they emigrated to Stark Co. in 1837, and bought 40 acres of land. Our subject was married to Elizabeth Sprou; they had two children in Germany, three in Stark Co., four in Richland Co.; came to this county in 1843 and bought 160 acres for $1,500, afterward bought 9 acres for $700. He and his wife belong to the Lutheran Church; his wife was born in 1804; her ancestors were also farmers. His sons farm for him.

SNAVELY, JOSEPH, farmer; P. O. Newville; was born in Franklin Co., Penn., March 30, 1822; his father, George Snavely, was born in Lancaster Co., Penn., in 1779; he was of German descent; he was married to Barbara Aldspaugh, whose ancestors were Germans; in 1815, he removed to Franklin Co., Penn., and purchased 124 acres of land; he continued to reside there twenty-two years; in 1839, he sold this farm and removed to Ohio. On the last day of April, 1869, he bought one-fourth of Sec. 5, Worthington Township, of Peter Layman, for $2,000. This farm was partially cleared and had a log cabin upon it; he spent the remainder of his days on this farm; he had to work very hard for a few years in clearing and cultivating; but, as he grew older, his sons removed the burden of toil from their father's shoulders, and he spent his declining years in ease and comfort. George Snavely and wife were the parents of eleven children, seven sons and four daughters. They united with the United Brethren Church early in life, and continued to grow in grace and the knowledge of the truth up to the day of their death. Mrs. Snavely died Dec. 26, 1846; Mr. Snavely departed this life, Aug. 17, 1862.

Joseph Snavely, their fifth son, was trained by his parents to habits of industry, sobriety, frugality and strict integrity; early in life, he commenced taking lessons of his father in the art of husbandry; he was an apt student, and ere he attained his majority, had acquired a pretty thorough knowledge of his occupation. In April, 1847, he was united in marriage to Miss Sarah Good; the first land owned by Joseph Snavely was 2 acres in this township, now owned and occupied by Samuel Snyder; he bought this lot for $100, and subsequently sold it for the same; the next farm he owned contained 25 acres, and was situated in Sandusky Township, near the Crawford Co. line; this lot cost him $400, and he sold it for $525; he subsequently purchased 80 acres in Ionia Co., Mich., for $400, and sold it for $600; his next purchase was 40 acres in his native township, for which he paid $950, and afterward sold it for the same price; he then purchased the old homestead for $4,300; his next purchase was the farm now owned by Amos Norris for $2,800, and he subsequently sold it for the same price to Norris, who is his son-in-law; he next purchased the farm now owned by James Near, adjacent to the town of Newville, containing 92 acres, for which he paid $5,000; after occupying this farm a short time, he sold it to Dr. Morrison for the same he paid for it, taking a farm of 56 acres a short distance east of town at $1,800, in part payment; he sold this farm for the same he paid for it; his next purchase of real estate was the Herring farm, south of Newville; he paid $2,900 for this farm and sold it for $3,650; his last purchase was a farm of 78 acres in this township, now occupied by his son Peter, for which he paid $3,600. Mr. Snavely and wife are the parents of nine children, four sons and five daughters, christened as follows: Eliza Ann, Peter, Ellucinda, George, Sarah, Catharine, Samuel (and a twin sister who died in infancy), Daniel H. and Lemmory; five of this number are married. Mr. Snavely and wife united with the U. B. Church in December, 1856, and have been zealous and active members thereof from that time to the present.

SPOHN, J. J., farmer; P. O. Butler; was born in Worthington Township, near Independence, March 19, 1838; he is a son of Martin and Mary Spohn, who still reside in that vicinity; he was raised on a farm and received a common-school education; on attaining his majority, he left the parental roof, to seek his fortune elsewhere; he worked on public works two years; he then went to Iowa, where he remained one year. Dec. 19, 1861, he was united in marriage to Miss Isabel, daughter of John Ramsey, Esq., of his native township; by this marriage, he had six children, four sons and two daughters, all of whom are living; they are named in the order of their births as follows: Eliza Jane, Elmore, William, John, Andrew and Thomas. Mr. Spohn bought 80 acres of land in Sec. 29, of his native township, known as the McClay farm, for which he paid $1,650; he subsequently purchased of Jackson Nichols 25 acres adjoining his first purchase, and in the same section; for this last tract he paid $1,000; he has erected an elegant house and large barn, on this farm, and very materially improved it in many other respects. Mr. Spohn was drafted during the late war, but the citizens of the township raised money and hired substitutes for the drafted men; Mr. Spohn contributed freely toward this object. His first wife died April 18, 1872. Feb. 13, 1873, he was married to Miss Elizabeth, daughter of Louis Fisher, by whom he has had three children, viz., Kate, Eunice and Franklin. Mr. Spohn is an active member of a new secret temperance organization called the "Orients", located at Independence.

SPOHN, MARTIN, farmer; P. O. Butler. His grandfather, Martin Spohn, Sr., was a Dunkard preacher, and was born in Washington Co., Penn., near old Philadelphia; in 1744, he took what was called the "tomahawk-right improvement," which consisted in marking trees so as to inclose 160 acres of land, for which, after a specified time had elapsed, he was to pay the Government a certain sum of money, about $17 or $18. He married Mary Leatherman. He was both farmer and shoemaker; twice per year he crossed the mountains, with two horses and pack-saddles, for leather and salt. His first wife had two sons and a daughter when she died; he afterward married a Miss Donahue, and at 95 years of age he died. His youngest son, Daniel, was born in 1775; he was a farmer; he married Sarah Mack, and came to Richland Co. in 1837, where he owned the Wilson estate at Independence; he laid out the town of Independence in 1850; his family consisted of two sons and five daughters; his wife died in 1839, he lived till 1864, when he lost his life by falling into the fire-place. Martin the eldest son was born in Washington Co., Penn., in 1804; farmed till 1826, when he followed distilling for two and one-half years; then resumed farming. He married Mary Moser, of Smithfield, Fayette Co., Penn.; they became the parents of five sons and two daughters; his wife died in 1863; was married the same year to Sarah Hersh, formerly Sarah Swigart, who, by her first marriage, had fifteen children; they came to Ohio in 1832, and entered 80 acres in Tuscarawas Co.; lived there six years, and in 1838, came to Richland Co., where they bought 80 acres; Mr. Spohn, in 1854, bought 80 acres more, and, in 1860, 15½ acres. He owns 175½ acres of land at present. Paid freely to clear the township of the draft. He belongs to the Ankneytown Dunkard Church.

TAYLOR, DAVID, farmer; P. O. Butler. Hon. David Taylor, one of the most extensive land-holders in Worthington Township, was born in Bedford Co., Penn., in 1813; he is of Irish on his father's and English descent on his mother's side; he came to Richland Co. (now Greene Township, Ashland Co.), when 8 years of age; his father, William Taylor, bought three quarter-sections of land, part of which to-day is known as the Cary farm; most of this land was military school land on which some of his neighbors found it impossible to meet the yearly payment of $19 and odd cents due to the Government; and it being forced upon the market, Mr. Taylor bought it. Mr. William Taylor was married to Jane Wilson, in 1798, by whom he had ten sons and one daughter; four sons and the daughter are living; James Taylor, a man of wealth, has retired from business and lives in the State of Oregon. William Taylor's wife died on the old farm in 1832; he afterward married Jane Hull, who had no children; in his old age, he removed to Loudonville, where, in 1854, he died; his last wife lived several years after his death. The subject of this sketch, David, married Elizabeth Calhound;

he and wife have had six sons and four daughters; he owns 356 acres of land; he has been Land Appraiser twice; has been Commissioner six years.

WILLIAMS, JAMES, minister, Butler. Matthew Williams, father of James Williams, was born near Wellsburg, Va., in 1774; he was of Welsh descent, and a farmer by occupation; he came to Richland Co. either in the fall of 1811 or the spring of 1812; he was married to Susanna Carr, by whom he had three sons and seven daughters, two sons and three daughters of whom are yet living; on coming to this county, he entered a quarter-section of land in Montgomery Township, near the eastern line; erected a log cabin thereon, into which he moved his family, and proceeded at once to clear and otherwise improve and cultivate his farm; erelong the log cabin was superceded by a hewed-log house, and many other valuable improvements made; he and his family, Thomas Carr and family, John Carr and family, Robert Hewland and family, Daniel Carter and family, and a family by the name of Jerome, lodged together in the fort or blockhouse at Jeromeville for some time during the war of 1812; Jerome was married to an Indian girl; the village was named for him. Mrs. Williams died at Jeromeville in 1820, and was buried there; Mr. Williams departed this life in 1835, and his remains were deposited near those of his deceased wife. James Williams, their youngest son, was born in Tuscarawas Co. in 1811; he was brought to this county by his parents before he was 1 year old; he was reared, partially at least, in the woods, and inured from infancy to the hardships of pioneer life; he assisted his father in clearing and cultivating his farm, during which time he received such education as the common schools of that early day afforded. He has been twice married: the maiden name of his first wife was Eliza Smith; they were married by Rev. Thomas Thompson. In ten months after their marriage his wife died. In two years after the decease of his first wife, he was united in marriage to Miss Vanluah Whitten, daughter of William Whitten, by whom he had eleven children, eight of whom are now living. In 1830, he united with the Methodist Church, and in 1840 commenced the study of theology; he served in the capacity of a local preacher for several years; in 1860, he entered the regular ministry, and officiated in that capacity from that time till 1876, when he left the Methodist and united with the Lutheran Church; the labors of Father Williams have been extended into many parts of the State, and, as a laborer in his Master's cause, he has met with fair success. Father and Mother Williams are the parents of eleven children, six sons and five daughters. Their oldest, a daughter, was born in 1837, named Martha A.; she married Levi Gamber; he died in 1875. Their second, a son, was born in 1839, named Thomas W., was a member of the home guards during the late war; he died in 1863. Their third, a son, born in 1840, married in 1862 to Sarah E. Smith, was a member of the national guards in the late war; served at Johnston's Island and near Washington City; now resides in Delta, Fulton Co., Ohio. Their fourth, a son, named Russell S., born in 1843, enlisted in 1861 for three years or during the war; veteranized at the end of second year; was killed in a charge at Bentonville, N. C., in 1864, while storming the rebel breastworks. Their fifth, a son, born in 1844, named James T. was a member of the 25th O. V. I. in the late war; enlisted in 1861; veteranized at the end of two years; returned home in safety; was married to Sarah Croxton, and lives in Reed Township, Seneca Co., Ohio. Their sixth, a son, born in 1846, named William B., was a soldier in the late war; enlisted in 1863; was captured by the rebels; was confined in Andersonville Prison eight months and in other places three months; was discharged at the close of the war; returned home, and, in 1866, was married to Miss Lorena Hall; lives in Floyd Co., Iowa; his first wife dying, he was married to Miss Malinda Herring. Their seventh, a daughter, born in 1848. Their eldest, a daughter, was born in 1837, and was christened Martha A.; she was married to Levi Gamber; she died in 1875. Their second child, a son, was born in 1839, was christened Thomas W.; was a member of the home guards during the late war; he died in 1863. Their third, a son, named Isaac V., born in 1840, was a soldier in the late war—a member of the national guards.

PLANK, JONATHAN, miller; P. O. Butler. This industrious and energetic man was born in Mifflin Co., Penn., Dec. 4, 1816; his father, Jacob Plank, was born in the same State about 1796; was a carpenter by trade, and married Barbara Zook, by whom he had four sons and three daughters; all are alive and married except one daughter, who has died since her marriage. Jacob Plank came to Ohio and settled near Wooster, Wayne Co., in 1822; he lived here till his death in 1856; his widow lives with one of her sons in the State of Indiana. Jonathan, the eldest son, learned the trade of miller under his uncle, Abraham Plank, in Wayne Co.; served nine years, then worked in various mills in the county till the spring of 1846; then went to Prairie Township, Holmes Co., stayed till the fall of 1856, when he came to Richland Co.; he run the Baird mill till the spring of 1862, then bought half-interest in the Kanaga mill property one mile west of Independence; he owned this till 1869, when he traded for the Pearce farm, east of Independence; owned it eighteen months, then bought the entire interest of the same mill property back again in 1873; he sold a half-interest to his son, E. A. Plank; there are 60 acres of land connected with the mill; their flour has the highest reputation of any in this part of the county; people often come with their wheat from surrounding counties to have the same converted into flour. Jonathan Plank was married to Lydia King February, 1837; the result of this marriage was six daughters and four sons; three sons and one daughter are dead; his wife died in March, 1859; was married to Mrs. Teeter, daughter of Samuel G. White, by whom he had two sons; he united in Wayne Co. with the Church of God; there being none of that denomination near, he joined the Evangelical Association of Independence; he is Trustee and Class-leader of the same. Mr. Plank was Township Trustee in Holmes Co.; also served here one term, when he refused to be re-elected, having plenty to see to and no desire to occupy an official position. His son E. A. Plank was in the one hundred-day service during the late war; at present he has charge of the mill.

AUBURN TOWNSHIP, CRAWFORD COUNTY.

BROWN, WILLIAM, farmer; P. O. Tyro, Auburn Township, Crawford Co., Ohio; he was born in Indiana Co., Penn., July 13, 1807; he remained with his father until December, 1829, when his father died; he emigrated to Ohio in May of the following year, and located on the southeast quarter of Sec. 8, Vernon Township, in the unbroken wilderness; here he remained thirty-four years; disposing of his land to Mr. H. Thoman, he purchased what is usually termed the William Cummins farm, about the year 1864, where he now lives; it is a magnificent farm, nicely located. He married Miss Sarah Ellis, from near Steubenville, Ohio, Nov. 16, 1830; had ten children, six of whom are living—Joseph D., married to Miss Dixon; George C., married to Miss Richards; Elizabeth, married to W. Morton; Martha J., married to Rev. Miller; Mary, married to A. D. Sibert; and Amanda, married to Joseph Lewis. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have enjoyed excellent health, and bear their age well; are respected by their neighbors and all who know them. They are members of the M. E. Church.

CUMMINS, WILLIAM, one of the leading farmers and stock-growers of Auburn Township, Crawford Co., Ohio, was born in Indiana Co., Penn., March 28, 1834; he was brought up by his parents on a farm, receiving his education in the district school, until he became of age, when he took charge of a general line of merchandise, such as was kept in a country store, conducting the business about one year, when he disposed of the goods and went on the farm, where he remained one year, when he again engaged in business at Chambersville, Indiana Co., Penn., where he remained until Aug. 31, 1861, when he volunteered in a military organization. Mr. Cummins ranked as Captain of the company, and was placed in the 14th Army Corps, commanded by Gen. Thomas. Capt. Cummins resigned his command about Aug. 1, 1863, returning home sick. He emigrated to Ohio in August, 1864, locating on the D. C. Morrow farm, where he now resides, on a beautiful site, consisting of 600 acres in one body, a portion of which lies in Plymouth Township, the balance in Auburn Township, Crawford Co. The Captain married Miss Mary J. Morrow Aug. 24, 1864, and by their union had nine children, five of whom are living, viz.: Cora Elizabeth, David William, Joseph Dick, Julia Brown Mateer, Nancy Susan Clark. Mrs. Cummins was born Aug. 3, 1836, on their present farm; she attended school at Plymouth until she was about 18 years of age, finishing her education at Delaware, Ohio. Mr. Cummins was elected Treasurer of Auburn Township in April, 1877, and Land Appraiser in October, 1879. As a family, they incline to the Presbyterian Church, and are respected by all who know them. Mr. Cummins is an active, energetic man, taking an interest in all public affairs, and has an interesting family, in which he takes a fond father's pride.

CUMMINS, WILLIAM, deceased. William, son of David and Mary (Trimble) Cummins, was born on the 5th day of February, 1809, in Indiana Co., Penn.; about the 9th year of his age, he removed with his parents to Richland Co., Ohio, his father having previously, in 1816, located a tract of land some five miles west of Shelby; his boyhood and early manhood were passed in assisting to hew out a home in the then unbroken wilderness; sixty years ago, the facilities for acquiring an education in this county were comparatively meager; but such as they were, the subject of this sketch made the most of, for, in after years, he showed a thoroughness in the branches then taught, and a familiarity with the forms of business, that made him a man of mark in the community in which he resided; in speaking of his early struggles to acquire an education, he always gave great credit to Rudolphus Morse and Benjamin Griffith, two of the most accomplished teachers and best-informed men of their day; upon arriving at his majority, he was elected Justice of the Peace, a position he held continuously until he removed from the township; the official business of that day was largely in collections, and many who have since acquired a competency, will remember his large-hearted leniency, when they were struggling to get a start in life. In March, 1831, he was married to Jane, daughter of Abraham and Agnes (Wallace) Cahill, and the issue of this union was three sons and four daughters, to wit: Nancy, David, Abraham Cahill, George Wallace, Mary Eliza, Jane and Rebecca; Nancy, George W. and Mary are deceased. His wife died Dec. 17, 1853, and in 1855, he married Mrs. Matilda Dungan; no issue by this marriage. About 1842, he united with the M. E. Church, and ever afterward was a consistent member, taking a deep interest in its welfare and prosperity. In politics, he was a Democrat of the old school, but love of country rose above party fealty, and he was among the first in Shelby, at the breaking-out of the late war, to insist that party lines should be obliterated until we had a united country. He was called to preside over the first war meeting held in Shelby, and among the very first held in the State, and always gave his time and money freely to further the cause of the Union and care for the families of the soldiers. In 1868, he removed to Tuscola, Ill., and purchased a tract of land, and gave himself strictly to its cultivation; the success that had followed him through life did not desert him here, and his business continued prosperous. Some five years ago his bodily health failed, and the infirmities of age coming on, compelled him to seek a quiet and retired life. He spoke frequently and without fear of his fast-approaching end. Though long expected, the final summons came suddenly to his surviving friends; he was stricken with paralysis and only survived a few hours; he left a widow and four children to mourn his loss. He was the father of David Cummins, of Shelby, and A. C. Cummins, of Mansfield, who were with him for several days prior to his death. The I. O. O. F., of which fraternity he was an honored member, performed the last sad rites at his obsequies.

Thus passed to the better world beyond, one who filled more than an ordinary space in the affairs of his time, and, dying, left to his children the priceless legacy of an honored and honest name.

CUMMINS, DAVID, SR. (deceased), was born in Rockingham Co., Va., on the 28th day of February, 1782, and removed with his parents in 1790, to Indiana Co., Penn., where he grew to manhood; he was a soldier in the war of 1812, and belonged to a regiment that was raised for the defense of Baltimore; in 1816, in company with Andrew Dixon, Sr., a widely and well known pioneer, he came to Richland Co., and purchased a tract of land on the Tiffin road, some eighteen miles distant from Mansfield, now a part of Auburn and Vernon Townships, Crawford Co., and shortly thereafter removed his family to that place; Mrs. Dixon and himself assisted William Green in building the first log house in all that country round about; he was married in 1803 to Mary Trimble; the issue of this marriage was two sons and four daughters; his first wife dying in 1824, he married Rebecca Hoblitzell, by whom he had one daughter, the late Mrs. Thomas Mickey, of Shelby; the children by his first marriage were George, William, Eliza (married to Hon. R. W. Cahill), Jeannette (married to Robert Cook, of Wayne Co., Ohio), Mary (married to Andrew Dixon, Jr.), and Nancy (married to James English); George Cummins married Caroline Hoblitzell, and William Cummins married Jane Cahill; David Cummins, Sr., was a man of great physical endurance, remarkable for his energy and decision of character; he was of Scotch-Irish parentage and possessed many of the best qualities of both nationalities. In religion, he was a Presbyterian of the old school, and rigorously observed and carried out the teachings and tenets of his favorite church; he was emphatically a pioneer in all that the word imports, and had the will and the physical power to hew a home out of the then unbroken wilderness, and was largely instrumental in assisting all of his children to secure a fair start in life; he died Dec. 26, 1866, at the same old homestead that he selected for his home a half-century before.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP, CRAWFORD COUNTY.

BARGAHISER, LEWIS G., farmer; P. O. Crestline; he was born near Shelby Feb. 28, 1829, and resided in Sharon Township till the fall of 1877, when he removed to the farm between Crestline and Leesville, where he and his family now reside. His father, Jacob Bargahiser, and his uncle Levi, settled on land near Shelby about the year 1824. They were in the county, however, as early as 1812; Levi was a boy, living with Mr. Ruffner on the Black Fork of the Mohican, when the massacre of his and the Zimmer families occurred. Jacob, Levi, and their wives were each 77 years old at the time of their deaths.

BROWN, JOSEPH, farmer; P. O. Crestline; he was born in Delaware Oct. 26, 1793; he says his wife was born the same day; they now reside on the farm where they settled in 1815—sixty-five years ago. Mr. B. was so severely injured by the cars some time ago as to require the amputation of both legs near the knees; still he can get about well on the stumps. His first habitation here was made of poles and covered with bark; they lived in this rude structure some time before they erected a cabin. A hickory withe was used to draw the logs together at the cabin site; he went to Knox Co. for corn till he could raise a crop, and had nearly twenty miles to go to mill; wild game was then abundant, and furnished plenty of meat. Mr. B. was married, in 1824, to Elizabeth Hagar, daughter of Sebastian Swartz, who came to this country in 1820.

CAHILL, RICHARD WALLACE, farmer; P. O. DeKalb, Crawford Co., Ohio. Mr. Cahill was born in Derby Township, Westmoreland Co., Penn., March 6, 1801, and spent his early days upon the farm with his father, Abraham Cahill, in clearing land and doing general farm work; he moved from Pennsylvania to Wayne Co., Ohio, about the year 1817, with his parents, four brothers and six sisters, he being the sixth in the family; he continued on the farm with his parents until at the age of 21 years, when he came further west and settled in Bucyrus, Crawford Co., Ohio, first engaging in the dry-goods business as clerk in the store of Judge Inman, in whose service he remained five years. He married Miss Eliza Cummins, of Richland Co., and finally moved on his present homestead. He is of Scotch-Irish descent, and has always been an active Democrat, taking a deep interest in the welfare of the party and all public affairs; he has always been a representative man of his neighborhood, and, in 1841, was elected as Representative from Richland Co., to the Ohio Legislature, and was re-elected (as was the custom of his party in 1842, the terms then being only one year), during which term he served his constituents with marked ability and intelligence; in 1850, he was elected as a member of the convention which framed the existing constitution of Ohio, in the debates of which are found his published speeches during the session; in every public position he has exhibited that fidelity to public trusts, which has made him a man of mark in his community. He is a man of remarkable memory, entertaining intelligent and positive opinions on all questions coming under his observation. His family consists of eleven children, eight of whom are yet living, viz.: David C., who has served two terms as the Clerk of Court of Crawford Co.; James, Isaac, Richard W., Jr., Warren J. C., Katie and Nettie; a son, Abraham Cahill, became a distinguished Attorney, member of the Dayton bar, and died at the very dawn of distinguished usefulness, deeply regretted by all who knew him. The career of the subject of this sketch has been one of honor, usefulness, intelligence and everything that goes to make up a patriotic, conscientious, honorable man, worthy the imitation of all his children, relatives and friends.

CAROTHERS, GEORGE, farmer and stock-grower; was born in Crawford Co., Ohio, in May, 1839, and spent his early days on what is known as the Carothers homestead. He attended school in the district during the winter months until he was 16 years of age, when he taught a partial term in what was called the Fraser District, just north of Shelby; the following summer, he took the proceeds of his school and attended school in Oberlin, Ohio; he continued year after year in a similar manner for six consecutive years, thus educating himself; he is a man of indomitable will, consequently making a success of all his undertakings. He enlisted in Co. C, 7th O. V. I., while attending school at Oberlin, in 1861; he participated in the following battles: Carnafax Ferry, Winchester, and the noted second battle of Bull Run, where he was wounded in the left leg; he was taken to the hospital at David's Island, New York, where he received his discharge. Mr. Carothers married Miss L. M. Blackman in March, 1869; they have four very interesting children—Clara E., Minnie Myrtle, Lulu Dell and Georgie M. Mr. C. has a beautiful home, in which he with his wife and little ones are happy, loved and prosperous.

CAROTHERS, JOHN, farmer; P. O. Hinesville; he was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, either in 1806 or 1807, the family record being lost in the sinking ship; he, with his parents and three brothers, James, Christopher and George, emigrated to Ohio about the year 1813 or 1814, embarking at Londonderry on the sailing vessel Bohannon, everything passing as pleasant as a marriage bell until midnight of the forty-second day, when the vessel struck a rock, near Yarmouth, Nova Scotia; instantly all on board were fearful with anxiety and excitement; John Carothers, father of the subject of this sketch, was talking with the captain at the time of the accident, both fearing she was lost; a council was called at once, Mr. C. Sr., being one of the twelve composing it, succeeded, in connection with the second mate, Buchannan, in saving every soul on board, all else being lost; launching the lifeboats, the command was to allow only women and children to leave the sinking ship, while the sterner sex remained to the last, though some disguised in women's apparel succeeded in leaving with the former; very soon they observed what appeared in the dark to be a cloud, and, on sending four sailors out, they returned with the joyful news of land, leaving one sailor to signal; the island was composed of about four acres—by name Mud Island—and adjacent to Yarmouth. After landing all safe on this island, they hoisted a white sheet as a signal of distress; thinking it would not be noticed, a lady took off her red flannel petticoat and attached to it, when the signal of distress was again hoisted, and about 10 o'clock a British man-of-war hove in sight, taking all on board, landing passengers and crew at Yarmouth, where they remained about two weeks, when they again boarded a vessel, and landed at Philadelphia during the month of July, their destination being Guernsey Co., Ohio, where Mr. Carothers remained with his parents, receiving his education at the district schools, having to go five miles. About October, 1837, he emigrated to old Richland (now Crawford Co.), Ohio, purchasing 165 acres of land, where he still resides. His wife, formerly Miss Elizabeth Laird, was born in County Fermanagh, Ireland, April 24, 1834. They have eight children, five of whom are living—John, Robert, George, James and Morton, all intelligent men, who take a general interest in the affairs of the country. John enlisted in the 1st Nebraska Regiment; James, in the 120th O. V. I., and Morton with the 100-day boys; all returned home an honor to their parents and country. The subject of this sketch is a man of remarkable memory and powerful constitution; he has had an eventful life, and after all its variations he is passing the remainder of life in comfort, peace and plenty.

EATON, BENJAMIN, mail agent, Crestline; he was born May 4, 1821, in Somerset, Perry Co., Ohio, and came to this county in, December 1848. He was married Jan. 13, 1849, to Miss Harriet A. Martin, daughter of the late John Martin, of Millersburg. Mr. Eaton resided in Millersburg until 1860, when he removed to Crestline, where he served as Provost Marshal during the late war; he was appointed mail agent in 1865 and yet holds the place, proving him to be an effective and trusty employe.

FROUNFELTER, ADAM, carpenter and joiner, Crestline; was born in Dauphin Co., Penn., Jan. 13, 1809, and removed with his father, John Frounfelter, to the vicinity of Mansfield, in 1826; after working a few years at his trade, he bought and converted into town lots 10 acres of land which formed part of the village of Newcastle; he erected the first hotel in the place; in 1834, he sold the hotel and bought 40 acres of land near Millsboro, sold it and bought a lot and built a house and shop in the village, where he carried on cabinet-making for fourteen years; he then bought, improved and sold first 6 acres and afterward 11½ acres adjoining the village of Ontario; in 1865, he bought and removed to the 15-acre lot adjoining the town of Crestline, where he now resides; having erected a fine house and made other improvements, he is well fixed for a comfortable living. He was married Oct. 31, 1834, to Elizabeth, daughter of the late John Martin, proprietor of the village of Millsboro, and one of the leading citizens of the township till his death in 1848. Mr. Frounfelter has always been an active Democrat; was Postmaster at Ontario under the administration of President Buchanan, and says he hopes to live long enough to assist in electing another Democratic President of the United States.

OGDEN, DAVID, carpenter and millwright, now a Justice of the Peace in Crestline; was born in Knox Co., Ohio, Aug. 10, 1819; he removed with his father to this county in 1825, settling first near Lexington, and removing, in 1828, to the land on which Crestline is now located, then a dense forest; Sandusky Township was then six miles square and contained but few inhabitants; for several years, the only school in the township was kept at a private house; after the settlers had become more numerous, a meeting was held at Mr. Ogden's house to agree upon a site for a schoolhouse, and, to satisfy all, it was resolved to divide the township into two school districts, and erect two log schoolhouses, instead of one; so rapid was the increase of the population that in a few years other schoolhouses were built and several schools were in progress in the township. Crestline was commenced in 1850, the first passenger train on the railroad having reached that point in January of that year. Mr. Ogden erected the first frame building in the village, and the first barn raised in the township without whisky was on the Ogden farm.

REED, JAMES M., now a grocer of Crestline, but for many years a prominent farmer and Justice of the Peace of Sandusky Township, was born in Cumberland Co., Penn., on May 28, 1814, and removed with his father's family to the farm upon which Reedsburg was afterward laid off, in Wayne Co., Ohio, and from there to the vicinity of Crestline in April, 1847, where he served for twenty-one years as Justice of the Peace of Sandusky Township. In 1875, he removed to Crestline, was again elected Justice of the Peace, and is now supplying the people with family groceries, and is one of the leading citizens of the place.

TYLER, SILAS, farmer, Crawford Co., Ill.; he was born Oct. 30, 1796, in Wayne Co., Penn. He was married June 11, 1820, to Elcy A. Austin; afterward, he resided in Sullivan and in Tompkins Co., N. Y.; he settled in Richland County in October, 1837; he kept the hotel at Ontario two years; then removed to the 80-acre tract of land now owned by James S. Trimble, for which he paid $750; after improving the land, he sold it to Mr. Trimble for $4,000 in 1865. His wife died Sept. 3, 1864, and in September, 1865, the old gentlemen removed to Crawford Co., Ill., where he now lives, being 84 years of age. He was married the second time in 1865, his wife is yet living; he and his first wife raised a family of seven children, five of whom are living. Bezaleel, one of the sons, is an influential citizen of Sandusky Township; he is married to Mary A., daughter of John Sheffer. Nathan L., another, is conductor on the P., Ft. W. & C. R. R.; he is married to a daughter of J. M. Reed, and lives in Crestline.

WILLIAMS, JESSE, Justice of the Peace, Crestline; was born in Jefferson Co., Ohio, Feb. 14, 1806, and removed with his father, Thomas Williams, to the land now owned by Christian O'Rourk, near the Spring Mill, in this county, in 1818. The land had been purchased of Rolin Weldon in 1817, and in that year the father and his oldest son, John, had come to the premises, erected a cabin and cleared a few acres of ground, on which they had raised corn. Jesse, after assisting in clearing up the farm, now one of the best in the neighborhood, embraced every opportunity then attainable to procure such an education as would qualify him as a school teacher, which was his occupation for about ten years. He was married on Sept. 15, 1829, to Miss Eliza Bailey, then residing in Springfield Township; she was born in Allegheny Co., Penn., on Jan. 10, 1811; Squire Williams has been eight times elected to the office of Justice of the Peace, and twice as County Auditor, besides holding other positions of honor, and the old gentleman says he hopes to live long enough to assist in electing a Democratic President of the United States.

POLK TOWNSHIP, CRAWFORD COUNTY.

REED, SAMUEL J., farmer; was born in Oxford Co., Me., Dec. 13, 1809, and was married Sept. 6, 1832, to Miss Elizabeth Jackson; he removed with his father's family to this county in 1823, and settled in that part of Sandusky now forming Polk Township, Crawford Co., where a cabin was erected in the woods, and where the family commenced clearing up the forest and converting the wilderness into fertile fields. Mr. Reed first earned enough money, by hard work, to enter 80 acres of land, and, by his indomitable energy and industry, continued to add to his farm till he became the owner of 411 acres of most excellent land, now well improved, and proved himself to be one of the most successful farmers in the county. Four of his children are married, and living in the vicinity of their parents.

ASHLAND, ASHLAND COUNTY.

ABRAMS, JAMES S., was born in Ashland Co., in the month of January, 1855, where he has since resided. He is by profession a painter, having finished his trade in 1875; he is considered by all to be proficient at his business and enjoys the respect of those in the community in which he resides.

HANOVER TOWNSHIP, ASHLAND COUNTY.

BULL, JOHN W., Loudonville. The grandfather of Mr. Bull was born and educated in Dublin, Ireland, and his grandmother in Manchester, England. George W. Bull, the father of J. W., ran away from home when 11 years of age, and went to sea; in his roving, he visited America at the age of 17; came west to the then wilderness of Ohio and entered several quarter-sections of land in what are now Greene and Lake Townships, Ashland Co., after which he returned to a seafaring life, becoming a captain and vessel-owner. Becoming tired of the sea, he came to America for the purpose of making it his permanent home, settling first in Hartford, Conn., in 1816, and removing, in 1817, to the southwest quarter of Sec. 1, in Greene Township. Here, in 1822, he married, and here he raised a family of seven children—George F., Sarah Jane, Mariah, Mary, Phebe, Emily and J. W. He was a man of much influence among the early pioneers, a large landholder, and, soon after his arrival, engaged in shipping pork, flour, whisky and other produce by flatboats to New Orleans; after the sale of a cargo in that city, he would usually sell his boats and set out on foot for home, walking sometimes as far as Nashville, where he would purchase a horse on which to complete the journey. In 1839, he was elected Justice of the Peace, which office he held fifteen years; in 1848, he was elected to the General Assembly, serving two terms in the House and one in the Senate. He was of stout build, a very forcible talker, a man of decision, good judgment, great energy and independence of character. His son, the subject of this sketch, was engaged in railroading thirteen years, first as route agent and then as conductor, after which he resided in Fort Wayne, Ind., a few years, engaged in the hotel business; during this time, he was a member of the Council of that city. He subsequently returned to Greene Township to live, and was elected Justice of the Peace, which office he now holds. In 1877, he was elected to the Sixty-third General Assembly, and is now (February, 1880) a member of the Sixty-fourth.

GREEN TOWNSHIP, ASHLAND COUNTY.

RICE, ALEXANDER, Perryville; was born in Montpelier, Vt., Aug. 2, 1801; he was the eldest son of Capt. Ebenezer Rice, who moved from Willsboro, Essex Co., N. Y., to Ohio, in 1810, stopping from November until February, 1811, in Newark, Licking Co.; then he came on to Green Township, Richland Co., and located on his land near Perryville. Capt. Rice died June, 1821, and his widow became the second wife of Judge Thomas Coulter. Alexander owns the old farm; he has been twice married, and has three daughters and three sons living. Of all the old pioneers who have lived to see the wilderness of the West bloom like unto a garden, none are more content, more happy, or freer from the ills of old age than he. Ebenezer Rice was born in Marlboro, Mass., in 1773; was the eldest son of Samuel Rice, who was the son of Gershom, who was the son of Ephraim, who was the son of Thomas, who was the son of Edmund and Tamazine Rice, who came from Barkhampstead, England, in 1638, and lived and died in Sudbury, Mass. The old homestead, with its broad meadows and beautiful spring, is still in possession of the Rice family.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BAUGHMAN, DANIEL, Charlotte, Mich. He came with his brother John and his family to Lexington Richland Co., in May, 1827; Samuel Baughman had settled in Millersburg, in Springfield Township, three years before, where he was also followed the next year by Isaac and Joseph Baughman, and thus the other Baughmans found relatives near them on their arrival in this, then the "Far West." In 1828, Jacob, Henry and Adam Baughman came, with Daniel's mother, and settled at Lexington. The entire family of Baughmans were from Cumberland Co., Penn.; of those mentioned, Joseph now lives in Fairfield Co., Ohio; Jacob in Mt. Gilead, Ohio, and Henry in Charlotte, Mich.; Adam died at Lexington in January, 1844; John, at the same place, in August, 1863. A son of Daniel Baughman, Adelbert D., is now a merchant in Charlotte, Mich.

BEELMAN, J. FRANK, editor and proprietor of the Advertiser, Plymouth; was born in Plymouth July 31, 1847; was raised and educated here and has grown up with the town; when in 1869, he, together with Mr. Webber, opened up a book and notion store, under the firm name of Webber & Beelman, when, in August, 1872, he disposed of his interest in the book store and became associated with and in the Plymouth Advertiser office, with his brother, J. M. Beelman, and in 1876, sold back to J. M. Beelman, and in December, 1876, he purchased the office and became sole proprietor, since which time the Advertiser has been on a solid and firm basis, and has a circulation and support second to no other paper in the county; as to the jobbing department, it is complete as all can testify who have occasion to patronize it. On Oct. 8, 1874, was married to Miss Frank Gipson, a resident of Plymouth; and as a result of this union, they have one child, Grace W., born Oct. 10, 1876. Mr. B. is one of the first and foremost men in town, as the success of the Advertiser shows him to be, a thorough-going business man; he is Secretary of the Plymouth Agricultural Society, Township Clerk, and has occupied other offices in the gift of the people, and with all, is a man well worthy the position he holds in society.

OBERLE, FRANCIS J., REV., Pastor Roman Catholic Church, Shelby; Rev. Francis J. Oberle, was born in New York City May 7, 1832; he was educated in the Parochical School Church of the "Holy Redeemer," till at the age of 12 years; he then commenced the study of Latin and languages in New York City, and soon after went to the St. Charles College, Maryland, where he remained three years, finishing up his classical course in 1855; he then entered the mission society, and remained in this connection for about sixteen years; during this period, he completed his full course of study, while traveling extensively through the West, and elsewhere; during the war of 1861–65, was Chaplain of the "Irish Brigade," under "Mulligan" from Chicago, Ill., and still later became connected with the hospitals in Cumberland, Md.; in 1877, he came to Shelby, Ohio, from New York City, and being a man of fine education, and considerable executive ability, has done much toward establishing the Roman Catholic Church in this place; his energy and perseverance, with tact to accomplish, has enabled him, to not only overhaul the church, but to erect a residence on architectural plans, adapted to the best interest of the church, and the people at large.

LOOSE, NATHANIEL H., Rev. Pastor Reformed Church, Bellevue, Ohio; was born near Bloomfield, Perry Co., Penn., Sept. 5, 1834; he is the oldest son of Peter Loose and Ann Mary Rauch, now residing near Wyoming, Del. When about 4 years of age, he with his parents moved to near Greencastle, Penn., and in 1845, settled in Monroe Co., Mich,; in 1853, he entered Heidelberg College, Tiffin, Ohio and graduated in the scientific course in 1857: he was ordained to the ministry of the Reformed Church in 1858. He was married the same year, by Dr. M. Kieffer, to Miss Alma T. Kroh, of Tiffin; four sons were born to them, one of whom is dead. Ursinus K., the oldest, is now in the National Exchange Bank, Tiffin; Alvin and Clarence are attending school. Rev. Loose's first charge was at Sugar Grove, Fairfield Co., Ohio; continued there five years; settled at Shelby in 1863, and continued fourteen years. While at Shelby, he was for six years a member of the School-Board and its President during the erection of the high school building; he always entertained a lively interest in the institutions and people of the town and vicinity. In August, 1877, he took charge of St. Paul's Reformed Church, Bellevue, Ohio, where he is now living.

McQUOWN, DAVID A. (deceased); was born in Westmoreland Co., Penn., July 16, 1813; at an early age, his father removed with his family, to Belmont Co., Ohio, and from there to Richland County; some time between the years of 1820 and 1830; the exact date is not known. He was married to Mary Patterson, of Lexington, Ohio, Sept. 3, 1835, by Rev. Adam Torrence, at that time a Presbyterian minister living in Lexington; they had seven children—William, Leonidas, Margret Jane, Mary L., Thomas P., Andrew and Warren, all of whom are living, except William and Margaret Jane. Mr. McQuown was Justice of the Peace in and for Troy Township, for the period of twenty-one years, or seven terms; he was noted as the first Whig Justice of Troy Township; some of the brightest local talent of Central Ohio was often engaged in trying cases in his office, and such young lawyers as Hon. John Sherman, Samuel J. Kirkwood (now United States Senator from Iowa), Hon. Thomas W. Bartly (now residing in Washington, D. C.), Hon. George W. Geddes, Hon. James Stewart (afterward Judge Stewart), Barnabus Burns, and others. Mr. McQuown served several times as Mayor of the village of Lexington, and took a prominent part as a local Whig and Republican politician. After his removal to Michigan, he served several years as Justice of the Peace. He died in West Windsor, Eaton Co., Mich., Feb. 16, 1879.

NEWMAN, JACOB, dealer in marble and granite, La Grange, Ind. He was born in Richland Co., in 1832; at the age of 17 years, he moved with his parents to Williams Co., remaining there three years; at the end of that time, he returned to Mansfield and engaged as clerk in the store of E. & C. Hedges, until the following, spring, when he went to La Grange, where he now resides. In September, 1861, Mr. Newman enlisted in Co. H, 44th, Ind. V. I., and was elected Second Lieutenant; he commanded the company at Shiloh, April 6, 1862, where he was desperately wounded, being shot through the body, a wound that at first was considered certainly mortal, and one from which the surgeons declared not one man in a thousand could survive; he, however, recovered; Mr. N. was promoted Captain of the company (commission dating from the day of the battle), but his wound disabled him from further service, and he resigned Nov. 14, 1862, and returned home. In 1863, he was appointed Deputy Provost Marshal for La Grange County, of the Fourth District of Indiana, and as such had charge of the enrollment of the county. He was elected County Treasurer in 1864, and re-elected in 1866; since the expiration of the last term, he has been engaged in mercantile pursuits, and is now dealing in marble and granite.

SMITH, GEORGE H., Goodland, Benton Co., Ind. He was born in Jackson Township, Richland Co., Ohio, Feb. 22, 1844, remaining with his parents until 1861, when he enlisted in Company H, 64th O. V. I., better known as the Sherman Brigade, C. R. Lord commanding company; he participated in the following engagements: Shiloh, Corinth, Stone River, Perryville, Chickamauga, Mission Ridge, Resaca, and in the Atlanta campaign, until the 16th of June; while on the skirmish line in front of Kenesaw Mountain, he received a gunshot-wound in the left forearm, severing the main artery, which disabled him for the rest of the campaign; also was in the Army of the Cumberland; served under Gens. Grant, Thomas, Sherman, Sheridan and Rosecrans; the subject of this sketch veteranized in 1864, and was discharged Jan. 1; on his return home he rented his grandfather's farm, where he remained about four years and then went to Benton Co., Ind., and purchased 80 acres of land, on which he has made his home. Aug. 27, 1874, he married Miss M. E. Drake, of Jacken Township, taking his wife to Indiana; they have one child, Anna. Mr. Smith's grandfather, John Smith, emigrated to Ohio, from Pennsylvania, with his family in 1835, locating near where he now lives, with his son George Smith, Sr.; he is past the age of 90, and is the oldest man living in the township; he was married to Miss Susan Wise; they had eight children, four of whom are living. The father of the subject of this notice, has remained in Richland Co., since he came from Cumberland Co., Penn., where he was from October, 1820, except two years when he was at Cincinnati, Ohio. He married Miss A. Miller in 1842. Mr. Smith the subject of this sketch is a genial honest man, and has a reputation that cannot be excelled.
